PREFACE.

IN submitting the present work to the people of Erie county, the publisher takes satisfaction in the belief that he has fully complied with every promise that has been made to those who have honored him with their patronage. In the character of its reading matter, the fidelity to its purpose, the neatness of its typography and the general style in which it appears, it may reasonably be claimed to be at least the equal of any publication of similar nature that has ever been issued in Pennsylvania.

As announced in the prospectus, the work is designed as a Historical Reference Book and Biographical Dictionary, rather than as a detailed County History. The limit placed upon it from the beginning did not admit of the numerous incidents and illustrations that form an extended County History, and the aim, both of the writers and publisher, has been to present the leading events as briefly as the facts seemed to warrant, and to so arrange them that they could be conveniently found by the average reader. With this in view, the chapters have been made short and supplied with frequent sub-headings, reference has been noted in various parts of the book to other pages treating of the same subject, a copious Table of Contents has been given, and the whole has been supplemented with a full Alphabetical Index.

Attention is specially called to the Engravings, which must be conceded to be far in advance of the majority of art work in publications of the kind.

The Portraits of the Governors, the Biographies of the same, and the Political and other information relating to Pennsylvania, are features that will be appreciated by every citizen who has a patriotic interest in the state of his residence.

To those who are tempted to complain of the price and peculiar character of the book, it may be proper to explain that it would be impossible to print a creditable work of Local History at a lower figure or on a different basis without great loss to the publisher. Numerous historical publications have been issued, in Erie and elsewhere, relying upon the general public for support, and in every instance that can now be recalled they have been a sad financial failure, the sales in one or two home instances having been barely enough to pay for the white paper on which they were printed. Erie county has not yet reached the degree of wealth and population that will permit of the publication of a County History at the price of a book intended for state or national circulation, nor without some distinctive feature that will secure for it a special and remunerative patronage. The highest ambition of the writers and publisher of this book will be attained if it shall prove to be a useful preparatory effort to the complete edition of Local Annals that will come after the county has had many years of growth and its people have attained to a more wide-spread prosperity.

The Historical and Descriptive chapters of the book (pages 19 to 540) have been prepared by Benjamin Whitman, who has spent the main part of a year in collecting the material. He desires that credit shall be given for much of the information secured to Capt. N. W. Russell's newspaper contributions; Miss Sanford's History of Erie County; Warner, Beers & Co.'s History of the County, printed in 1881; Day's "Historical Collections"; Dr. Egle's History of Pennsylvania; The Archives of Pennsylvania; the Herald's "Souvenir of Erie," issued in 1888; Atkinson's Erie City Directory; the files of the several Erie journals; Hanlon's City Manual and Digest of City Laws and Ordinances, and various other sources "too numerous to mention."

The Biographical section owes much of its interest to the pen of Hon. James Sill, who contributed a number of the family and individual sketches.

The publisher returns thanks to the citizens of the county for the hearty support they have given to the enterprise, and begs leave to express the hope that they will receive the book with as much satisfaction as he remembers their kindness and liberality.

Historical, Descriptive and Statistical.

STATE CONSTITUTION ADOPTED IN 1873.

PENNSYLVANIA.

HISTORICAL, DESCRIPTIVE AND STATISTICAL.

BORIGINES.—The portion of America included in Pennsylvania was originally occupied by an Indian tribe who "called themselves the Lenni Lenape, or original people." They spoke a common language and assembled around the same council fire. They were united, by conquest, with the historical Six Nations, embracing the Onondagas, the Cayugas, the Oneidas, the Senecas, the Mohawks, and the Tuscaroras. These natives became known to the white settlers by the general name of the Iroquois, who had their great council fire in the Onondaga valley of New York. Of this confederacy, the Senecas held control of the northwestern portion of the State, embracing Erie and adjoining counties. The Eriez, or "Cat tribe," who were the original people along the south shore of Lake Erie, were exterminated about the year 1650 by the Iroquois, as is more fully detailed in the general history of Erie county. [For a full account of the Indians of this region see the latter history.]

Anthracite Coal.—Pennsylvania is the only part of the world where anthracite coal is produced in a large quantity. The anthracite coal production is limited to the northeastern portion of the State, and almost entirely to the counties of Luzerne, Schuylkill, Lackawanna, and Carbon, covering an area of about 480 square miles. This coal was first tested in what is now Luzerne county about 1768 or 1769. Previous to that the coal in use throughout the world was bituminous or semibituminous in character. Anthracite coal was experimented with, for local purposes, in a small way, in the counties where found, for a number of years, but was not received with favor by the general public until about 1820-

23, when it began to be shipped in considerable quantities, by means of the Lehigh and Schuylkill systems of navigation. In 1826 about 50,000 tons were received in Philadelphia, which was then the only port of shipment on salt water. Since then the production has increased to such an extent that anthracite coal is sent to every part of the world, and the mining and transportation of the same has become one of the great industries of the State. The amount carried by rail and canal in 1893 was 43,089,536 tons.

Area, etc.—The State is bounded on the north by Lake Erie and New York; on the east by New York and New Jersey; on the south by Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia; and on the west by West Virginia and Ohio. The Delaware river forms the boundary between Pennsylvania on the west and New York and New Jersey on the east. The greatest width of the State is 175 miles, and its greatest length 303. By official tables prepared at Harrisburg, the State is represented as embracing 45,080 square miles and 28,808,443 acres.

Battles.—Although founded by Quakers, who are opposed to war for any cause, the State has been the scene of some of the most bloody battles and frontier troubles in the history of America. Among these may be mentioned the struggle between the Eriez and Iroquois along the south shore of Lake Erie, hereafter described at length; the engagements between the French and English in the western part of the State, including Braddock's defeat near Pittsburg; the various skirmishes with the Indians, embracing the attacks on Forts LeBoeuf and Presque Isle; the Revolutionary battles of Paoli, Brandywine and Germantown; the massacre at Wyoming; the Confederate raid upon the Cumberland Valley, and the burning of Chambersburg; and the decisive battles of the war for the Union at Gettysburg. Perry's victory, on the 10th of September, 1813, which gave the United States control of the Great Lakes, was won by a fleet prepared and equipped at Erie.

Bituminous Coal.—The bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania lie west of the Susquehanna river, and include an area of more than 9,000 square miles. In the fifteen years from 1880 to 1895 they yielded a product of 470,867,769 gross tons. The officers of the State Geological Survey calculate that at the present rate of production the bituminous coal supply of Pennsylvania will last nearly a thousand years.

Braddock's Defeat.—The terrible defeat of Gen. Braddock, the English commander who was sent out to drive the French from the western part of the State, took place on the north bank of the Monongahela river, a few miles from the present site of Pittsburg, on the 9th of July, 1755. The French troops who effected this result came up Lake Erie from Canada, were assembled and organized at Erie (then known as Presque Isle), and moved south by way of LeBoeuf creek, French creek and the Allegheny river. [For an account of the French occupation of Western Pennsylvania, see the General History of Erie County.]

Buckshot War.—This is the derisive title given to a dispute between the Anti-Masons and the Whigs on the one hand, and the Democrats on the other, in 1838-9, over the organization of the State House of Representatives. Governor Ritner ordered out the State militia and appealed to the general government for aid, but, happily, the controversy was settled without bloodshed. [See the Political Record in General History of Erie County.]

Capital—State.—The capital of the State is Harrisburg, on the east bank of the Susquehanna river. Up to 1799 Philadelphia was the seat of the State government, but in the latter year it was removed to Lancaster. Harrisburg became the capital in 1812. The corner stone of the "State House," or Capitol building, at Harrisburg was laid in 1819, and the first meeting of the Legislature therein was held in 1822. The original buildings, which are still occupied, are of brick, plain, but very substantial in their nature. A handsome additional structure for executive and library purposes was erected in 1894.

Colleges.—[See Universities and Colleges.]

Churches.—[See Religious Denominations.]

Continental Congress.—The sessions of the Continental Congress within the limits of Pennsylvania were held as follows: In Philadelphia, September 5, 1774, to October 26, 1774, and May 10, 1775, to December 12, 1776; March 4, 1777, to September 18, 1777; Lancaster, September 27, 1777; York, September 30, 1777, to June 27, 1778; Philadelphia, July 2, 1778, to June 21, 1778.

Centennial Exhibition.—The Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, held in 1876, in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the independence of the United States, was the first great World's Fair in America, and one of the most successful known up to that date. It was liberally aided by Pennsylvania, and owed most of its success to the active and intelligent effort of citizens of Philadelphia and the State at large.

Climate.—The climate of the State is that of the Central temperate zone, with considerable variation between its northern and southern sections. As a rule, there is about two weeks difference between the extreme north and south. This, of course, is somewhat varied by the altitude of the several localities. The summers of the southern counties are very hot at times, while those of the south shore of Lake Erie are almost uniformly pleasant. The temperature of the latter region is greatly affected by the large body of water, so that spring sets in a week earlier than in the elevated sections to the east and south of the lake, while winter commences a week later. The same influence makes the lake shore portion of Erie county one of the best grape, fruit, berry and melon regions of the world.

Coat of Arms.—An authentic copy of the coat of arms of the State will be found on a preceding page of this book.

Congressmen.—[See Representatives in Congress of the United States.]

Congressional Districts.—Under the census of 1890 the State is entitled to thirty Congressmen, being only four less than New York, which at one time was much more ahead of Pennsylvania in population and representation. For want of proper apportionment, twenty-eight of these are elected by Congressional Districts and two by the State at large. Erie and Crawford counties constitute the 26th Congressional District. A list of the Congressmen who have represented Erie county will be found in the Political Record.

Constitutions.—The State has had three Constitutions since the Revolution, viz.: The first adopted in 1776; the second in 1790, and revised in 1838; and the third (being the one now in force, a copy of which is appended), adopted December 18, 1873. Under the old Constitutions, most of the State and county officers were appointed by the Governors; now, with rare exceptions, they are elected by the people, except for limited periods. Pennsylvania, always patriotic, was the second of the States to ratify the Federal Constitution, which was framed in her chief city in 1787. [See United States Constitution.]

Courts.—The judicial power is vested in a supreme court, consisting of seven judges, a superior court, of the same number, and the several county, district and minor courts. The Supreme judges are chosen by the people for twenty-one years, each one becoming Chief Justice in turn, according to the expiration of his term. The salary of each Supreme Judge is $8,000 a year, with $500 additional to the Chief Justice. The judges of the superior court hold office for ten years, and receive a salary, each, of $7,500 per annum. Each county with 40,000 inhabitants constitutes a separate judicial district. The salaries of the county judges vary from $4,000 to $7,000 a year, being largest in Philadelphia and Allegheny counties. Their term of office is ten years. All judicial salaries are paid out of the State treasury. [For a list of judges in Erie county see the general history of the county.]

Debt.—The extensive public improvements upon which the State embarked in its early history created a large debt, which was at one time a very heavy burden. By wise legislation this debt has been practically wiped out of existence. With assets on hand in the sinking fund, it was less than two and a half millions on the 30th of November, 1894. The figures below, from the U. S. census reports of 1890 give the entire debt of the State at that date:

Declaration of Independence.—The most important historical event that ever happened on Pennsylvania soil, and the greatest in the history of America, was the signing of the Declaration of Independence. This momentous incident took place in what is now known as Independence Hall, in Philadelphia, on the 4th of July, 1776. The building is preserved just as it was at the time of the Declaration, and contains numerous interesting relics of the Revolution. It is generally regarded as the most sacred place in American history. The old bell, which rang out "Liberty through the land," is kept in the building, and is an object of great curiosity. The signers of the Declaration from Pennsylvania were as follows:

Early Settlements.—The first settlement of Pennsylvania is generally credited to the Swedes, who located on the Delaware river in 1638. They established several forts and villages on that stream and its tributaries, and gave name to various localities in the extreme southeastern portion of the State. Delaware river and bay had been previously visited, however, by the Dutch, who established themselves at various points south of Philadelphia, within the present limits of the State of Delaware. It is not certain that they may not have settled in Pennsylvania in advance of the Swedes, but if such is the case no authentic record remains. The Delaware region was conquered by the English in 1664, recovered by the Dutch in 1672, and returned to the English two years later. Beginning at the latter period, it was settled rapidly under English auspices, principally by Quakers, who came to enjoy religious freedom. On the acquirement of Pennsylvania by William Penn, in 1681, he took prompt steps to induce emigration. The liberal laws and government he instituted attracted the notice of those who objected to the established churches of Europe, and it was not long until there was a large influx of Quakers, Welsh dissenters, and Presbyterians from Scotland and the north of Ireland. An extensive colony of Mennonists, or German Baptists, and Dunkards, came in during the period between 1698 and 1790, and these were joined about the latter date by a host of German Lutherans, who continued to arrive for a number of years. The Germans settled on the rich lands of the southeastern counties, while the Scotch-Irish gradually pushed forward into the western districts, each nationality giving character to the sections in which it located. The German emigration ceased about 1750 or '60, and did not revive until after the Revolution. Few Catholic Irish or Germans settled in the State until a comparatively modern date. As long as the crown of England held control the English and Scotch-Irish element dominated, but some years after Independence the Germans rose into political power, and, for a long period, elected most of the public officers, and gave tone to State legislation.

Eminent Men.—Among the eminent men who have been connected with the history of Pennsylvania were: William Penn, the founder; Benjamin Franklin, the greatest "all-round man" the American nation has produced; Anthony Wayne, the Revolutionary hero; Stephen Girard, the millionaire and philanthropist; Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution; Chief Justice Gibson, the profound jurist; John Fitch, the inventor of the steamboat, and Robert Fulton, who brought the idea into prominence before the public; Benjamin West, P. F. Rothermel and Thomas Hovenden, the famous painters; Lindley Murray, the grammarian; David Rittenhouse, the mathematician; David Wilmot, the anti-slavery agitator; Simon Cameron, the shrewd politician; William Strong and Jeremiah S. Black, the distinguished lawyers; Thaddeus Stevens, "the great commoner;" Edwin M. Stanton, the "organizer of victory" in the late war; Stephen Decatur and David D. Porter, the brilliant naval officers; Generals McClellan, Meade, Hancock, Reynolds, Geary and Hartranft, leaders in the war for the Union; Geo. W. Childs and Andrew Carnegie, the liberal givers; and many others, second only to these in reputation, whose names appear on other pages of this book.

Elections.—The city, ward, borough and township elections are held on the third Tuesday of February, and the general elections for State and county officers on the Tuesday next following the first Monday of November.

Executive Officers.—The principal executive officers are: Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth (appointed), Attorney General (appointed), Auditor General, State Treasurer, Secretary of Internal Affairs and Superintendent of Public Instruction (the latter appointed), Adjutant General (appointed), Insurance Commissioner (appointed), Superintendent of Banking (appointed), State Librarian (appointed), Factory Inspector (appointed), and Superintendent of Public Printing (appointed). These officers are assisted by numerous deputies and chiefs of departments, and there are a great variety of boards, commissions and minor positions, making a list too long for publication here.

Founder of the State.—The State was founded by William Penn, who acquired it by gift from King Charles II of England, in liquidation of claims held by his father, a distinguished admiral, against the crown of that country. The charter from the King was dated March 4, 1681, and is still in good preservation at Harrisburg. By the King's order, and against Penn's protest, the province was named Pennsylvania (meaning Penn's woods or forest) in honor of the distinguished services of his father. On securing possession of his territory, Penn drew up "a form of government and a code of laws, all bearing the stamp of his benevolent mind." His prevailing purpose was to establish a commonwealth that should be devoted to peace, good morals, general education and religious freedom. His course of action was so different from that of other colonial founders, and his dealing with the Indians was so just and humane, that his name is illustrious as that of one of the wisest and greatest of men. Penn's first visit to the province was on the 27th of October, 1682. He returned to England in 1684, and made a second visit in 1699, remaining some two years. By religion he was a Quaker, and he made many sacrifices and suffered severe persecution in behalf of personal and religious liberty. He was born in London October 14, 1644, and died of paralysis at Rushcombe, England, July 30, 1718. "His enduring monument is the great State founded by him 'in deeds of peace.'"

First Things.—The first stone turnpike in the United States was built between Philadelphia and Lancaster, by a private company, in 1792-4. The first canal of any considerable length within the limits of the Union was begun in 1792, with the intention of constructing a water way between the Delaware at Philadelphia and Lake Erie, at or near Erie. The first line of coaches between Philadelphia and Pittsburg was started in August, 1804, via Harrisburg, Carlisle, Bedford and Greensburg, the time from one terminus to the other occupying seven days. The first carriage in the world moved by steam on common roads was built by Oliver Evans and successfully operated at Philadelphia in July, 1807. The first railroad in America was built at a stone quarry in Ridley township, Delaware county, in 1808. The railroad from Philadelphia to Columbia was opened for travel in October, 1834 (being part of the State improvement system), and the first boat on the main line of the State canal between the latter place and Pittsburg reached the Ohio in the same month. The Pennsylvania railroad, the first great line of the kind in the State, and one of the earliest through systems in the country, was completed to Pittsburg in 1854. The first really successful steamboat was built by Robert Fulton, a Pennsylvanian, though the idea of propelling boats by steam had previously been patented by John Fitch, another citizen of the State, who made some experiments on the Delaware which foreshadowed the future usefulness of his scheme.

Flag of the United States.—The National Flag, which was designed by a Philadelphia lady, Mrs. Betsey Ross, was adopted by the Continental Congress, sitting in that city, on the 14th of June, 1777. The resolution to that effect was as follows: "That the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation." Describing the flag, Charles Sumner said: "The stripes of alternate red and white on the United States flag proclaim the original union of thirteen States to maintain the Declaration of Independence. Its stars, white on a field of blue, proclaim that union of States constituting our national constellation, which receives a new star with every new State. The two together signify union, past and present. The very colors have a language which was officially recognized by our fathers. White is for purity; red for valor; blue for justice." In commemoration of the adoption of the national emblem, the 14th of June in each year has been set apart as "Flag Day," and is generally observed, more especially by the schools. By a later act of Congress to the one above mentioned, a star is added upon the admission of every new State.

French War.—As is more fully detailed in the general history of Erie county, the French at one time claimed all the country from the headwaters of the Allegheny river, down the Ohio, to the mouth of the Mississippi. Their claim was disputed by the English. The French made their base of operations at Erie (formerly known as Presque Isle), and established a chain of forts from there southward, among other points, at Waterford (LeBoeuf), Franklin (Venango), and Pittsburg (Duquesne). Early in 1753, George Washington, then a young man, was sent to LeBoeuf to inquire into the purpose of the French. Receiving an evasive answer, he returned to Virginia, and headed a force to drive the French out of the country. The latter pushed forward a thousand men from Erie to Pittsburg, and forced Washington, with a small detachment, to capitulate. Braddock's expedition, in behalf of the English and English colonists, was organized in 1758, with Washington as an aid-de-camp to the commander-in-chief. It consisted largely of British regulars, added to a considerable body of Colonial troops from Pennsylvania, Virginia and Maryland. The French and their Indian allies waited in ambush at a point on the Monongahela river, ten miles from Pittsburg, where they surprised Braddock and effected one of the most complete routs in history. A second army was organized in 1758 by the English, assisted by the Colonies, who marched to attack Fort Duquesne. The French, on learning of the superior force of their foes, abandoned the fort, which was promptly christened Fort Pitt, in honor of the great English premier. Soon after the French disappeared from the western part of the State, and, by a treaty of peace in 1762, relinquished all claim to the country. By the same treaty Canada became a British province.

Fruits.—Every variety known to the north temperate zone grows in profusion, especially apples, pears, peaches, cherries, plums, prunes, quinces, grapes, and apricots.

Floods (Great.)—Some of the most destructive floods ever known have occurred in Pennsylvania. Scarcely a year passes that much damage is not done along the rivers and creeks of the State, due mainly to the cutting off of the timber. The most terrible calamity that ever happened in Pennsylvania took place on May 31, 1889. Heavy rains had occurred all over the State, filling every stream to excess. A large dam on the South Fork of the Conemaugh river burst suddenly, letting out an immense volume of water that swept everything before it. The flourishing towns of Johnstown and Conemaugh were practically wiped out of existence. It is estimated that from 3,500 to 4,000 persons lost their lives, and that the flood caused the destruction of $75,000,000 worth of property. The sympathy of the whole country was aroused in behalf of the surviving population, and donations of money, clothing, etc., were sent in to an unprecedented amount, the total cash contributions alone being $3,746,819. The same unusual period of rains caused great mischief along the valleys of the Juniata and the West Branch, especially at Williamsport and Lock Haven, in the latter region, but the disasters at those points were almost lost sight of in view of the overwhelming calamity at Johnstown. It is characteristic of the American people that the citizens of the latter place set to work immediately to retrieve their misfortune, and to-day Johnstown is larger and more prosperous than before the disaster. Another memorable flood took place on Oil Creek June 5, 1892, caused, as before, by the breaking of a dam. It did vast damage at Titusville and Oil City, and led to much loss of life. The floods of 1892 extended all over the northwestern part of the State, and were particularly disastrous at Union City, in Erie county, and Irvineton, in Warren county. An account of this and other serious floods in Erie county will be found in the ensuing chapters.

Fish and Fisheries.—The fisheries of the State are quite extensive, being most productive in the Delaware, near Philadelphia; in the Susquehanna, below Columbia, and in Lake Erie at Erie city. Shad are caught in great numbers in the rivers named, and white fish, pike, sturgeon, bass, perch, herring and other fish in Lake Erie. The rivers and creeks were once well stocked with a large variety of fish, but they have decreased in consequence of the dams and the filth poured into the streams by the cities, towns, mines and factories. Brook trout, once plentiful, are now only found to any extent in the mountain streams. The State has established several fish hatcheries, and the Fish Commission are making a strong effort to restock the lakes and streams. The following statistics, from the censuses of 1880 and 1890, show the extent to which fishing is carried on in a commercial way:

	PERSONS EMPLOYED.	CAPITAL INVESTED.	VALUE OF PRODUCT.
1890.....	2,631	735,035	903,005

Franklin, Benjamin.—The most illustrious person in Pennsylvania history was born in Boston in 1705, and died in Philadelphia, after residing there most of his life, and filling almost every important position in the gift of his State and country, on the 17th of April, 1790, aged about 83 years. He was buried by the side of his wife in the cemetery of Christ Church, Philadelphia, at the southeast corner of Fifth and Arch streets, where the slab that covers his remains is open to the public view, through an iron railing, on the line of the public walk. The following epitaph was written by Franklin when he was only twenty-two years old:

Governors and Lieutenant-Governors.

—Under the original system the Governors were appointed by William Penn and his family, who also named the legislative council. William Penn himself acted as Governor for some six years. The last proprietary Governor was John Penn, a grandson of the founder—who was deposed in 1776, together with all officers of the royal government. During the Revolution, and up to the adoption of the Constitution of 1790, the presidents of the Supreme Executive Council acted as Governors. Among the most famous of these were John Dickinson, Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Mifflin. The Governors and Lieutenant-Governors have been as follows [See sketches of Governors on other pages]:

Gettysburg.—The most decisive and among the most desperate series of battles in the war for the Union took place on Pennsylvania soil, at Gettysburg, in Adams county, near the Maryland line. A brief account of the three-days' series of fights at that point will be found under the heading, "War for the Union." The battlefield is now largely occupied as a national cemetery and public park, and is covered with splendid memorial stones, marking all the important positions, and making it one of the most interesting spots in the world. Gettysburg is easily reached by rail from Harrisburg, York and Baltimore. It was at the dedication of the monument to the Union dead, in the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, on the 19th of November, 1864, that Lincoln delivered the address which ranks as one of the classics of American oratory, reading as follows:

"Fourscore and seven years ago, our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation, so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We are met to dedicate a portion of it as the final resting place of those who here gave their lives that this nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.

"It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work that they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that the dead shall not have died in vain; that the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Holidays.—The following are the legal holidays and half-holidays in the State. According to law, all notes due on any holiday or half-holiday are payable and protestable on the next secular business day:

January 1st—New Year's Day.

Third Tuesday of February (municipal election). After 12 o'clock noon.

February 22d—Washington's Birthday.

Good Friday.

May 30th—Decoration Day.

July 4th—Independence Day.

First Saturday in September—Labor Day.

First Tuesday after the first Monday in November—General election.

Thanksgiving Day (by appointment of the Governor).

December 25th—Christmas.

Every Saturday after 12 o'clock noon.

Indian Titles.—Under the peaceful policy adopted by William Penn all Indian claims to the lands of the State were extinguished by treaty and purchase. The release of the Triangle portion of Erie county was secured from the Six Nations in November, 1784, and confirmed in 1789. The lands south of the Triangle, in the northwestern part of the State, were sold by the Indians in 1784, and relinquished by all the tribes who claimed an interest, in 1785. [See General History of Erie County.]

Iron and Iron Ore.—Extensive bodies of iron ore exist in various sections, which are largely used in the furnaces of the State. One of the most valuable deposits of iron ore in the world is in Cornwall, Lebanon county, which is generally spoken of as inexhaustible, and which is worth many millions of dollars. The ore consists of one vast mass, and is dug as gravel or clay would be in most places. It is one of the richest deposits of mineral in the entire world, and probably the easiest of access. Deposits of iron ore are found in many parts of the State, but none are equal in extent to the one mentioned above. Generally speaking, the ore, coal and limestone lie conveniently near to each other, making Pennsylvania one of the great iron-producing portions of the world.

Indian Wars and Disturbances.—While Penn lived and his policy was adhered to, the Indians gave the white settlers little trouble. As the conflict between the French and English developed, they showed a decided favor, however, for the former, who seem to have been the more skillful in courting their friendship. They took an active part with the French in their efforts to circumvent the English, and were present in large numbers at the defeat of Braddock. This latter event encouraged them in the hope of driving the English out of the country, and was succeeded by numerous Indian murders and outrages. The departure of the French left them still hostile, but apparently submissive. Pontiac, the celebrated Indian chief, conceived the idea of striking a sudden and simultaneous blow that should wipe the English, and the colonists under them, out of existence, west of the Alleghenies. To this end he, in 1763, enlisted a considerable body of the natives, who were to make a concerted attack upon all the English posts from the Allegheny mountains westward. The forts at Erie, Waterford and Franklin were captured, but the attempt on the one at Pittsburg and elsewhere in the southern counties proved a failure. This desperate venture, known in history as "Pontiac's Conspiracy," was succeeded by frequent skirmishes with the savages and the loss of many lives, both white and Indian. The white people, roused by a spirit of retaliation, inflicted severe damage upon the Indians, and it is a question to the person who studies the events of the times, which side was most cruel. The Indians became overawed, sued for peace in 1764, and remained comparatively quiet for some years. They looked upon the white colonists, though, as their natural foes, and, when the Revolution opened, transferred their allegiance from the French to the British, whom they were led to believe would restore them to their former rights and possessions. Early in 1778, a body of Indians joined with some Tories and British regulars, descended the North Branch and destroyed the flourishing settlements in the Wyoming Valley. The barbarity shown in this raid has gone into history as the "Wyoming Massacre." The colonists quickly organized expeditions in retribution of their injuries which destroyed the Indian villages along the Upper Susquehanna and Allegheny rivers. By 1783 most of the hostile Indians had been driven into "the wilds of Ohio." They continued troublesome for a number of years, during which it was unsafe for white men to locate in the northern or northwestern counties. Several expeditions were sent against them, but they were not finally subdued until Wayne took command, and by his energy and courage compelled them to accept terms of peace. The treaty by which this was effected was made at Greenville, Ohio, on the 3d of August, 1795. From this date there were no serious Indian disturbances in the part of the Union embraced within western and northwestern Pennsylvania, and the country was rapidly opened to settlement. [For an account of the Indians of the northwest, and a sketch of General Wayne, see the General History of Erie County.]

Johnstown Flood.—[See Floods.]

Judiciary System.—[See Courts.]

Keystone State.—The name, Keystone State, as usually applied to Pennsylvania, arose from the fact that it was the central one of the thirteen colonies that revolted against Great Britain. The colonies on the north were New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Hampshire (6); on the south, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia (6). As far as known, the term was first applied in an address issued by the Democratic or Democratic-Republican committee in 1808.

Leading Products.—The leading products of the State, aside from manufactures, are as follows:

MINERALS.—Anthracite coal, bituminous coal, semi-bituminous coal, petroleum, iron ore, natural gas and nickel.

VEGETABLE PRODUCTIONS.—Everything that is produced in the temperate zone, including vast quantities of tobacco in the eastern counties.

STONE.—Slate, marble, sandstone, limestone, greenstone, and a variety of the most valuable building stones.

TIMBER.—Pine, hemlock, chestnut, walnut, oak, ash, beech, maple, cherry, cucumber, etc.

FRUITS, ETC.—Peaches, pears, apples, grapes, cherries, quinces, plums, apricots, prunes; in fact, all the varieties that grow in the north. The south shore of Lake Erie, in Erie county, has become one of the finest grape and wine regions in the world.

NUTS.—Walnuts, chestnuts, beech nuts, hickory nuts, hazel nuts, butternuts, etc.

FISH.—Shad, white fish, salmon, trout, perch, pike, eel, herring, muscalonge, black, yellow and white bass, sturgeon, sunfish, etc. Vast fisheries are carried on upon the Susquehanna and Delaware rivers, and on Lake Erie at the city of Erie and in its vicinity.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS.—Cattle, horses, sheep, hogs, mules, and all the animals that thrive in the temperate zone are produced in great numbers.

GRAINS.—All kinds of grain that grow in the United States are cultivated in Pennsylvania. The State is one of the most prolific grain-growing sections of America. In fact, Pennsylvania may be said, without boasting, to be one of the choicest spots of the earth. Every kind of mineral useful to man is natural to the State except the precious metals, and, as a fruit, grain-growing, agricultural, vegetable and timber-producing State, it is unsurpassed. Natural gas is found in vast quantities west of the Alleghenies, and many cities and towns are heated by this useful natural product. The State contains some fine mineral springs, chief of which are those at Bedford, Cresson, Minnequa, Cambridge and Saegertown.

Legislature.—The Legislature consists of 50 Senators, elected for four years, and 204 Representatives, elected for two years. The pay of each Senator and Representative is $1,500, and mileage both ways, for each regular session. The Legislature meets every two years, unless called in extra session by the Governor, when additional pay and mileage are allowed to the members.

Legislation.—All legislation is closely restricted by the Constitution.

Language.—The language of the people is generally English, but there is a large population, mainly in the southeastern counties, who use what is known as "Pennsylvania Dutch," being a mixture of English and German, due to the early emigration heretofore referred to. Up to 1840 or thereabouts, this portion of the population was strong enough to compel the laws and official papers to be printed in the German language. They also dominated the politics of the State for a number of years.

Lakes.—The largest lake is Lake Erie, which forms the northwestern border. The next largest is Conneaut lake, in Crawford county, which has become a popular summer resort. There are a number of small lakes, chiefly in the northern counties.

Liberty Bell.—The old Liberty Bell, perhaps the most precious historical relic in America, is carefully preserved in Independence Hall, Philadelphia.

Libraries, Art Galleries and Museums.—The State contains a number of valuable public libraries, art galleries and museums. Chief among these are the ones in Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Allegheny, and the State library at Harrisburg. The Carnegie library buildings in Pittsburg and Allegheny are among the costliest and finest for the purpose in the world. The State completed a splendid building at Harrisburg in 1894 for the storage of its library, which comprises thousands of valuable volumes.

Military System.—The Governor is the head of the military system, and the next officer in command is the Adjutant General, who is appointed by the former, and constitutes one of his cabinet officers. The organization is purely voluntary, and is recognized as one of the best in the Union. Almost every town of any size has a military company, and there are from two to a dozen or more in the cities, according to their size. Every member of an active military organization is sworn in for three years, and is obliged to render duty when called upon by his superior officers. The military force consists of three brigades, commanded by one major general and three brigadier generals. The brigades are divided into regiments and companies, and are known as the National Guard of Pennsylvania. An encampment, the cost of which is paid by the State, is held annually at some convenient point, for the purpose of drill and general manœuvres. Each company is critically examined by chosen officers once each year, and the system is regarded as one of the best peace protections of the State. Under the Constitution, every citizen between eighteen and forty-five years of age is liable to be called upon for defence of the State, but the Legislature is authorized to exempt by law those who have conscientious scruples against bearing arms.

Manufactures.—The State is one of the greatest manufacturing sections of the Union, being only excelled by New York, which has an advantage in its large cities. The most important iron and steel works in America are located in Pennsylvania, and the State is hardly equalled in her carpet and silk factories. The census reports of the United States furnish the statistics below given:

	EMPLOYES.	WAGES.	VALUE OF PRODUCTS.
1890.....	620,562	305,591,033	1,331,794,901

Motto.—The motto of the State is "Virtue, Liberty and Independence" which forms a part of the coat of arms, elsewhere shown.

Mineral Products.—The principal mineral products, in tons, are given as follows in the U. S. census reports:

Iron ore.....	1,951,496	1,560,234
Coal.....	47,065,982	81,719,059

Total value of the mineral products of Pennsylvania in 1889, $150,876,619.

Mason and Dixon's Line.—This once famous line, being the division between the free and slave States of the Union, was the boundary between Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. It was run during the years 1763-7 by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, of England, to settle disputes between the colonies above-named as to their proper boundaries, and has ever since been agreed to.

Northwestern Pennsylvania.—The counties generally known as Northwestern Pennsylvania are as follows, with their population and area:

	POPULATION.	AREA.	ACRES.
	1890.	SQ. MILES.
Cameron.....	7,238	381	243,840

Venango.....	46,640	658	421,120
Warren.....	37,585	914	584,960

Name.—The origin of the name Pennsylvania, meaning "Penn's woods" or "forest," has been given in the paragraph relating to the founder of the State.

Natural Gas.—Is found in large quantities in the western part of the State, and is extensively used for cooking, heating and manufacturing purposes. [See Petroleum.]

Newspapers.—The newspapers of the State are some 1200 in number, of which a considerable proportion are dailies. There is a large variety of periodicals, trade issues and religious publications. The daily newspapers of Philadelphia and Pittsburg are not surpassed in any part of the country, and, for the price, have no superiors. Northwestern Pennsylvania has some of the best papers, considering their limited patronage, to be found in any part of the world.

Oil.—(Natural).—[See Petroleum.]

Proprietary Government.—As before stated, the colony was ruled by Governors sent out from England, and named by the proprietors, until the era of the Revolution. The royal and proprietary government was overturned in 1776, since which date the people have selected in the main their own public officers. In changing the government, care was taken not to disturb the personal and landed rights of the citizens, and all laws remained in force that were not inconsistent with the independence of the State.

Population.—State.—The population of the State, under the several censuses taken since the Revolution has been as follows. For comparison the census of the United States is given at each period:

	PENNSYLVANIA.	UNITED STATES.

Penn. William.—[See Founder.]

Presidents of the United States.—Pennsylvania has furnished three Presidents of the United States, viz.: Thomas Mifflin and Arthur St. Clair, previous to the adoption of the National Constitution, and James Buchanan since. The latter was elected in 1850, and held office from March 4, 1857, to March 4, 1861. He was born in Franklin county in 1791, and died at Wheatland, Lancaster county, where he made his home from early life, in 1868. In addition to the above-named gentlemen, the State has given birth to four unsuccessful nominees for the Presidency, as follows: George B. McClellan (Dem.), in 1864; James Black (Prohibition), in 1872;

Winfield S. Hancock (Dem.), in 1880; and James G. Blaine (Rep.), in 1884.

Presidential Electors.—Under the census of 1890 Pennsylvania is entitled to 32 Presidential electors, being only 4 less than New York, the largest State in the Union.

Political History.—Except that it favored Harrison in 1840, and Taylor in 1848, the vote of the State was uniformly in favor of the Democratic Presidential nominees from 1796 to 1860, when it voted for Lincoln, and since then has regularly given its support to the Republican Presidential ticket. On local questions it sometimes elects Democratic nominees for State office, and has twice since 1860 chosen a Democratic Governor, viz.: Robert E. Pattison, in 1882 and 1890. [For a list of the several State candidates, with their votes, see the Political Record in the General History of Erie County.]

Public Receipts and Expenditures.—The U. S. census report gives the following as the public receipts and expenditures of the State and its several sub-divisions in 1890:

	RECEIPTS.	EXPENDITURES.
State	$ 7,831,037	$ 5,212,128
Counties	5,794,558	6,474,703
Municipalities (over 4,000 population)	22,540,318	17,790,461
Schools, etc.	13,514,000	12,828,645
Additional (estimated).		2,975,000

The receipts of the State alone for the year ending May, 1895, were $12,873,786, and the expenses $13,622,769. Notwithstanding this apparent discrepancy, there was a balance in the treasury at the close of the year of over $5,000,000, due to an excess from former fiscal periods.

Prisoners.—The prisoners in the penitentiaries and jails of the State were, in 1890, as follows: Whites, born of native parents, 2,009; one or both parents foreign, 1,757; foreign-born, 1,747; parentage unknown, 213; nativity unknown, 23. Other colors: negroes, mostly native-born, 738; Chinese, 2.

Paupers.—The paupers in the several almshouses were, in 1890, as follows: Whites, born of native parents, 1,327; one or both parents foreign, 320; foreign born, 2,539; parentage unknown, 650; nativity unknown, 70. Other colors: negroes, 201; Chinese, 1.

Physical Features.—The State is crossed from south to north, or rather northeast, by two great mountain chains, the Alleghenies and the Blue Ridge or Kittatinny range.

JOSEPA HIESTER.

JOHN A. SCHULTZE.

GEORGE WOLF.

JOSEPA RITNER.

These, with their spurs and foot-hills, cover fully one-third of its territory. The mountains attain an elevation of 1,000 to 2,700 feet; the highest point where they are crossed by railroads being a little west of Altoona, on the main line of the Pennsylvania road, and at Kane, on the Philadelphia and Erie line. Southeast of the Blue Ridge is the famous limestone, slate and sandstone region of the State, one of the most beautiful and fertile sections in existence. Enclosed by the mountains are numerous valleys that are unsurpassed for beauty and fertility. The bituminous coal fields are, in general, on the western slope of the Alleghenies, while the anthracite mines are limited to the eastern side, along and between the Susquehanna, Schuylkill and Lehigh rivers. The mountains and hills give rise to numerous streams, which flow into the great rivers of the State, and render it one of the best watered sections of the earth. In the western portion of the State the elevations do not equal those of the east and center in height, and the country is much broken by moderate-sized hills and ridges, interspersed with frequent valleys. Leaving out the steep mountain chains in the central part of the State, nearly every foot of ground is susceptible of cultivation. The State, as a whole, considering its area, is perhaps the richest section of the world in point of natural, agricultural and mineral productions.

Perry's Victory.—[For a full account of Perry's victory upon Lake Erie, September 10, 1813, and the incidents preceding and subsequent to the same, see General History of Erie County.]

Petroleum.—Although petroleum, or natural oil, is found in many parts of the world, Pennsylvania still remains the great producing section. Natural oil and gas have been known from a very early period, but were long regarded as curiosities rather than as articles for the benefit of mankind. The earliest French writers refer to them as existing in the western part of Pennsylvania, along the Allegheny river and some of its tributaries. The oil was at one time gathered as a medicine, and the gas was treated as a natural wonder. For a long period nearly all the developments in this direction were along Oil creek, from above Titusville to its mouth at Oil City. Col. E. L. Drake first conceived the idea of securing the natural oil on a large scale as a commercial commodity. He drilled a well near Titusville, in 1859, and struck a flow of oil which started others to follow his example. A wild speculation ensued; oil was found in immense quantities, and hundreds of men made and lost fortunes. Beginning at the original center on Oil creek, oil has been obtained for commercial purposes along the western slopes of the Alleghenies in every county through which they extend, and has become one of the most valuable and widely distributed products of the United States. Natural gas is invariably found in connection with the oil, and, at some points, prevails in quantities that make it scarcely second in value to the latter production. Erie, Warren, Franklin, Titusville, Corry, Pittsburg, Allegheny and a number of the cities and towns in the western part of the State are largely heated and illuminated by natural gas.

Public Improvements.—Pennsylvania was one of the first States in the Union to enter upon a general system of public improvements. Railroads being almost unknown until half a century ago, the enterprise of the State was directed mainly to the building of canals, which were the great highways of the age. A scheme to connect Lake Erie with the Delaware river was projected as long ago as 1762. In 1824 the State started a gigantic plan of internal improvements, which included canals along the Delaware, the Susquehanna, the Juniata, the Conemaugh, the Beaver and the Shenango, the object being to connect every important part of the State with Philadelphia and Pittsburg. The main line between Pittsburg and Philadelphia, consisting mainly of canal, but partly of a system of railroads and portages, was completed in 1831. Unfortunately, about the time the canal system was well under way, it was discovered that railroads were bound to supersede water transportation; and the State, after incurring a huge debt in making its improvements, was glad to dispose of them at a low price. The main line, above spoken of, was sold in June, 1857, and the branches have been transferred from time to time until the State is no longer owner of any canal or railroad property. The proceeds of the sales and transfers have been so managed that the debt incurred for public improvements has been practically extinguished.

Public Buildings.—Aside from the capitol buildings at Harrisburg, the main public institutions owned or supported in whole or in part by the State are as follows:

NORMAL SCHOOLS.

At West Chester, Millersville, Kutztown, Edinboro, East Stroudsburg, Mansfield, Shipensburg, Bloomsburg, Lock Haven, Indiana, California, Slippery Rock and Clarion. Some of these are owned by private corporations, but nearly all have been built with money supplied by the State, and all are under its supervision.

PENITENTIARIES.

Eastern at Philadelphia, and Western at Allegheny. The latter is used as a place of punishment for desperate and confirmed criminals from Erie and the western and north-western counties generally.

REFORMATORIES.

Industrial at Huntingdon and Reform School at Morganza. Criminals who are thought to be reclaimable are sent to both institutions from every part of the State.

INSANE ASYLUMS.

At Harrisburg, Dixmont, Norristown, Danville and Warren. The latter is the one where the unfortunate from Erie county are mainly cared for. The Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane at Philadelphia (better known as Kirkbride's) is conducted under private auspices.

Philadelphia.—The largest city in Pennsylvania, and its commercial metropolis, is situated at the junction of the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers. It had a population of over a million in 1890, and is one of the great cities of the world. The city ranks second of the manufacturing places in America, and has an extensive foreign and domestic commerce. The Delaware river is navigable for the largest vessels to Philadelphia, and the city has become the most important ship-building point on the western continent. Historically, Philadelphia is, perhaps, the most interesting place in the United States. The city was laid out by William Penn in 1682. It was in Philadelphia that the Declaration of Independence was adopted, July 4th, 1776, and that the Constitution of the United States was framed in 1787. The city was the seat of the United States Government for a number of years after the adoption of the Constitution. Though Washington was inaugurated first President in New York, he lived and performed his official duties during most of his eight-years' term in Philadelphia. The city contains an unusual number of handsome and interesting buildings, chief of which are Independence Hall, the U. S. Mint, the city hall (grandest of all edifices for the purpose in America), the Masonic and Odd Fellows "Temples," and the Pennsylvania and Reading railroad stations. No other city in the Union surpasses Philadelphia in the number of its public libraries, art galleries and places of entertainment. Fairmount Park, the great pleasure ground of the city, has few rivals and no superiors.

Pittsburg.—The second city in Pennsylvania, is situated at the junction of the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers, where they form the Ohio. With its sister city of Allegheny, and the suburbs belonging to both, Pittsburg had a population of over 300,000 in 1890, making it the eighth in rank of the great cities of the Union. A movement is in progress to consolidate the entire population directly tributary to Pittsburg into one city, which, it is to be hoped, will be successful. As a manufacturing and shipping point, Pittsburg is hardly surpassed in any portion of the world. It excels in the making of iron, steel and glass; but almost every other kind of manufacture is to be found within its limits. The city is surrounded by the richest coal district in America, and more coal is shipped down the Ohio and by the various railroads than from any other point. While the business and manufacturing portion is smoky and uninviting, the suburban districts are remarkable for their beautiful parks, streets and residences. Pittsburg was named after William Pitt, the celebrated English statesman. Historically it is famous as the site of the French Fort Duquesne, and as the place where the first national convention of the Republican party was held, and Fremont nominated for President, in 1856.

Royal Government.—The government established by Penn and perpetuated under royal control was overthrown in 1776, and, from that time on, the people have managed their own affairs (except when checked and humbugged by the politicians!).

Railroads.—The railroads of Pennsylvania are among the most important in the whole country. The system owned and controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is not excelled in the world; and the Reading and Lehigh Valley systems are only second in extent, value and usefulness. According to Cram's Atlas for 1894, Pennsylvania stood second in the number of miles of railroads in use of all the States in the Union, Illinois alone exceeding her. Of the 9,027 miles of railroad in the State at that date, the system of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company embraced fully one-half, and two-thirds of the balance were owned or controlled by the Reading and Lehigh Valley systems.

The following statistics from the reports of the Internal Revenue Department for 1894 show the vast railroad interests of the State:

Capital	$1,927,222,235
Wages paid to employes	99,683,991
Employes	176,228

Revenue and Expenses.—[See Public Receipts, etc.]

Revolution—American.—It is to the lasting honor of Pennsylvania that she was not only one of the first of the American colonies to protest against the wrongs of the mother country, but one of the most patriotic in defence of liberty and independence. Much of this was due to the influence of Benjamin Franklin, who was one of the greatest men, if not the very greatest man, America has produced. The first Continental Congress met in Philadelphia in 1774; Washington was elected commander-in-chief at the same city in 1775; the Declaration of Independence was adopted there in 1776, and the National Flag in 1777. Pennsylvania's chief city was the seat of the Colonial government during the entire period of the Revolution, except when it was compelled by military necessity to move to Lancaster and York for brief seasons. The earliest troops to march to the defence of Boston from south of the Hudson were from Pennsylvania, and the Pennsylvania troops were known as "The First Regiment of the Army of the United Colonies, commanded by Gen. George Washington." The victories of Washington at Trenton and Princeton, in 1776, were chiefly secured by Pennsylvania troops. During 1777 occurred on Pennsylvania soil the battles of Brandywine and Germantown, and the "massacre of Paoli," all in September of that year. A number of minor engagements took place about the same time. The British entered Philadelphia in September, 1777, and evacuated it in June, 1778. During the winter of 1777-78, the American army was encamped at Valley Forge, on the Schuylkill river above Philadelphia, where they endured hardships that are almost beyond description. When the British left Philadelphia they were followed by Washington across New Jersey, his army consisting of Pennsylvania troops mainly, with whom he won the famous victory of Monmouth. Peace with Great Britain came in the winter of 1782-3. The Revolution was largely won through the aid of Pennsylvania officers, soldiers, statesmen and financiers, and many of the most important events of that momentous era took place upon her soil. New England and Virginia have taken most of the glory of the Revolution to themselves, but it is none the less true that had it not been for the efforts of Pennsylvania, the "Keystone of the arch," the result would have been very doubtful.

Rivers.—The principal rivers are the Delaware, Susquehanna and Ohio. Of these the main tributaries are as follows: Delaware—Schuylkill, Lehigh and Lackawaxen; Susquehanna—North Branch, West Branch and Juniata; Ohio—Allegheny, Monongahela and Beaver. Of the minor streams, the following are worthy of special note: Flowing into the North Branch of the Susquehanna, the Chemung, Wyalusing and Lackawanna; into the West Branch, the Sinnemahoning, Clearfield, Buffalo, Pine and Lycoming; into the main stream of the Susquehanna (below Northumberland), the Conestoga, Fishing, Swatara, Conodoquinet, Codorus and Conewago; into the Allegheny, the Conewago, Venango (or French creek), Clarion, Redbank and Kiskiminetas; into the Monongahela, the Youghiogheny and Cheat rivers; into the Beaver, the Shenango and Mahoning. The Delaware is navigable from Trenton to the ocean; the Susquehanna flows into the head of Chesapeake bay, which is one of the great water courses of the country; and the Ohio, by its connection with the Mississippi and other rivers, forms one of the grandest systems of inland communication to be found in the entire world.

Rebellions and Riots.—In 1791 Congress passed an act laying a small excise on distilled spirits. This was very distasteful to the counties adjacent to Pittsburg, where the manufacture of whisky was carried on to a considerable extent. The citizens generally determined to oppose the law, and various acts of violence and insubordination ensued, covering a period of two or three years. Affairs finally reached a stage where President Washington felt it to be his duty to compel an enforcement of the laws. In 1794 he called out the militia of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland and New Jersey to the number of 15,000, with orders to march upon the revolting counties and put down all resistance to the laws of Congress. This large force overawed the insurrectionists, and peace was promptly restored. The incident is known in history as "the Whisky Insurrection."

THE FRIES REBELLION.

A disturbance on a smaller scale broke out among the Germans of Lehigh, Berks, Northampton and adjoining counties in 1798-9, which is chiefly interesting from the political effect it had upon those sections. It was headed by John Fries, and was directed against a so-called "house tax" that had been levied by Congress. Several arrests were made, but no serious punishment followed. The agitation connected with this tax is generally understood to have given the counties named their Democratic complexion.

NATIVE AMERICAN RIOTS.

In April and May, 1844, occurred the disturbances in Philadelphia which are usually known as the Native American riots. A bitter feeling, for some cause, had grown up between a portion of the native born Protestants of that city and the foreign Catholic element, which resulted in serious encounters, the loss of a number of lives and the destruction of some Catholic church property. The State militia were called out, and peace was restored only after several persons had been killed and wounded.

ANTI-SLAVERY RIOTS.

One of the most important affairs in its results that ever happened in the State took place at Christiana, Lancaster county, in 1851. An attempt was made to restore an escaped slave to his master, under the Fugitive Slave Law of Congress, which was resisted with bloody consequences. This was at the time when hostility to slavery was steadily increasing in the North, and the "Christiana riot," as it became known, had a good deal of influence in creating the Republican party.

RIOTS OF 1877.

The riots in 1877 grew out of a dispute between the railroad corporations and their employes over the wages and hours of labor. For several days in July of that year nearly every railroad in the State was obliged to suspend operations. July 20th to the 25th, a mob held possession of Pittsburg, and the disturbances that ensued led to the death of fifty persons and the destruction of $5,000,000 worth of property. As usual in such cases, the militia were ordered out, and matters were quieted, after a great expenditure of money and much difficulty.

HOMESTEAD RIOT.

The latest of the great disturbances in the State took place at Homestead, near Pittsburg, in 1892. A dispute between the Carnegie Company and some of its employes led to an extensive strike. The company procured the aid of the "Pinkertons," a well-known detective force, who attempted to secure possession of the works at Homestead by strategy. The strikers learned of their purpose, and determined to resist it. A severe fight occurred on July 6th, in which about twenty persons were killed and twice as many wounded. The whole military force of the State was placed upon duty, and succeeded in so settling matters that the works partially resumed operations in about a month. As in several of the instances above mentioned, this trouble had a considerable political effect. Mr. Carnegie was a leading Republican, and the tendency of the Homestead affair—whether justly or unjustly is not argued here—was to drive thousands of working men into the ranks of the Democratic party, and undoubtedly led to the election of Grover Cleveland for the second term as President of the United States.

Richest Counties in the United States.—According to the United States census of 1890, the six leading counties in the value of agricultural products are as follows: 1, Lancaster county, Pa., $7,657,790; 2, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., $6,054,160; 3, Chester county, Pa., $5,863,800; 4, Worcester county, Mass., $5,489,430; 5, Bucks county, Pa., $5,411,370; 6, Colusa county, Cal., $5,357,350. Lancaster has long been known as the richest farming county in America. The above figures do not refer to the value of the land, but give the value of the yearly farming product. Lancaster leads by great odds in the value of farm lands, although it is only one-third as large as St. Lawrence county, N. Y.

Seal of the State.—An authentic engraving of the seal of the State is printed on another page of this book.

State Buildings.—[See list of Public Buildings.]

Slavery Abolished.—As in most or all of the Colonies, slavery at one period was legal in Pennsylvania. The act for the gradual abolishment of slavery passed the Assembly in March, 1780. Every person in bondage at the time was continued in slavery for a certain period, and the children of slaves became free at a certain age. The first important proposition in Congress to limit slavery in the territories owned by the United States was offered by David Wilmot, a Pennsylvania representative, in 1840, and the first national convention of the Republican party was held in Pittsburg in 1856.

Summer Resorts.—The best-known summer and health resorts are at Bedford, Cresson, Minnequa, Cambridge and Saegertown. The mineral springs at Bedford have been celebrated for upwards of a century, and are among the most valuable known. Forty or fifty years ago they were the most popular in the Union, being a famous resort for politicians of national fame. The water is not surpassed by any of a mineral character in any part of the world.

Stone.—The State contains nearly all the ornamental and building stones in general use, but slate, limestone and sandstone are the leading products in this direction. Slate is procured in great quantities on the south side of the Kittatinny range, in Lehigh and Northampton counties, and the other stones named are distributed generally over the State. A fine variety of marble is occasionally found, and the greenstone, extensively used in building in some of the eastern cities, belongs almost exclusively to Pennsylvania.

Senators from Pennsylvania in U. S. Congress.—[See U. S. Senators.]

School System.—The public-school system of Pennsylvania is properly regarded as one of the best in the Union. It was a cardinal principle of William Penn, in establishing his colony, that a good education should be open to every child born within its limits. One of the earliest provisions made by the State was for an academy in every county. When the common-school idea came into vogue, it was eagerly embraced by the old-time Governors, who lost no opportunity for recommending it to the Legislature. The first law on the subject was passed during the administration of Governor Wolf, and this was improved, at various times, by the efforts of Governors Ritner, Packer, and others, aided by such men as Thaddeus Stevens, Thomas H. Burrowes and Henry L. Dieffenbach. A more complete account of the system than can be given here will be found in the General History of Erie County, and a list of the State Normal Schools is given elsewhere. The following statistics, from the State reports for 1893, are of value in this connection:

Number of school districts.....	2,386
Number of schools.....	24,012
Number of male teachers.....	8,245
Number of female teachers.....	17,718
Average salaries of male teachers per month.....	143 94
Average salaries of female teachers per month.....	33 04
Average length of school term in months.....	8.10
Number of pupils.....	994,407
Cost of tuition for the year.....	$8,468,437

The estimated value of the school property in some of the counties and towns in northwestern Pennsylvania in the same year was as follows: Counties (exclusive of cities)—Crawford, $231,400; Erie, $268,554; Venango, $193,500; Warren, $271,550. Cities and towns—Bradford, $100,000; Corry, $52,304; Erie, $600,000; Meadville, $150,000; Oil City, $112,500; Titusville, $100,000.

Triangle.—[For an account of the purchase of the Triangle, embracing Presque Isle Bay and the northern portion of Erie county, see the General History of said county.]

Timber.—Probably no portion of the world was more densely covered with timber than Pennsylvania when opened to white settlement. Every kind of timber that grows in the temperate zone was found in the State, including among the principal varieties pine, hemlock, oak, hickory, walnut, ash, cucumber—in fact, almost any sort that can be named. Unfortunately for the welfare of the State, the timber has been recklessly destroyed, and but few large bodies remain, most of these being at remote points. Suggestions have been made in favor of a general system of tree propagation, and there is not much doubt that some day the mountains and hillsides will again be covered with valuable timber, under the care of the State. Measures have also been adopted that will eventually lead to a wider cultivation of trees along the highways and upon the banks of the streams.

Universities and Colleges.—No State in the Union has given more attention to the higher education of its citizens than Pennsylvania. Aside from her splendid system of Public Schools and Academies, some of the largest and best Colleges and Universities in the world are located within her boundaries. Among the most widely known are the following:

University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.
Western University of Pennsylvania, Pittsburg.

Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia.
Girard College for Orphans, Philadelphia.
Lehigh University, Bethlehem.
Allegheny College, Meadville.
State College, Centre county.
Dickinson College, Carlisle.
Haverford College, near Philadelphia.
Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster.
St. Vincent's, near Latrobe.
Villa Nova, near Philadelphia.
Swarthmore College, Delaware county.
Lafayette College, Easton.
Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg.
Washington and Jefferson College, Canonsburg.

Bucknell University, Lewisburg.
Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny.
Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr.

These are but a few of the leading educational institutions of the State, nearly every county containing one or more that are only second to the above-named in reputation.

United States Constitution.—As previously mentioned, the convention which drafted the Constitution of the United States was held in Philadelphia. The State was the second one to ratify this invaluable document, little Delaware, under Pennsylvania influence, having been the first. The ratification by Delaware was December 7, 1787, and by Pennsylvania December 12th of the same year. The delegation from Pennsylvania who helped to frame and who signed the Constitution of the United States were: Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Mifflin, Thomas Fitzsimmons, James Wilson, Robert Morris, George Clymer, Jared Ingersoll, Gouverneur Morris.

Crawford, in 1824; and William Wilkins, Democrat, John Sergeant, Anti-Jackson, and Amos Ellmaker, Anti-Masonic, all in 1832. The parents of John C. Calhoun, the eminent statesman, elected Vice-President on the ticket with Jackson, in 1828, moved from Lancaster county to South Carolina but a short time before his birth.

Wayne, Anthony.—An extended account of the life, death and important public services of Gen. Anthony Wayne, Pennsylvania's most eminent soldier in the Revolutionary war, will be found in the General History of Erie County.

Wealth.—Pennsylvania is second in wealth of the States of the Union, being exceeded only by New York.

War of 1812.—During the last war with Great Britain, usually known as the "War of 1812," but which really lasted from June 19, 1812, to the spring of 1815, the people of Pennsylvania were enthusiastic for the American cause. When the war opened the Governor asked for 14,000 volunteers, and three times as many were offered within a few weeks. The British at no time gained a footing on Pennsylvania soil, but the troops of the State were kept constantly on the alert to repel rumored or threatened attacks upon Erie and Philadelphia. Detachments of Pennsylvania volunteers rendered good service in the battles along the Niagara, and others responded with alacrity to the call of the country when Washington was burned and the enemy marched upon Baltimore. The victorious fleet of Perry was partly built and entirely created and equipped in the harbor of Erie, and largely manned by volunteers from the Pennsylvania militia stationed at the post. During the war the little navy of the United States rendered distinguished service, on the ocean as well as the lakes, and among the most famous of its heroes were four Pennsylvanians—Stephen Decatur, James Biddle, Charles Stewart and Jesse D. Elliott. Each of these received well-merited testimonials from his native State. [For a full account of Perry's victory and the events of the war along the north-western border, see the General History of Erie County.]

War with Mexico.—In the war with Mexico, 1846-7, the State offered nine regiments—four times her quota. Two regiments and two additional companies were accepted and sent to the seat of war. These were among the most efficient in the service, and, on several occasions, won the special commendation of the commanding general. The State has erected a handsome monument to the memory of her fallen soldiers in the Mexican war on the capitol grounds at Harrisburg.

War for the Union.—Under the direction of her patriotic Governor, Andrew G. Curtin, Pennsylvania was one of the most ardent and energetic of the loyal States in defense of the Union during the memorable struggle which lasted from 1861 to '65. President Lincoln's first call for 75,000 volunteers to maintain the national authority was made on the 15th of April, 1861. On the 18th of that month over 500 Pennsylvania soldiers reached Washington, being the first State troops to arrive at the National Capital in response to the President's proclamation. On the way through Baltimore they were grossly insulted, but succeeded in getting to Washington without a fight. By the end of April twenty-five regiments had been sent forward—nearly twice the number asked for from the State—and steps had been taken for the organization of a large reserve force. From that time to the close of the war Pennsylvania met every call, heartily and promptly, and there was scarcely an important battle in which her brave men did not take a conspicuous part. The total number of men furnished by the State during the contest was 387,284, of whom 60,000 were killed in battle, 35,000 mortally wounded, and many thousands died of disease in camps, hospitals and elsewhere.

BATTLES AT GETTYSBURG.

In the month of June, 1863, the main Southern army, led by General Lee, invaded the State, by way of the Cumberland Valley, in the hope of transferring the scene of war in the East from Virginian to Northern soil. A portion of the force reached York and penetrated to within a few miles of Harrisburg; but learning that the Army of the Potomac was marching northward, Lee rapidly concentrated his men in the direction of Gettysburg. The two armies came together at the latter place, and a series of battles ensued on the 1st, 2d and 3d of July, which were not only among the most desperate of the war, but among the bloodiest in history. The Southerners were repulsed at every point, and Lee was glad to withdraw his shattered force through a gap in the mountains to a place of safety south of the Potomac. It is estimated that the Southerners engaged at Gettysburg were 70,000 in number, with 250 guns; the Union troops numbered some 80,000, with 300 guns. The Union loss, as given by General Bingham, in his address at Gettysburg in 1889, was: 3,063 killed, 14,492 wounded and 5,455 missing—a total of 22,990; that of the Southerners was never fully returned, but is thought—in killed, wounded and prisoners—to have been about 27,500. Many prominent officers were killed, or died of their wounds, including Generals Reynolds, Vincent, Weed, Zuck and Farnsworth of the Union army, and Generals Pender, Barksdale, Armstead, Garnett and Semmes of the Southern. General Meade, commander of the Union forces, several of his leading officers, pre-eminently Generals Hancock, Reynolds, Geary, Vincent, Gregg and McCandless, and 26,628 of his army, were Pennsylvanians.

BURNING OF CHAMBERSBURG.

A sudden dash into the State, for the ostensible purpose of retaliating upon the North for the injuries done to property in the Shenandoah Valley by the Union troops, was made on July 29, 1864, by a considerable body of Southerners under the lead of General McCausland. They reached the outskirts of Chambersburg early in the morning of the 30th of July, and entered the place soon after daylight, there being no Union force in that section of sufficient size to oppose their progress. An immediate demand was made upon the citizens for $100,000 in gold, or $500,000 in greenbacks, to be paid within a half an hour, under the threat of burning the town. This, of course, the people were unable to do, and, while negotiations were going on, the town was set on fire in a hundred places, and the main portion destroyed. Millions of dollars' worth of property were eaten up by the flames within a few hours, and 3,000 persons robbed of their homes, money and valuables.

This was one of the most atrocious acts of the war, and has rendered the name of General McCausland forever odious. Having accomplished their object, the enemy hurried back to the Southern lines, plundering the Union farmers of horses, provisions, etc., on the way.

GENEROUS CARE OF SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHANS.

The State has remembered the deeds of its gallant men who fought in defense of the Union, with characteristic generosity. One of its first acts was to provide a series of orphan schools, in which the children of deceased soldiers were educated, clothed and cared for at the public charge until they reached an age where they could provide for themselves. It has also fitted up a home at Erie for sick and disabled soldiers and sailors, which is doubtless the best institution of the kind in any State of the Union. [See General History of Erie County and City of Erie.]

PENNSYLVANIA'S BATTLE FLAGS.

The torn and blood-stained battle flags of the several Pennsylvania regiments in the last war are sacredly preserved in a handsome room in the Capitol building at Harrisburg.

World's Fair.—The part taken by Pennsylvania in the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1893, was greatly to her credit. She was one of the first commonwealths to respond to the request of the Exposition authorities for aid, voting the liberal sum of $300,000, and by various acts, official and otherwise, doing much to encourage their efforts. Her State building was one of the finest on the grounds, and was generally conceded to be the best adapted for its purpose. Among the many articles from the State was the Liberty Bell, which attracted remarkable attention, and was unquestionably the most precious relic at the Exposition. Pennsylvania Day, September 7, 1893, was a proud event for the State, over 200,000 people having attended, as shown by the official reports of the Fair authorities.

CONSTITUTION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

[ADOPTED DECEMBER 18, 1873; WENT INTO OPERATION JANUARY 1ST, 1874, EXCEPT AS OTHERWISE PROVIDED THEREIN.]

PREAMBLE.

We, the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, grateful to Almighty God for the blessings of civil and religious liberty, and humbly invoking His guidance, do ordain and establish this constitution.

ARTICLE I.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.

That the general, great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and unalterably established, we declare that—

SECTION 1. All men are born equally free and independent, and have certain inherent and indefeasible rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property and reputation, and of pursuing their own happiness.

SEC. 2. All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety and happiness. For the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government in such manner as they may think proper.

SEC. 3. All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent; no human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience, and no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishments or modes of worship.

SEC. 4. No person who acknowledges the being of a God, and a future state of rewards and punishments, shall, on account of his religious sentiments, be disqualified to hold any office or place of trust or profit under the commonwealth.

SEC. 5. Elections shall be free and equal; and no power, civil or military, shall at any time interfere to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage.

SEC. 6. Trial by jury shall be, as heretofore, and the right thereof remain inviolate.

SEC. 7. The printing press shall be free to every person who may undertake to examine the proceedings of the legislature, or any branch of government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty. No conviction shall be had in any prosecution for the publication of papers relating to the official conduct of officers or men in public capacity, or to any other matter proper for public investigation or information, where the fact that such publication was not maliciously or negligently made shall be established to the satisfaction of the jury; and in all indictments for libel, the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court, as in other cases.

SEC. 8. The people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions from unreasonable searches and seizures, and no warrant to search any place or to seize any person or things shall issue without describing them as nearly as may be, nor without probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, subscribed to by the affiant.

SEC. 9. In all criminal prosecutions the accused hath a right to be heard by himself and his counsel, to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, to meet the witnesses face to face, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and, in prosecutions by indictment or information, a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the vicinage; he cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself, nor can he be deprived of his life, liberty or property, unless by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

SEC. 10. No person shall, for any indictable offense, be proceeded against criminally by information, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger, or by leave of the court, for oppression or misdemeanor in office. No person shall, for the same offense, be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall private property be taken or applied to public use, without a authority of law and without just compensation being first made or secured.

SEC. 11. All courts shall be open, and every man for an injury done him in his lands, goods, person or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without sale, denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the commonwealth in such manner, in such courts and in such cases as the legislature may by law direct.

SEC. 12. No power of suspending laws shall be exercised unless by the legislature, or by its authority.

SEC. 13. Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel punishments inflicted.

SEC. 14. All prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or presumption great; and the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in case of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

SEC. 15. No commission of oyer or terminer or jail delivery shall be issued.

SEC. 16. The person of a debtor, where there is not strong presumption of fraud, shall not be continued in prison after delivering up his estate for the benefit of his creditors, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 17. No ex post facto law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, or making irrevocable any grant of special privileges or immunities shall be passed.

SEC. 18. No person shall be attainted of treason or felony by the legislature.

SEC. 19. No attainer shall work corruption of blood, nor, except during the life of the offender, forfeiture of estate to the commonwealth. The estate of such persons as shall destroy their own lives shall descend or vest as in cases of natural death, and if any person shall be killed by casualty there shall be no forfeiture by reason thereof.

SEC. 20. The citizens have a right in a peaceable manner to assemble together for their common good, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government for redress of grievances, or other proper purposes, by petition, address or remonstrance.

SEC. 21. The right of the citizens to bear arms in defense of themselves and the state shall not be questioned.

SEC. 22. No standing army shall, in time of peace, be kept up without the consent of the legislature, and the military shall in all cases and at all times be in strict subordination to the civil power.

SEC. 23. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

SEC. 24. The legislature shall not grant any title of nobility or hereditary distinction, nor create any office, the appointment to which shall be for a longer term than during good behavior.

SEC. 25. Emigration from the state shall not be prohibited.

SEC. 26. To guard against transgressions of the high powers which we have delegated, we declare that everything in this article is excepted out of the general powers of government and shall forever remain inviolate.

ARTICLE II.

THE LEGISLATURE.

SEC. 1. The legislative power of this commonwealth shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. Members of the general assembly shall be chosen at the general election every second year. Their term of service shall begin on the first day of December next after their election. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in either House, the presiding officer thereof shall issue a writ of election to fill such vacancy for the remainder of the term.

SEC. 3. Senators shall be elected for the term of four years, and representatives for the term of two years.

SEC. 4. The general assembly shall meet at twelve o'clock, noon, on the first Tuesday of January, every second year, and at other times when convened by the Governor, but shall hold no adjourned annual session after the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight. In case of a vacancy in the office of United States Senator from this commonwealth, in a recess between sessions, the Governor shall convene the two Houses, by proclamation on notice not exceeding sixty days, to fill the same.

SEC. 5. Senators shall be at least twenty-five years of age, and representatives twenty-one years of age. They shall have been citizens and inhabitants of the state four years, and inhabitants of their respective districts one year next before their election (unless absent on the public business of the United States, or of this state), and shall reside in their respective districts during their terms of service.

SEC. 6. No senator or representative shall, during the time for which he shall have been elected, be appointed to any civil office under this commonwealth, and no member of congress, or other person holding any office (except of attorney-at-law or in the militia), under the United States, or this commonwealth, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

SEC. 7. No person hereafter convicted of embezzlement of public moneys, bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime, shall be eligible to the general assembly, or capable of holding any office of trust or profit in this commonwealth.

SEC. 8. The members of the general assembly shall receive such salary and mileage for regular and special sessions as shall be fixed by law, and no other compensation whatever, whether for service upon committee or otherwise. No member of either House shall, during the term for which he may have been elected, receive any increase of salary or mileage, under any law passed during such term.

SEC. 9. The Senate shall, at the beginning and close of each regular session, and at such other times as may be necessary, elect one of its members president pro tempore, who shall perform the duties of the Lieutenant Governor, in any case of absence or disability of that officer, and whenever the said office of Lieutenant Governor shall be vacant. The House of Representatives shall elect one of its members as speaker. Each House shall choose its other officers, and shall judge of the election and qualifications of its members.

SEC. 10. A majority of each House shall constitute a quorum, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members.

SEC. 11. Each House shall have power to determine the rules of its proceedings, and punish its members or other persons for contempt or disorderly behavior in its presence, to enforce obedience to its process, to protect its members against violence, or offers of bribes or private solicitation, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, to expel a member, but not a second time for the same cause, and shall have all other powers necessary for the legislature of a free state. A member expelled for corruption shall not thereafter be eligible to either House, and punishment for contempt or disorderly behavior shall not bar an indictment for the same offense.

SEC. 12. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, except such parts as require secrecy, and the yeas and nays of the members on any question shall, at the desire of any two of them, be entered on the journal.

SEC. 13. The sessions of each House, and of committees of the whole, shall be open, unless when the business is such that it ought to be kept secret.

SEC. 14. Neither House shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

SEC. 15. The members of the general assembly shall, in all cases, except treason, felony, violation of their oath of office, and breach or surety of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House they shall not be questioned in any other place.

SEC. 16. The State shall be divided into fifty senatorial districts of compact and contiguous territory, as nearly equal in population as may be, and each district shall be entitled to elect one senator. Each county containing one or more ratios of population shall be entitled to one senator for each ratio, and to an additional senator for a surplus of population exceeding three-fifths of a ratio, but no county shall form a separate district unless it shall contain four-fifths of a ratio, except where the adjoining counties are each entitled to one or more senators, when such county may be assigned a senator on less than four-fifths and exceeding one-half of a ratio; and no county shall be divided unless entitled to two or more senators. No city or county shall be entitled to separate representation exceeding one-sixth of the whole number of senators. No ward, borough, or township shall be divided in the formation of a district. The senatorial ratio shall be ascertained by dividing the whole population of the State by the number fifty.

SEC. 17. The members of the House of Representatives shall be apportioned among the several counties, on a ratio obtained by dividing the population of the State, as ascertained by the most recent United States census, by two hundred. Every county containing less than five ratios shall have one representative for every full ratio, and an additional representative when the surplus exceeds half a ratio; but each county shall have at least one representative. Every county containing five ratios or more shall have one representative for every full ratio. Every city containing a population equal to a ratio shall elect separately its proportion of the representatives allotted to the county in which it is located. Every city entitled to more than four representatives, and every county having over one hundred thousand inhabitants, shall be divided into districts of compact and contiguous territory, each district to elect its proportion of representatives according to its population, but no district shall elect more than four representatives.

SEC. 18. The general assembly at its first session after the adoption of this constitution, and immediately after each United States decennial census, shall apportion the State into senatorial and representative districts, agreeably to the provisions of the two next preceding sections.

ARTICLE III.

LEGISLATION.

SEC. 1. No law shall be passed except by bill, and no bill shall be so altered or amended, on its passage through either House, as to change its original purpose.

SEC. 2. No bill shall be considered unless referred to a committee, returned therefrom, and printed for the use of the members.

SEC. 3. No bills, except general appropriation bills, shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in the title.

SEC. 4. Every bill shall be read at length on three different days, in each House; all amendments made thereto shall be printed for the use of the members before the final vote is taken on the bill, and no bill shall become a law, unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and nays, the names of the persons voting for and against the same be entered on the journal, and a majority of the members elected to each House be recorded thereon as voting in its favor.

SEC. 5. No amendments to bills by one House shall be concurred in by the other except by the vote of a majority of the members elected thereto, taken by yeas and nays, and the names of those voting for and against recorded upon the journal thereof; and reports of committees of conference shall be adopted in either House only by the vote of a majority of the members elected thereto, taken by yeas and nays, and the names of those voting recorded upon the journals.

SEC. 6. No law shall be revived, amended, or the provisions thereof extended or conferred, by reference to its title only, but so much thereof as is revived, amended, extended, or conferred, shall be re-enacted and published at length.

SEC. 7. The general assembly shall not pass any local or special law authorizing the creation, extension or impairing of liens; regulating the affairs of counties, cities, townships, wards, boroughs, or school districts; changing the names of

SEC. 8. No local or special bill shall be passed unless notice of the intention to apply therefor shall have been published in the locality where the matter or the thing to be affected may be situated, which notice shall be at least thirty days prior to the introduction into the general assembly of such bill and in the manner to be provided by law; the evidence of such notice having been published shall be exhibited in the general assembly before such act shall be passed.

SEC. 9. The presiding officer of each House shall, in the presence of the House over which he presides, sign all bills and joint resolutions passed by the general assembly, after their titles have been publicly read immediately before signing; and the fact of signing shall be entered on the journal.

SEC. 10. The general assembly shall prescribe by law the number, duties and compensation of the officers and employes of each House, and no payment shall be made from the State treasury, or be in any way authorized, to any person, except to an acting officer or employe elected or appointed in pursuance of law.

SEC. 11. No bill shall be passed giving any extra compensation to any public officer, servant, employe, agent or contractor, after services shall have been rendered or contract made, nor providing for the payment of any claim against the commonwealth without previous authority of law.

SEC. 12. All stationery, printing paper and fuel used in the legislative and other departments of government shall be furnished, and the printing, binding and distributing of the laws, journals, department reports, and all other printing and binding, and the repairing and furnishing the halls and rooms used for the meetings of the general assembly and its committees, shall be performed under contract to be given to the lowest responsible bidder below such maximum price and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law; no member or officer of any department of the government shall be in any way interested in such contracts, and all such contracts shall be subject to the approval of the Governor, Auditor General and State Treasurer.

SEC. 13. No law shall extend the term of any public officer, or increase or diminish his salary or emoluments, after his election or appointment.

SEC. 21. No act of the general assembly shall limit the amount to be recovered for injuries resulting in death, or for persons or property; and in case of death from injuries the right of action shall survive, and the general assembly shall prescribe for whose benefit such actions shall be prosecuted. No act shall prescribe any limitations of time within which suits may be brought against corporations for injuries to persons or property, or for other causes different from those fixed by general laws regulating actions against natural persons, and such acts now existing are avoided.

SEC. 22. No act of the general assembly shall authorize the investment of trust funds by executors, administrators, guardians or other trustees, in the bonds or stock of any private corporation, and such acts now existing are avoided, saving investments heretofore made.

SEC. 25. When the general assembly shall be convened in special session there shall be no legislation upon subjects other than those designated in the proclamation of the Governor calling such session.

SEC. 26. Every order, resolution or vote, to which the concurrence of both Houses may be necessary (except on the question of adjournment), shall be presented to the Governor, and, before it shall take effect, be approved by him, or, being disapproved, shall be re-passed by two-thirds of both Houses, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a bill.

SEC. 27. No State office shall be continued or created for the inspection or measuring of any merchandise, manufacture or commodity, but any county or municipality may appoint such officers when authorized by law.

SEC. 28. No law changing the location of the capital of the State shall be valid until the same shall have been submitted to the qualified electors of the commonwealth, at a general election, and ratified and approved by them.

receive, directly or indirectly, for himself or for another, from any company, corporation or person, any money, office, appointment, employment, testimonial, reward, thing of value or enjoyment, or of personal advantage, or promise thereof, for his vote, or official influence, or for withholding the same, or with an understanding, expressed or implied, that his vote or official action shall be, in any way, influenced thereby, or who shall solicit or demand any such money, or other advantage, matter or thing aforesaid, for another, as the consideration of his vote or official influence, or for withholding the same, or shall give or withhold his vote or influence, in consideration of the payment of or promise of such money, advantage, matter or thing to another, shall be held guilty of bribery within the meaning of this constitution, and shall incur the disabilities provided thereby for said offense, and such additional punishment as is or shall be provided by law.

SEC. 30. Any person who shall, directly or indirectly, offer, give or promise any money or thing of value, testimonial, privilege or personal advantage, to any executive or judicial officer, or member of the general assembly, to influence him in the performance of any of his public or official duties, shall be guilty of bribery, and be punished in such manner as shall be provided by law.

SEC. 31. The offense of corrupt solicitation of members of the general assembly, or of public officers of the State, or of any municipal division thereof, and any occupation, or practice of solicitation, of such members or officers, to influence their official action, shall be defined by law, and shall be punished by fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 32. Any person may be compelled to testify in any lawful investigation, or judicial proceeding, against any person, who may be charged with having committed the offense of bribery or corrupt solicitation, or practices of solicitation, and shall not be permitted to withhold his testimony upon the ground that it may criminate himself, or subject him to public infamy; but such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding, except for perjury in giving such testimony; and any person convicted of either of the offenses aforesaid shall, as part of the punishment therefor, be disqualified from holding any office or position of honor, trust, or profit in this commonwealth.

SEC. 33. A member who has a personal or private interest in any measure or bill proposed or pending before the general assembly, shall disclose the fact to the House of which he is a member, and shall not vote thereon.

ARTICLE IV.

THE EXECUTIVE.

SEC. 1. The executive department of this commonwealth shall consist of a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Attorney General, Auditor General, State Treasurer, Secretary of Internal Affairs, and a Superintendent of Public Instruction.

SEC. 2. The supreme executive power shall be vested in the Governor, who shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed; he shall be chosen on the day of the general election, by the qualified electors of the commonwealth, at the places where they shall vote for representatives. The returns of every election for Governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of Government, directed to the President of the Senate, who shall open and publish them in the presence of the members of both Houses of the general assembly. The person having the highest number of votes shall be Governor; but if two or more be equal and highest in votes, one of them shall be chosen Governor by the joint vote of the members of both Houses. Contested elections shall be determined by a committee, to be selected from both Houses of the general assembly, and formed and regulated in such manner as shall be directed by law.

SEC. 3. The Governor shall hold his office during four years, from the third Tuesday of January next ensuing his election, and shall not be eligible to office for the next succeeding term.

SEC. 4. A Lieutenant Governor shall be chosen at the same time, in the same manner, for the same term, and subject to the same provisions as the Governor; he shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided.

SEC. 5. No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor, except a citizen of the United States, who shall have attained the age of thirty years, and have been seven years next preceding his election an inhabitant of the State, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States or of this State.

SEC. 6. No member of congress, or person holding any office under the United States or this State, shall exercise the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor.

PART III.

THE COUNTY OF ERIE.

Descriptive and Historical.

ERIE COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

CHAPTER I.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION—PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY, &c.

THE COUNTY OF ERIE forms the extreme northwestern portion of Pennsylvania, and is the only section of the State that borders on Lake Erie. It is bounded on the north by Lake Erie, on the east by Chautauqua county, New York, and Warren county, Pennsylvania, on the south by Crawford county, Pennsylvania, and on the west by Ashtabula county, Ohio. The length of the county along the lake is about forty-five miles, along the Chautauqua and Warren county lines thirty-six miles, along that of Crawford county forty-five miles, and along the Ohio line nine miles. It contains 772 square miles, or about 500,000 square acres. Its mean or center latitude is forty-two degrees north, and its longitude is three degrees west from Washington.

The surface of the county is divided into five distinct sections, viz.: The Lake Shore plain, the series of dividing ridges, the valleys between the ridges, the valleys of French creek and its tributaries, and the high lands south of the last-named stream.

Four separate ranges of hills extend across the county from east to west, known respectively as the First, Second, Third and Fourth ridges. The First ridge rises to a height of 150 to 200 feet above Lake Erie, the Second to about 400, and the height of the Third and Fourth ridges varies from 600 to 1,200 feet, their most elevated summits being in the eastern portion of McKean, the western portion of Waterford, the northern portion of Venango, the southern part of Greenfield, and in the vicinity of Corry. The separation of the ridges becomes more clearly defined along a line drawn through Harbor Creek, Mill Creek, Summit, Waterford and McKean townships than further east; but from there westward each ridge is as distinct as though it belonged to a system of its own. As the Third and Fourth ridges extend westward they recede from the lake until they run into Crawford county.

PRINCIPAL VALLEYS.

Three continuous valleys cross the county between the ridges, from the line above mentioned, broken in places by slight elevations, and known in succession as the Mill Creek, the Walnut Creek and the Elk Creek valleys. These streams rise on the high ground of the Third and Fourth ridges, and, after flowing westward for some distance down their respective valleys, suddenly turn to the north and break through the First and Second ridges by a series of deep "gulfs" or gullies, which are a striking feature of the region. North of the First ridge, and between it and Lake Erie, is a broad alluvial tract, from two to three miles in width, which extends along the whole water front of the county. Its general height above the lake is from fifty to sixty feet, but in the eastern part of Harbor Creek township its elevation suddenly rises to nearly 100 feet and so continues almost to the New York line.

South of the dividing ridges are the valleys of French creek and of the streams which empty into it, and still beyond are the hills which form the water-shed between that stream and Brokenstraw, Spring and Oil creeks. The water on the north side of the main ridge flows into Lake Erie, and on the south side to the Allegheny river. The dividing line between the waters is some eight miles south of Lake Erie in Greenfield and Greene townships, twelve miles in Summit, fourteen in Waterford, McKean and Washington, and sixteen in Franklin and Elk Creek. Along French, Walnut, Elk, Conneaut, Mill,

Big Conneauttee, Little Conneauttee and LeBoeuf creeks, Hatch Hollow Alder run, Beaver Dam run, and the outlet of Lake Pleasant are very handsome valleys, from a quarter of a mile to more than a mile in width.

HIGHEST ELEVATIONS.

The State Geological Report gives the following as the elevation above tide-water of the points named: Surface of Lake Erie, 573 7-10 feet; Philadelphia and Erie R. R. summit between Walnut and LeBoeuf Creeks, 1,229; hill tops on each side of the same summit, 1,355; hill tops in western Waterford and eastern McKean, 1,470; Philadelphia & Erie Railroad station at Union City, 1,270; hill tops southwest of Union City, 1,301; railroad station at Corry, 1,431; hill tops east of Corry, 1,500; hill tops south of Corry, 1,725; hill tops along the Little Conneauttee, 1,196; hill tops southwest of Edinboro, 1,400.

THE PENINSULA.

Jutting out from the mainland, in Mill Creek township, is the peninsula of Presque Isle, which forms the bay of Presque Isle, the harbor of the city of Erie. It is a low sand bank, washed up by the action of the waves, some six miles in length, and varying in width from a few rods to a mile and a half. Except at its head and foot, it is covered with trees and shrubs of almost every variety that grows in this latitude. The peninsula is indented with several shallow ponds, one or two of which run half way across. [For a fuller account of the peninsula and the improvements for its protection see Chapter VI.; also Erie City.]

CHARACTER OF THE SOIL.

In general, the Lake Shore plain has a sandy soil, while immediately south of it, along the First ridge, is a wide and continuous strip of gravel. The valleys between the ridges are a mixture of loam, clay and sand, making a mellow soil that is easy to work. On the high lands and slopes of the ridges the soil is mostly of a clayey nature, somewhat damp and cold. That of the valleys of the French creek system is a rich alluvial deposit corresponding in character to bottom lands the country over.

The lands bordering on Lake Erie are generally regarded as the best in the county for grain and fruits. This favored section produces everything that is common to the north temperate zone. The lake moderates the climate so that it is less troubled by frosts than regions many miles south, and as fine melons, grapes, peaches, strawberries, etc., are raised as in any part of the State. A belt of swamp land about half a mile wide originally extended along the Lake Shore plain, in an east and west direction, from Twelve-Mile creek to the Ohio boundary. Most of this has been drained, and is now fertile land. The valleys of the French creek system are all rich, but are subject to frosts, which prevent the successful culture of the more delicate fruits. On the high lands the frosts are less troublesome, but the nature of the soil adapts them best for grazing. Off of the lake shore the attention of the farmers is mainly given to dairying, which may be said to be the leading agricultural industry of the county. Aside from wheat, every kind of grain does well in all sections. That grain has of late years, however, been grown with considerable success in various portions of the county south of the lake shore, and it is possible that in time it will be generally cultivated. The apple crop is everywhere sure and prolific. Large quantities of this fruit and of potatoes are annually shipped to the Southern and Eastern markets.

The highest-priced farming lands are in the vicinity of Erie, Girard, North East, Fairview and Waterford, and the lowest-priced in Greenfield, Elk Creek, Franklin and Wayne.

CLIMATE, GEOLOGY AND TIMBER.

The climate is more moderate than would be thought from the high northern latitude. The county lies within the same isothermal lines as Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania generally, but, while the average temperature corresponds with that section, there is less sultry weather in summer and more piercing wind in winter and spring. This is due to the proximity of Lake Erie, which, as stated above, has a wonderful effect upon the atmosphere. To the same influence is due the fact that spring sets in from one to two weeks earlier on the lake shore than in the southern part of the county. It sometimes happens that good sleighing prevails in the southern townships when the ground is bare along the lake. The winters and summers are about of equal length, but it is seldom that either are extreme. For six months in the year the county is as delightful a place of residence as the most fastidious could desire.

A peculiarity of the county is the scarcity of stone, which is not sufficient in quantity for ordinary home use. The only quarries of much account are in Franklin, LeBoeuf, Summit and Waterford townships, and these do not consist of vast masses of rock, but are merely thin layers, one above the other, ranging from five to twenty feet in total thickness. The stone is hard, of good quality and easily worked, but is saturated with oil, which causes it to bluish after exposure. Small quarries exist in Fairview, Washington, Amity, Venango, McKean and Union, but are rarely worked to advantage.

The first settlers found the country covered with a dense forest, consisting mainly of pine, hemlock, chestnut, walnut, cherry, cucumber, beech and maple. Perhaps two-thirds of the land has been cleared, and but little good timber is left. The pine and hemlock of the French valley were largely rafted to Pittsburgh. That of the lake shore was shipped to Cleveland, Buffalo and New York markets. The county does not furnish building material enough now for home use.

MINERALS, OIL WELLS, ETC.

No minerals of any kind have ever been found in the county, except small deposits of iron, of the grade known as bog ore, in Mill Creek and Elk Creek townships, and a few unimportant beds of marl in Waterford, Wayne and LeBoeuf.

Mineral springs, the waters of which are of a medicinal character have been discovered in different localities. One in Elk Creek township and another in Erie, near the corner of Eighth and Chestnut streets, were once quite widely known.

In early days a number of salt wells were put down at various points, and the manufacture of salt was carried on to a considerable extent. The most valuable of these were along the East branch of Conneaut creek, near Wellsburg. A salt spring still flows in Springfield, and salt licks prevailed in almost every township.

Many test wells for oil have been bored, nearly every section having had from three to half a dozen experiments of that character. With scarcely an exception, a small yield of oil has resulted, but not enough to encourage the belief that it will be found in paying quantities. The Althof well in Erie produced oil enough for several years to warrant the expense of pumping. The oil that has been secured is of the heavy kind used for lubricating purposes. [See Erie City].

Natural gas is found almost everywhere by boring. The wells put down for oil have invariably yielded gas in a heavy volume, and it has been used in numerous instances for light and fuel. In the course of time, the gas diminishes and the wells lose their value. [See Erie City].

Tamarack Swamp, in the northeast part of Waterford and the eastern part of McKean townships, is about two miles long by 100 rods wide. Its waters flow into Lake LeBoeuf. Portions of the swamp have been drained, leaving a rich, black mold that is very productive.

CHAPTER II.

COUNTY, TOWNSHIP, CITY AND BOROUGH ORGANIZATIONS—POST OFFICES—BOUNDARY LINE—TABLE OF DISTANCES FROM ERIE, &c.

PREVIOUS to the 24th of September, 1788, all of the State lying west of the Allegheny mountains was embraced in Westmoreland and Washington counties. On that date, the section north of the Ohio and west of the Allegheny to the Ohio line was set off as a new county, which was named after the latter river. Pittsburgh was designated as its county seat. The population was sparse, and it was not until ten years later that a necessity arose in the Northwest for a separate organization. On the 4th of April, 1798, Erie township was erected with the identical limits of the present county.

Erie, Butler, Beaver, Crawford, Mercer, Venango and Warren counties were created by an act of the Legislature approved March 12, 1800, their seats of justice being named at the same time. Being unable to sustain a separate organization, five of these, Erie, Crawford, Mercer, Venango and Warren, were joined as one county for governmental purposes, with the general title of Crawford county, under the act of April 9, 1801. The county seat was at Meadville, and one set of county officers and one member of the Assembly served for the whole five. This relation continued until 1808, when the first county officers were elected in Erie county.

ORIGINAL TOWNSHIPS AND FORMATION OF NEW ONES.

The townships originally established in Erie county were sixteen in number as follows: Brokenstraw, Beaver Dam, "Coniaute," "Connat," Elk Creek, Fairview, Greenfield, Harbor Creek, "LeBœuff," Mill Creek, McKean, North East, Springfield, Union, Venango and Waterford.

The following townships have been added, making twenty-one in all: Amity, Franklin, Girard, Summit, Wayne.

The name of Brokenstraw was changed to Concord in 1821.

Amity was taken from Union in 1826.

Wayne was formed out of Concord in 1826.

Girard was set off from Elk Creek, Fairview and Springfield in 1832.

The name of "Coniaute" was changed to Washington in 1834.

That of Beaver Dam was changed to Greene in 1840.

Franklin was created out of parts of Washington, McKean and Elk Creek in 1844.

Summit was formed out of Greene, Waterford and McKean in 1854.

CITIES AND BOROUGHS.

The cities and boroughs are as follows:

Erie was incorporated as a borough in 1805, having previously formed a part of Mill Creek township; divided into two wards in 1840; granted a city charter in 1851; and divided into four wards in 1858. South Erie was set off from Mill Creek township and incorporated as a borough in 1866; consolidated with the city in 1870, and became the Fifth and Sixth wards, some additions having been made from Mill Creek township.

The following shows the years in which the several boroughs were incorporated: Waterford, 1833; Wattsburg, 1834; North East, 1834; Edinboro, 1840; Girard, 1846; Albion, 1861; Middleboro, 1861; Union Mills, 1863; Fairview, 1868; Mill Village, 1870; Lockport, 1870; Elgin, 1876; East Springfield, 1887.

Corry was established as a borough in 1863, and granted a city charter in 1866. It is divided into the First, Second, Third and Fourth wards.

The name of Union Mills borough was changed to Union City July 4, 1871.

BOUNDARY LINES BETWEEN ERIE AND CRAWFORD COUNTIES.

The boundary line between Erie and Crawford counties was long a subject of dispute. To settle the question, the Legislature passed an act at the session of 1849-50, providing for three commissioners to run a new line, who were given full power to act, and whose decision should be final. In 1850, Humphrey A. Hills, then of Albion, was appointed commissioner for Erie county; Andrew Ryan was appointed for Crawford, and they two named H. P. Kinnear, of Warren, as the third member. Brown King was chosen surveyor on the part of Erie, and Mr. Jagger on that of Crawford; but David Wilson, as deputy for Mr. King, did most of the work. A perfectly straight line was run from east to west, and marked by stones set two miles apart. The commission added a long, narrow strip of territory to Erie county, which is usually outlined upon the county and township maps. A number of persons found themselves in Erie who had supposed they were citizens of Crawford, and a less number in Crawford who had imagined they belonged to Erie.

REMAINS OF A PRE-HISTORIC RACE—GULFS, CASCADES AND NATURAL CURIOSITIES.

VARIOUS indications have been found in the county which lead to the conclusion that it must have been peopled centuries ago by a different race from the Indians who were found here when it was first visited by white men. When the link of the Erie and Pittsburg R. R. from the Lake Shore road to the dock at Erie was in process of construction, the laborers dug into a great mass of bones at the crossing of the public road which joins the Lake road near Scott's Pioneer Farm. From the promiscuous way in which they were thrown together, it is surmised that a terrible battle must have taken place in the vicinity at some day so far distant that not even a tradition of the event has been preserved. The skulls were flattened, and the foreheads were seldom more than an inch in width. The bodies were in a sitting posture, and there were no traces that garments, weapons or ornaments had been buried with them.

At a later date, when the roadway of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., where it passes through the Warfel farm, was being widened, another deposit of bones was dug up and ruthlessly disposed of. Among the skeletons was one of a giant, side by side with a smaller person, probably that of his wife. The arm and leg bones of this native American Goliath were about one-half longer than those of the tallest man among the laborers; the skull was immensely large; the lower jawbone easily slipped over the face and whiskers of a full-faced man, and the teeth were in a perfect state of preservation.

Another skeleton was dug up in Conneaut township some years ago which was quite as remarkable in its dimensions. A comparison was made with the largest man in the neighborhood, and the jawbone readily covered his face, while the lower bone of the leg was nearly a foot longer than the one with which it was measured, indicating that the man must have been eight to ten feet in height. The bones of a flathead were turned up in the same township some two years ago with a skull of unusual size. Relics of a former time have been gathered in that section by the painful, and among other curiosities a brass watch was found that was as big as a common saucer.

In preparing the bed for the "Nickel Plate" railroad, near the bridge over Elk creek, in Girard township, numerous skeletons were thrown up by the steam shovel and carelessly dumped to one side with as little respect as if they had been the bones of so many cattle.

An ancient graveyard was discovered in 1820 on the land now known as the Carter and Dickinson places in Erie. Dr. Albert Thayer dug up some of the bones, and all indicated a race of beings of immense size.

And.^o Ellicott

PRE-HISTORIC MOUNDS.

No less curious are the pre-historic mounds and circles found in Wayne, Harbor Creek, Conneaut, Girard, Springfield, LeBœuf, Venango and Fairview townships. The principal one in Wayne township, which is still in a fair state of preservation, is near the road from Corry to Elgin, and but a short distance east of the springs which furnish water for the State fish-hatching establishment. It consists of a circle of raised earth, surrounded by a trench, from which the dirt was dug, the whole enclosing about three acres of unbroken ground. The embankment has been much flattened and reduced by the elements, but was still from one to two feet high and from three to four feet wide at the base some years ago. When the first settlers discovered it the interior of the circle was covered with forest trees. Half a mile west, a little to the north of the road, on a slight eminence, was another and smaller circle, which has been plowed down, leaving no vestige behind.

The circles in other portions of the county are or were similar in their general features, with one exception, to the above. Those in Harbor Creek township were situated on each side of Four-Mile creek, slightly southeast of the big curve of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., on points overlooking the deep gulf of that stream. The one on the west side of the creek is still in a fair state of preservation. The two Conneaut circles were near together, while those in Girard and Springfield, four in number, extended in a direct line from the western part of the former township to the southwestern part of the latter. One of the circles partially occupied the site of the cemetery at East Springfield. In Fairview township there was both a circle and a mound, the first at the mouth of Front run, and the second at Manchester. The latter, at the close of the last century, was about six feet high and fifteen feet in diameter. A tree was cut on one of the embankments in Conneaut that had attained the age of 500 years. The circles in LeBœuf and Venango were very much like those above described.

BONES OF A MAMMOTH AND A MYSTERIOUS BEAD.

The skeletons of extinct species of animals have frequently been found in the county.

Perhaps the most extraordinary discovery of that nature was made near Girard borough, in the early part of May, 1880. A man, while plowing, turned up some bones of a mammoth, which were thought to indicate an animal fifteen feet long and from twelve to thirteen feet high. One of the teeth weighed three and a half pounds, having a grinding surface of three and a half by four inches. Pieces of the tusks led to the opinion that they must have been eight or ten feet long.

In the year 1825, while Francis Carnahan was plowing along the lake shore in Harbor Creek township, he turned up a strange looking bead, which was cleaned and preserved. It fell into the hands of L. G. Olmstead, I. L. D., a traveler and archaeologist of some reputation, who pronounced it to be one of the celebrated "Chorean beads" of ancient Egypt, and kept it until his death as a relic of rare interest and value.

CURIOSITIES OF NATURE.

Among the natural curiosities of the county are the "gulfs" or gullies through which the lake shore streams descend from the dividing ridges in the south to the level of the lake. The gulf of Four-Mile creek extends from near the crossing of the Station road, about half a mile south of Wesleyville, to Ripley's mill, in Greene township, a distance in a direct line of about four miles, and by the course of the stream of about one-half more. Its depth varies from fifty to a hundred and fifty feet, with sides that are almost perpendicular at some points, and its width is from one to two hundred feet. The deepest part is at a spot locally known as Wintergreen Gulf, some four and a half miles southeast of Erie.

The "gulf" of Six-Mile creek, which is wholly in Harbor Creek township, is very similar to the other. It commences about half a mile south of the Buffalo road and terminates a little north of the Station road, being about the same length as the gully of Four-Mile creek. Its deepest and most picturesque point is at the Clark settlement, where the banks are not far from a hundred and fifty feet high.

"Gulfs" of a like nature attend every one of the lake shore streams, but are less picturesque, generally speaking, than the two above named. The most interesting are those of Twelve-Mile creek, near the lake; of Sixteen-

Mile creek, in the southern part of North East township; of Twenty-Mile creek, near the New York line; of Walnut creek, where it was crossed by the old aqueduct; of Crooked creek, in Springfield township; and of Elk creek, in the southern part of Fairview township.

In Girard township, south of the borough, is the "Devil's Backbone," which owes its novelty, as in the other cases mentioned, mainly to the long-continued action of water. The West branch of Elk creek winds around the base of a ridge for about one-fourth of a mile until it reaches its point. This it suddenly turns, and then runs in the opposite direction along the same ridge. The constant washing of the base has reduced the ridge to very slender limits, so that it has a width on top, in some parts, of barely two feet. The summit is about a hundred feet above the bed of the creek, and the sides of the ridge are nearly perpendicular.

WATERFALLS.

On Falls run, a small stream that flows into Elk creek from Franklin township, is a cascade, some fifty feet in height, which is said to be quite attractive at certain seasons. A beautiful waterfall formerly existed on the bank of the bay at the mouth of Cascade run, but was destroyed in the building of the Erie and Pittsburg R. R. and dock, to the regret of many citizens. A small waterfall still exists on Little Cascade creek, where it joins the bay, within the city limits, and numerous low but picturesque falls prevail on most of the lake shore streams as they approach their terminus.

STREAMS, INTERIOR LAKES—BRIDGES, &c.

ERIE COUNTY, though one of the best-watered sections of the State, has no rivers and few streams of importance. A large number of creeks and runs have their origin on the dividing ridges, and course through the county in all directions, so that almost every farm has its running water, but only three or four are of sufficient size to be given a place on the general map of the commonwealth. The dividing ridges separate the water system of the county into two distinct divisions, which may be classed for the present purpose into the Northern and Southern. All of the streams which form on the north side of the main ridge flow into Lake Erie, and thence, through Niagara river, Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence, to the Atlantic ocean. Those on the south side invariably unite with the Allegheny river, which in turn pours its waters into the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the Gulf of Mexico. Of the southern streams the most important is French creek, the common receptacle of all the rest, with the exception of the Brokenstraw (which flows through a corner of Wayne township), and the head-waters of Spring creek and Oil creek, having their sources, the former in Concord and the latter in that and Union township. The principal tributaries of French creek, within the county, are the East, West and South branches, the outlet of Lake Pleasant and LeBoeuf creek. The Conneauttee, which rises in Franklin township, and the Cussewago, the sources of which are both in that township and Elk creek, join the same stream in Crawford county.

The leading lake shore streams are as follows: Conneaut, Crooked, Elk, Trout, Walnut, Mill, Four-Mile, Six-Mile, Twelve-Mile, Sixteen-Mile and Twenty-Mile, the five last mentioned being named according to their distance from Erie City. The smaller streams which empty directly into Lake Erie, are Raccoon and Turkey runs, in Springfield township; Trout run, in Fairview township; Fasset run, Kelso run, the Head run, and One, Two and Three-Mile creeks, in Mill Creek township; Cascade and Garrison runs, in Erie City; Five-Mile creek, Elliott's run and Scott's run, in Harbor Creek township; Spring, Spafford and Averill runs, in North East township; and several rivulets, the titles of which are variously given.

TRIBUTARY STREAMS.

The tributaries of the above streams are as follows, the terminus of each being in the township indicated:

French Creek.—In Greenfield township, a number of creeks and runs; in Venango township, Middlebrook Alder run and Fritts run of the West branch, and Spafford run of the East branch; in Amity township (East and West branches unite), the outlet of Lake Pleasant, Jones' brook, Henry brook, the Hubbell Alder run, Deerlick run, the Hatch Hollow Alder run and Duncombe run; in Waterford township, Davis run; in LeBoeuf township, the South branch, LeBoeuf creek, Trout brook, Colt run, Mill run, Moravian run, Gill brook and Mallory run.

LeBoeuf Creek.—In Waterford township, the West branch, Boyd run, Trout run and Benson run. (Boyd and Trout runs empty into Lake LeBoeuf, which is really no more than an expansion of the creek.)

The South Branch of French Creek.—In Concord township, Scotch run, Spring brook, Lilly run, Beaver Dam run, Spencer run, Baskin run and Slaughter run; in Union township, Scotchman's, Wilson, Mulvin, Carroll, Pine, Tolbert and Benson runs.

Conneaut Creek.—In Conneaut township, the East branch, the West branch and Marsh run. The tributaries of the East branch are Frazier's run in Elk Creek township, and Crane and Jackson runs in Conneaut township.

Elk Creek.—In McKean township, the South branch; in Fairview township, Fall's run; in Girard township, Little Elk, Hall's run, Brandy run and Spring run.

Walnut Creek.—In Mill Creek township, Thomas run; in Fairview township, Bear and Beaver Dam runs.

Mill Creek.—In Mill Creek township, Bladen's run.

Four-Mile Creek.—In Harbor Creek township, McConnell run.

Sixteen-Mile Creek.—In North East township, the Borough branch.

Hare Creek, the only tributary of the Brokenstraw flowing from the county, joins that stream in Warren county, below Corry. Its chief inlets in Erie county are Bear creek and Scioto run.

The Conneauttee is joined by the Little Conneauttee a short distance across the line, in Crawford county, and by Pratt and Herbert creeks in Washington township.

PECULIAR FEATURES.

A feature of the lake shore streams deserving of mention is the fact that, while those eastward from Erie City flow directly to the lake in a general northwesterly course, those in and west of the city run almost exactly westward until within a short distance of the lake, when they suddenly turn to the north, and soon after unite with the great current which pours over Niagara. This is the more noticeable of Mill creek, which rises in Greene and empties into the lake at Erie; Walnut creek, which also rises in Greene, flows across Summit, Mill Creek and Fairview townships, and terminates at Manchester; and Elk creek, which rises in Waterford, crosses McKean, Fairview and Girard townships, and enters the lake below Miles Grove. Conneaut creek is to some extent an exception to the rule, rising as it does in Crawford county, flowing nearly due north through Conneaut township to within a short distance of the Girard line, and then bending abruptly westward, forming the boundary line between that and Springfield townships, finally entering Ohio, and, after a devious course, becoming the harbor of Conneaut in that State.

All of the streams in the county were formerly much larger and more reliable than now. The cutting off of the timber has had an alarming effect in drying up the streams, and the seasons of high water, which were once of two or three weeks' duration, now last only a few days.

FRENCH CREEK AND ITS MAIN BRANCHES.

French Creek—the most important in the county—was variously known to the Indians as the Toranadakin and Innungah, the latter word having some reference to "a rude and indecent figure carved upon a tree," which the Seneca tribe found when they came to this region after having conquered the Eriez. The French first gave it the name of the River Aux Bœufs, but changed it to the River Venango, being a corruption of the Indian word Innungah. When the Americans occupied the country, they dropped both the Indian and French names, and gave the stream the plain appellation of French creek. The main stream is created by the junction of the East and West branches in Amity township, just south of the borough limits of Wattsburg. The East branch takes its rise in Chautauqua county, N. Y., near the village of Sherman, and the head of the West branch is usually said to be in Findley's lake, about two miles over the New York line, in the same county, each having a length of about twenty miles. After the junction of the East and West branches, the creek traverses Amity, Waterford and LeBoeuf townships, leaving the county to enter Crawford in the last named. It passes through the whole width of Crawford county from north to south, nearly in the center of the county, and after watering half of Venango county unites with the Allegheny at Franklin. Its length from Wattsburg to Franklin cannot be less than a hundred miles. It was along the valley of this creek that Washington traveled on his visit to the French at Fort LeBoeuf, and he descended the stream in a canoe on his return journey.

Outlet of Lake Pleasant.—This stream, as its name indicates, carries off the excess of water in Lake Pleasant. It issues from the foot of the lake in Venango township, and empties into French creek in Amity, after a course of some three miles.

The South Branch.—The South branch of French creek rises in Concord township, and unites with the main stream in LeBoeuf, a short distance below the Philadelphia & Erie Railroad bridge. It has a length of perhaps twenty miles.

LeBoeuf Creek was known to the French as the River Aux Bœufs, being at first supposed to be the main stream. It was so named from the number of cattle discovered by them on the flats near its mouth. The creek is formed by two stems, the eastern one of which rises on the Venango township line, and flows across Greene township, while the western has its source in Summit township, the two coming together on the northern boundary of Waterford township. On the edge of Waterford borough the creek enters Lake LeBoeuf, from which it issues somewhat increased in size. It joins French creek in LeBoeuf township. From the head of the East branch to the mouth of the creek, the distance is about twenty miles.

French creek, all three of its branches—the East, West and South—and LeBoeuf creek were at one period navigable for rafts and flat-boats, and before the building of good roads were the chief avenues for bringing goods and provisions into the county from the southern part of the State. There has been no rafting to speak of on the branches of French creek for forty years, and the business on the main stream may be said to have suspended about 1861 or '62.

STREAMS THAT EMPTY INTO LAKE ERIE.

Conneaut Creek, the second largest in the county, rises south of Conneautville, Crawford county, flows in a general northerly direction through Conneaut township, nearly to the Springfield line, then turns abruptly westward and continues into Ohio. In Ohio it flows nine miles westward to Kingsville, then makes another sudden bend to the east, and comes back eight miles to Conneaut, where it turns again to the north, and, after a further course of about a mile, empties into Lake Erie not far from the Pennsylvania line, forming Conneaut harbor. It is a very crooked stream, the length from head to mouth being fully sixty miles, while the distance by an air line is not more than twenty-five. The East branch of Conneaut creek rises on the northern edge of Crawford county, flows through Elk Creek township, and unites with the main stream northeast of Albion. In the latter borough it is joined by Jackson creek, which rises on the Elk creek and Conneaut line, near Crawford county. The East branch is about ten miles long, and Jackson creek some five miles.

Elk Creek rises in Waterford township and flows in a general westerly course through McKean, Fairview and Girard townships to Lake Erie, north of Miles Grove. The length of Elk creek is between twenty-five and thirty miles. An effort was made to have the mouth of this stream made the terminus of the canal, and various projects have been advocated for establishing a harbor there. The name of Elk creek was given from the number of elk found in its valley. Falls run starts in Franklin township and joins Elk creek in Fairview. Brandy run rises in Fairview township and unites with Elk creek in Girard. The Little Elk, which also joins the same stream in the latter township, rises in Elk Creek township. They are all small.

Walnut Creek, so named because its banks are lined with walnut trees, rises on the western edge of Greene township, and flows through Summit, Mill Creek and Fairview, entering the lake at Manchester. Its length is about fifteen miles.

Crooked Creek rises in Lockport borough, and flows through Girard and Springfield to Lake Erie, a short distance from North Springfield. It is about ten miles long.

The Head Run is the small stream that enters Presque Isle bay just above the Massasauga pleasure ground.

Cascade Run is historical because a portion of Perry's fleet was built at its mouth. It falls into the bay at the Pittsburgh docks, in Erie City.

Mill Creek is formed by two branches, the one rising in the extreme southeastern section of Mill Creek township, and the other in the northwestern part of Greene. They unite near the southeastern line of the first-named township, and the stream enters the bay within the city limits of Erie. Mill creek cannot be less than eight miles long. It received its name from the fact that the first mill in the county was built at its mouth.

Four-Mile Creek rises in Greene, runs through the western edge of Harbor Creek, and enters the lake in the northeastern corner of Mill Creek township, after a course of about eight miles.

Twelve-Mile Creek heads on the line of North East and Greenfield townships, and joins the lake in Harbor Creek. Its length is about seven miles.

Twenty-Mile Creek rises in Chautauqua county, N. Y., and empties into the lake in North East township, near the State line. It is from sixteen to eighteen miles long.

Besides the above there are a number of smaller streams which are referred to elsewhere.

THE INTERIOR LAKES.

In the interior of the county are three small lakes—LeBœuf, Pleasant and Conneauttee

—all of which lie on the south side of the dividing ridge, and empty into French creek.

Lake LeBœuf.—This lake is in Waterford township, on the southwestern edge of Waterford borough. It is about two-thirds of a mile long, by half a mile wide. The lake is fed by LeBœuf creek and Boyd and Trout runs. Its outlet falls into French creek, in LeBœuf township.

Lake Pleasant, in the southwestern corner of Venango township, is about two-thirds of a mile long by a third of a mile wide, with a depth of five to fifty feet. It has no tributary streams except two tiny rivulets, and is apparently fed by springs in the bottom. The outlet joins French creek in Amity township.

Lake Conneauttee lies on the northern side of Edinboro, and is partly in that borough and partly in Washington township. Its length is about a mile, and its width a little over half a mile. The deepest water is about fifty feet. Big Conneauttee creek enters at its northern extremity, and leaves at the southern, continuing on to Crawford county, where it unites with French creek.

BRIDGES, CULVERTS, ETC.

Where there are so many streams, it follows as a consequence that there must be a large number of bridges. None of these are very extensive or costly compared with the immense structures that are found in other parts of the country. The most expensive public bridges are those which span French creek in Amity, Waterford and LeBœuf townships, and Conneaut creek in Conneaut township, and upon the line between that township and Springfield. The iron bridges of the "Nickel Plate" railroad over Crooked, Elk, Walnut and Twenty-Mile creeks are the longest and costliest in the county.

The Lake Shore railroad formerly overcame the gullies of Twenty-Mile creek, Sixteen-Mile creek, Walnut creek, Elk creek and Crooked creek by extensive trestle works, which have been replaced by substantial culverts and embankments that cost many thousands of dollars. All of the streams upon the line of this road are now spanned by stone culverts or iron bridges.

The aqueducts of the canal over Walnut creek, in Fairview township, and Elk creek, in Girard, were at one time looked upon as wonders of engineering and mechanical skill.

CHAPTER VI.

LAKE ERIE—BAY OF PRESQUE ISLE—MISERY BAY—THE PENINSULA AND THE FISHING INDUSTRY.—[See Chapter V., Erie City.]

THE whole northern front of the county is bordered by Lake Erie and Presque Isle bay, giving a shore line, with the various indentations, of fully forty-five miles. Lake Erie is one of the chain of "Great Lakes," consisting, besides itself, of Lakes Superior, Huron, Michigan, St. Clair and Ontario. No one of these, except St. Clair, is excelled or equaled in size by any body of fresh water elsewhere in the world. Recent measurements give the following results:

"The greatest length of Lake Superior is 335 miles; its greatest breadth, 160 miles; mean depth, 688 feet; elevation above the ocean, 602 feet; area, 82,000 square miles.

"The greatest length of Lake Michigan is 300 miles; its greatest breadth, 108 miles; mean depth, 600 feet; elevation, 581½ feet; area, 23,000 square miles.

"The greatest length of Lake Huron is 200 miles; its greatest breadth, 169; mean depth, 600 feet; elevation, 581½ feet; area, 23,000 square miles.

"The greatest length of Lake Erie is 250 miles; its greatest breadth is 80 miles; its mean depth is 84 feet; elevation, 573⅞ feet; area, 6,000 square miles.

"The greatest length of Lake Ontario is 180 miles; its greatest breadth, 65 miles; its mean depth is 500 feet; elevation, 246½ feet; area, 6,000 square miles.

"The length of all five is 1,265 miles, and the area covered by their waters is upward of 135,000 square miles."

ORIGIN OF THEIR NAMES.

A prominent writer in one of the magazines furnishes the following information:

"The first discoverers of Lake Ontario gave it the name 'St. Louis'; another party of travelers called it 'Frontenac,' after the great pioneer. Then came the English, who preferred to call it 'Ontario.'

"Lake Huron was named after the Indian tribe that lived upon its borders.

"Lake Michigan was for many years called 'Lake Illinois,' from the tribe of Indians who lived near it. In 1719 the pioneer Sener gave it the present name of Michigan.

"Champlain was the first one to describe Lake Superior, and on his map it is called 'Grand Lac.' Later on, the Jesuit fathers called it 'Tracey,' or 'Superior.'

"Lake Erie was named by the Iroquois 'Erike,' from a tribe living on its shores. The French called it 'Raccoon,' or 'Cat Lake,' and on various old maps it appears as 'Lac de Conty,' 'Lac Herrie,' 'Lak Erie,' 'Lac Erocoise,' or 'Eriez.'"

LAKE ERIE DESCRIBED.

Lake Erie receives the outflow of Lake Huron through the St. Clair river, Lake St. Clair and the Detroit river, and empties itself through the Niagara river into Lake Ontario. The outlet of the latter is the St. Lawrence river, which, after a course of some five or six hundred miles, falls into the Atlantic ocean, the volume of water which it carries down being greater than that of the Mississippi. The breadth of Lake Erie is from thirty to eighty-four miles. The narrowest part of the lake is between Long Point, Canada, and Presque Isle, and the widest is between Ash-tabula, Ohio, and Port Stanley, Canada. The average depth of Lake Erie is less than that of any other of the chain, except St. Clair. It has few natural harbors, that of Erie being the best.

In commercial importance, Lake Erie excels any other of the chain. The falls of Niagara, about twenty miles below its foot, forbid direct navigation between Erie and Ontario. This has been remedied in part by the construction of the Welland Ship canal, opened in 1829, and built and operated by the Canadian Government. Vessels pass through this artificial channel to and from Lake Ontario, the St. Lawrence river and the Atlantic ocean. The lake seldom freezes over more than a few miles from shore, but instances have been known of the ice being clogged between Long Point and Presque Isle so that teams and wagons have crossed. Navigation usually closes about the 1st of December and opens early in April. Several winters are recorded when vessels have sailed every month of the year. [See chapter on lake navigation.] It is subject to fluctuations of several feet in the height of the water, according to the direction of the wind and the amount of rainfall on the upper lakes.

CURIOUS PHENOMENA.

Some puzzling phenomena are reported by old settlers along the shores of the lake. Just after sunset on the 30th of May, 1823, several swells were observed at the mouths of Otter and Kettle creeks, Canada, being twenty miles apart, and the water suddenly dashed to a height of nine feet at the former point and of seven at the latter. The weather was fine and the lake had previously been calm. A similar incident was witnessed at the mouth of Sixteen-Mile creek in 1820, at that of Cunningham creek, Ohio, in 1826, and again at that of Grand river, Ohio, in 1830. At the second point named the water rose fifteen and at the third eight feet. Water-spouts are of frequent occurrence, as many as three having been seen at one time. A whirlwind was experienced at Conneaut, Ohio, in September, 1839, which lifted the water of the lake to a height of thirty feet. Three monster waves are reported as having dashed upon the dock at Madison, Ohio, the first of which was fifteen or twenty feet high. "In 1844 or 1845 a wave came into Euclid creek fifteen feet in height, carrying everything before it. * * * The Toledo Blade recorded a change of ten feet on December 5, 1856." The records of lowest water are for 1808, '18, '34 and '95, and of highest for 1813, '38 and '58.

BAY OF PRESQUE ISLE.

The Bay of Presque Isle, forming the harbor of Erie—the only one in the county—is a beautiful body of water, about four and one-half miles long, with a breadth ranging from a mile and a quarter to a mile and a half. The long and narrow sand bank which divides it from the lake is known as the Peninsula, or in French as Presque Isle, meaning "nearly an island." Within a hundred years the bay extended by a narrow channel half a mile further westward than it does now. The entrance to the bay is at its eastern end, between two long piers, which create an artificial channel 200 feet wide. Before the government improvements were made the mouth of the bay was nearly a mile in width, and obstructed by a bar which afforded only eight to ten feet of water. Now the largest vessels upon the lake can enter easily, and when within the bay are secure against the worst storms. Three lighthouses direct mariners to the entrance, while the course of the channel is made clear by a series of range lights. The greatest depth of water in the bay is nearly opposite the Pittsburg docks, where the lead touches bottom at twenty-seven feet.

Misery Bay is a small subdivision of the bay proper at its northeastern extremity. Its name was suggested by Lieut. Holdup during the war of 1814, when the vessels of the Lake Erie squadron were anchored there. The gloomy weather that prevailed, and the uncomfortable condition of the crews, made the title eminently appropriate. Within this little bay were sunk two of the vessels of Perry's fleet, the Lawrence and Niagara. The former was raised and taken to the Centennial Exhibition in 1876; the latter still lies at the bottom of the bay on the east side. Both of the bays freeze over in winter, and usually continue closed until about the 1st of April. [For a further account of the bay, harbor and peninsula see Erie City.]

THE PENINSULA.

Presque Isle, or "The Peninsula," as it is best known, which forms the harbor of Erie, is a low sand formation about six miles long, and varying in width from three hundred feet, at the "Head," or place where it joins the mainland, to a mile and a half in its widest part. It is covered with trees and bushes, representing nearly every variety in the north, and contains several small "ponds," lakes and lagoons. Large sums of money have been spent to prevent the heavy fall and spring waves from washing through the peninsula at its narrow points. A break occurred during the winter of 1828-9, another during that of 1832-3, and a third in November, 1874, all of which were promptly closed at the cost of the U. S. Government. Constant vigilance is required to keep the storms from breaking through the neck of the peninsula, a result which, it is generally thought, if not speedily corrected, would cause great injury to the harbor. Several attempts have been made to propagate willows for the purpose of strengthening the neck, but they have not been successful, though a considerable growth of those trees has sprung up naturally. It was at one time contemplated to open a channel from the west into the harbor and a good deal of money was expended in that direction. After a few years of experiment, the project was given up as impracticable. It is a matter of local tradition that several vessels entered the bay through the entrance thus created. The peninsula is constantly eroding on its north and widest part, and extending at its eastern projection. [See Erie City.]

OWNERSHIP OF THE PENINSULA.

The extracts below, from a communication written by Henry W. Babbitt, of the General Land Office at Washington, are of historical value. After speaking of the purchase of this section by Pennsylvania, a full account of which is given further on, he says:

"By act of Legislature of February 4, 1869, the State of Pennsylvania conveyed the said Presque Isle to Marine Hospital (the predecessor of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home) at Erie, Pa. (Congressional Record, 49th Cong., 1st Sess., page 3,790). By act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania of May 11, 1871, title to said Peninsula or Presque Isle was tendered to the United States Marine Hospital, at Erie, Pa. (Ibid).

"By act of Congress, approved August 5, 1886 (U. S. Statutes, v. 24, page 312), the secretary of war is authorized and directed to receive and accept title from said Marine Hospital as tendered by said legislative enactment of May 11, 1871; $37,500 being the sum appropriated to pay for the same.

"From the letter of December 7, 1889, on this subject, from Thomas Lincoln Casey, brigadier general, chief engineer U. S. A., to Hon. B. F. Gilkerson, second comptroller U. S. treasury department, I am advised that the deed of said Marine Hospital, conveying title to said Peninsula, or Presque Isle, to the United States, is dated May 25, 1871; that the acting judge advocate of the U. S. army, on the 18th of November, 1886, rendered an opinion that the acceptance of said deed, under the provisions of said act of Congress of August 5, 1886, might be signified by entering upon and taking possession of the land in behalf of the United States; that the honorable secretary of war approved this opinion and directed, December 14, 1886, that the necessary action be taken. Accordingly, in pursuance of this order, the land was entered upon, and taken possession of, in behalf of the United States, by the war department," (which now controls the same).

Capt. James Hunter, of Erie, has been custodian of the Peninsula, appointed by the U. S. government, since 1886.

FISH AND FISHING BUSINESS.

From Capt. John Fleeharty's valuable and interesting contribution to the work issued by the State Fish Commissioners in connection with their exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition, the following facts are gathered:

"Ever since the appearance of the white man on the shore of Lake Erie it has been noted for the quantity, variety and fine quality of its fish. Long before the advent of the whites the Indian was aware and appreciated this fact, and fish in connection with game was his whole food supply. In addition to the fish in the lake, all of the small streams emptying into it abounded with brook trout and other species of small fish. The writer when a boy has taken them within half a mile of the Union depot in a small stream coming down from the ridge, and emptying into Mill creek in the neighborhood of Sixteenth and State streets. Big Cascade creek also abounded with them. * * * Upper Mill creek, Walnut creek and Trout run were noted for their fine fishing. In fact, without particularizing, all of the streams in Erie county were prolific in fish, and all of them contained many brook trout.

"When the pioneers located on Presque Isle, in 1795, they had to resort to fishing in their log canoes from the lake and bay for the purpose of adding to their food supply, and the soldiers in the forts east of Mill creek laid in a large supply each season for their own use. * * * The bay of Presque Isle abounded in all varieties of lake fish, particularly the black bass, and all fish were taken with the hook and line prior to 1830. * * * The ponds in the Peninsula, and Pike pond on the south side of the bay, near the harbor entrance, were the spawning grounds for a large variety of fish. Pike pond was rated for the number and size of the grass pike. * * * The black bass and lake pike have always been the game fish of the lakes, and trolling in a school of black bass is the finest sport for a tour fisherman that can be conceived. * * *

"Formerly perch abounded in the bay, particularly in Misery bay; but they are by no means as plentiful now, and yet they are not nearly as scarce as black bass in proportion. Rock bass and sunfish were some years ago exceedingly abundant. The different varieties of pike indigenous to the lakes formerly were in great numbers, but are not now nearly as numerous. The herring are also not nearly as plentiful as formerly, although they are still caught in large quantities. It used to be the occupation during the winter months of many persons to fish for them through the ice, and as many as five to eight hundred persons have been seen fishing for them through the ice in the bay, and in the lake near the piers.

"In 1852 Captain Nash, a fisherman from Mackinac, took from there to Dunkirk, N. Y., two Mackinac fish boats, with gill nets and complete outfit, and began fishing at that point as an experiment. He set his nets about eight miles northwest from the harbor, and his first catch was a large one of white fish. * * * It was mentioned in the Dunkirk, Buffalo and Cleveland papers of the day as the first catch of white fish on Lake Erie, and Captain Nash positively informed the writer of this. * * * As soon as it became known that white fish had been taken in Lake Erie people began fishing for them in these waters. Previous to finding the white fish it had been the custom all along the lake for persons who could afford it to send to Mackinac or Detroit every fall for a barrel, half barrel or kit of sugar-cured white fish for winter use.

"The muskallonge used to be quite plentiful in this vicinity. The largest one taken at this point was sixty-two pounds; the next largest forty-four pounds. * * * Only a few years ago sturgeon were considered of no use, and were taken to the peninsula and buried. Thousands of them have been buried there. To-day they are worth two dollars and fifty cents each."

An account of the rise and progress of the fishing interest, now one of the most important in the city, is given in one of the chapters devoted to Erie.

GENERAL ACCOUNT OF THE FISH AND FISHING IN LAKE ERIE.

The following article by an unknown writer in the New York Sun is worthy of preservation:

"No other body of fresh water on the globe produces so large a quantity of fresh fish as Lake Erie, and Sandusky, Ohio, is the greatest market for fresh fish in the world. About 2,000,000 pounds of sturgeon alone are handled at Sandusky every year, nearly one-third of which are taken in the vicinity of that place. Three-fourths of that immense quantity of sturgeon are taken by Buffalo fishermen. Tons of sturgeon roe are spiced and pickled at Sandusky annually, and the trade in isinglass made from the air bladders of that fish is an important one. A sturgeon's roe will weigh from twenty to sixty pounds. Three-quarters of the Sandusky caviare is sent to Germany, and is exported from that country back to this in large quantities, the same as the finest English dairy cheese is made up in Cattaraugus county, sent to England and shipped back here again. Sandusky gets ten cents a pound for her caviare, and lays by quite a snug pile annually from its sale. Yet it was not until 1865 that the sturgeon was looked upon with even a small degree of favor by lake fishermen. Now smoked sturgeon is found not only in the markets of all the large cities and towns, but in country stores also, while fresh sturgeon is one of the highest-priced of fresh water fishes.

"Spawning Grounds.—In none of the other great lakes do the conditions for fish seem to be so favorable as in Lake Erie. This is due in a great measure, fish culturists think, to the variations in the depth which are peculiar to that lake. The western end is shallow, and thus provides vast areas for spawning grounds. The deep water at the eastern end is an almost boundless retreat for the half-grown young. The line between deep and shallow water seems to be drawn at Cleveland, for west of that city the water is not more than sixty feet deep anywhere, and the average depth will perhaps fall below forty. East of that line the water grows rapidly deeper until it reaches a depth of 225 feet in some places.

"Trout, Muskallonge and Herring.—There is something singular in the distribution of fishes in Lake Erie. The lake trout, one of the most valuable of lake fishes, is rare at the best in Lake Erie, but it is never taken west of Erie. On the other hand, pike and muskallonge are taken only west of Erie. If a fisherman is after lake herring, he knows he will be wasting his time if he sets his nets in the eastern waters. He seeks this beautiful and delicious fish at or west of Erie. The lake herring is the lesser white fish of Lake Erie. Here is another funny thing; at least it may seem so to those who don't know the reason. While Erie herring fishermen are hauling in fish by the ton in April and May, and getting a good many all along through the summer, the fishermen further west know better than to wet their nets during these months, for they wouldn't get herring enough to make a smell in a frying pan. When fall comes, though, the Erie fishermen know enough to take out their nets and keep them out, and the Sandusky and other western fishermen put their's in. In the western waters the champion month for catching herring is November. The reason for this is that in that month the fish are moving in enormous schools on to the spawning grounds around Bass Island and grounds further west. A similar situation exists in the matter of white fish. The most profitable months for taking them from the Erie deep water fisheries are July and August, and the shallow water fishermen to the westward don't get a chance at them until November.

"Muskallonge Decreasing.—One of the most lamentable facts about the fish of the lakes is that the muskallonge, that king of game fishes, is decreasing in numbers every year. The home of this great fish is in the deep waters of the lakes. It is only when it is on its annual spawning migration to the streams and tributaries of the lakes that the sportsman with rod and line comes in contact with the muskallonge. It ascends those streams to spawn, and when that duty is performed the gigantic pike turns its head homeward again, and seeks once more the depths of the lakes. It is not due to the fishing that the muskallonge is growing rarer every year in the lakes, in the lakes, but to the defilement of the spawning grounds by the sewage of towns and the refuse of manufacturing establishments.

"Lake Sturgeon.—There is something also that is playing hob with the sturgeon of Lake Erie, and one of these days, if the sturgeon fishermen don't mend their ways, they will wake up and find their ugly but valuable fish one of the has-beens. Sturgeon spawn in June along the rocky ledges of the eastern end of the lake and leave deep water the same month. They travel in schools. The favorite method the fishermen have of taking them is by grappling irons. Attaching a far-reaching grappling iron to a long rope, the fisherman throws it overboard and drags it along rowing. When this overtakes a school of sturgeon the grappler knows it at once by the strike the iron makes on a fish. The line is then drawn up hand over hand, and if the grappling hook fixed itself firmly in the sturgeon the fisherman will probably get his fish aboard. If not, it will tear loose, perhaps mortally hurt. Thousands of sturgeons are killed in this way every year and become a dead loss. Lake Erie fish have curious migrations. The sturgeon, the blue pike, and many other species regularly leave their spring and early summer haunts toward the end of July, and seek the Canadian shore of the lake, and it will be useless to look for them in their old haunts again until the coming of the fierce November gales. Soon after the first hard sou'wester the blue pike will appear on its old feeding grounds, and the sturgeon be found nosing around again in Sandusky Bay.

"Lake Fishing.—Fishing in Lake Erie is done with pound and gill nets. The gill net is used almost exclusively by the fishermen at Erie, and, in fact, almost everywhere in the eastern waters. Half the whitefish taken from Lake Erie are caught in gill nets, which is to be regretted, for these gill nets are doing untold damage to the whitefish supply of the lake, on account, not of the fish they catch, but of the fish that are destroyed and wasted by them. The fish are caught by getting fast in the meshes by their gills, hence the name of the net. The fish thus caught soon die. Whitefish are so delicate that a few hours' delay in removing them from the nets makes them worthless. Gill-net fishermen plan to lift their nets every forty-eight hours. Lake Erie is subject to fierce storms that frequently continue several days, during which it is impossible for nets to be lifted. Thus hundreds of tons of choice whitefish, to say nothing of the other varieties, are held in the nets until they are of no use, and have to be thrown away. This feature of gill-net fishing has done more to lessen the number of whitefish in the lakes than any other one thing. The pound net is used almost exclusively in the western waters of the lake, and with the exception of whitefish a large percentage of the fish taken in Lake Erie are caught in pound nets. This device was introduced on Lake Erie at Dunkirk by a man named McClosky, in 1850. There are now several hundred miles of them stretched along the lake, some of the lines being from ten to fifteen miles in length.

"Herring, Etc.—The lake herring is a wonderful variety of fish. In spite of the thousands upon thousands of tons of them that have been taken from Lake Erie in the last few years, they are more abundant than ever, and they are the only lake fish of which that can be said. Sometimes the nets will be so jammed with herring that the markets will be knocked galleywest.

"It is estimated that 6,000 tons of fish are salted along Lake Erie annually, not less than 5,000 tons are frozen, and probably 2,000 tons are smoked. The amount of fish sold from Lake Erie points fresh, which is principally a local trade, will reach 18,000 tons a year. These figures represent the catch of Lake Erie only. The other lakes west of Erie add something like 50,000 tons to the annual total of the supply. While Lake Erie produces more fish than any of the other lakes, the whitefish of Lake Superior surpass those of Lake Erie in quality—as they do all other whitefish. The lake trout of Lake Superior are also the finest in the world. Lake Michigan produces a close second to Lake Erie in whitefish, and exceeds all the other great lakes in amount of lake trout."

CHAPTER VII.

THE INDIANS—EXTERMINATION OF THE ERIEZ TRIBE—PONTIAC'S CONSPIRACY—CAPTURE OF FORTS PRESQUE ISLE AND LEBEUF—AMERICAN OCCUPATION.

THE State Library at Harrisburg contains two old French maps, one printed in 1763 and the other in 1768, in which rude attempts are made to show the leading geographical features of portions of the United States and Canada. Both represent the south shore of Lake Erie as having been peopled by a tribe or nation of Indians known as the "Eriez." A note on the margin of each reads as follows: "The ancient Eriez were exterminated by the Iroquois upwards of 100 years ago, ever since which time they have been in possession of Lake Erie."

This information is corroborated in a French book printed in 1703, describing the voyages of Le Baron de Lahontan, an adventurous Frenchman, who spent ten years among the Indians, commencing in 1683. "The shores of Lake Erie," he says, "are frequented by the Iroquois, the Illinois, the Oumanies, etc., who are so savage that it is a risk to stop with them. The Errieronens and Andestiguerons, who formerly inhabited the borders of the lake, were exterminated by the Iroquois." Incidentally it may be added, he refers to the Massassaugues as a tribe living somewhere near the western end of the lake.

All of the authorities agree that the date of the extermination of the Eriez was somewhere about 1650. It is claimed by most historians that the word Eriez was the Indian expression for wild cat, but a recent writer contends that "this is a mistake, that it does not mean wild cat, but raccoon. The latter were abundant on the lake shore, while the former were rarely seen."

When the French visited this section in 1626 the Eriez were governed by a queen, called in their own language Yagowania, and in the Seneca tongue Gegosasa. The chief warrior of the tribe was Ragnotha, who had his principal location at Tu-shu-way, now Buffalo. The Massassaugas were described by French writers of the period as a tribe living near the western end of Lake Erie.

THE ERIEZ EXTERMINATED.

The war of extermination between the Eriez and the Iroquois occurred about 1650, and was one of the most cruel in aboriginal history. From the opening it was understood by both sides to mean the destruction of one or the other. The Eriez organized a powerful body of warriors and sought to surprise their enemies in their own country. The latter raised a force and marched out to meet the invaders. The engagement resulted in a complete victory for the Iroquois. Seven times the Eriez crossed the stream dividing the hostile lines and they were as often driven back with terrible loss. On another occasion several hundred Iroquois attacked nearly three times their number of Eriez, encamped near the mouth of French creek, dispersed them, took many prisoners, and compelled the balance to fly to remote regions. In a battle near the site of the Cattaraugus Indian mission house, on the Allegheny river, the loss of the Eriez was enormous. Finally a pestilence broke out among the Eriez, which "swept away greater numbers even than the club and arrow." The Iroquois took advantage of their opportunity to end all future trouble with the ill-fated Eriez. Those who were taken captive were, with rare exceptions, remorselessly butchered, and their wives and children were distributed among the Iroquois villages, never again to be restored to their husbands and brothers. The few survivors "fled to distant regions in the West and South, and were followed by the undying hatred of the Iroquois. * * *

Their council fire was put out, and their name and language as a tribe lost."

It is claimed by some that the Eriez were also known by the name of Kah-Kwahs, but the investigations of the writer lead to the belief that this was only a local title given to a tribe located at or near the foot of the lake.

THE IROQUOIS.

After the extermination of the Eriez, the country on the south side of the lake was occupied by the Iroquois, as they were called by the French, or the Six Nations, as they were known to the English. The Six Nations were originally a confederacy of five tribes—the Onondagas, Cayugas, Senecas, Oneidas and Mohawks—and were then styled the Five Nations. In 1712, the Tuscaroras, being expelled from the interior of North Carolina and Virginia, were adopted as a sixth tribe. Their territory stretched from Vermont nearly to the upper end of Lake Erie, embracing the headwaters of the Allegheny, Susquehanna and Delaware rivers, and the seat of their "great council fire" was in the Onondaga valley. The Senecas, who were the most powerful tribe, occupied the western part of the domain, having their headquarters on the Allegheny river, near the line between New York and Pennsylvania. The Indians in the north-western part of this State were Senecas intermixed with stray members from each of the other tribes.

THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH.

When the French and English began to extend their settlements westward, the lake region was under the full dominion of the Iroquois, with the Senecas as the immediate possessors of the soil. Both nations appreciated the importance of having the good will of the Indians, but the adroit French were more successful in winning their friendship than their blunt and less politic competitors. As far back as 1730, the French Indian agent, Joncaire, penetrated this section, adopted the habits of the natives, became one of their number, and "won them over to the French interest." The French built up a considerable trade with the Indians, which yielded an immense profit. The English viewed the projects of the French with mingled jealousy and alarm, sent out numerous agents, and succeeded in some quarters in estranging the Indians from their rivals, but not to any extended degree. Some of their traders were located at LeBœuf (Waterford) when the advance troops of the French reached that point in 1753.

Friendly as the Six Nations were toward the French in a commercial sense, they did not take kindly at first to the occupation of the country by armed bodies of the latter. The expedition of Sieur Marin (or Morang), in 1753, and the erection of forts at Presque Isle and LeBœuf, worked them up to a spirit of bitter resentment. A delegation of Senecas waited upon that officer at LeBœuf to inquire of him "by a belt" whether he "was marching with a banner uplifted or to establish tranquility." He answered that his purpose was to support and assist them in their necessities, and to drive away the evil spirits that encompassed them and disturbed the earth, meaning the English. His manner and conduct appeased them, so that the Allegheny river Senecas zealously assisted the French with horses and provisions.

The Indians of Western Pennsylvania were generally favorable to the French throughout the war. M. de Vaudreil, in a letter from Montreal, dated August 8, 1756, wrote that "the domiciliated Massassaques of Presque Isle have been out to the number of ten against the English. They have taken one prisoner and two scalps, and gave them to cover the death of M. de St. Pierre."

By 1757, the English seem to have won some of the tribes over to their side, for we learn from the Pennsylvania Archives that the French kept "100 men in garrison at Presque Isle, being apprehensive that the English and the Indians might attack them there," and by 1759 the aborigines had reached the conclusion that they could very well dispense with the presence of both. The war closed in 1760, leaving the whole Western country under the domination of the English. Presque Isle was the last of the French forts south of Lake Erie to be abandoned. The parting between the French and the Indians was extremely affecting. The Indians called them their "brethren," and invoked the aid of the Great Spirit to give them a speedy return.

THE CONSPIRACY LED BY PONTIAC.

The most powerful and influential of the Western chiefs was the renowned Pontiac, head of the Ottawa tribe. When the English assumed dominion of the country he was at first distant and sullen toward them; but in time his prejudices seemed to be conquered, and he even rendered some service that led them to believe that they could rely upon his co-operation. His friendship proved, however, to be assumed, and he was quietly at work fomenting a spirit of hostility among the several tribes, and organizing them for concerted action. His plan included a combination of all the tribes west of the Alleghenies, acting in unison with the Six Nations. The conspiracy was conducted with such secrecy and planned with so much skill, that almost before the English knew that hostile measures were on foot nine of the thirteen western forts had been captured, among the number being Presque Isle, LeBœuf and Venango. Niagara, Pittsburg and the two other forts were invested, "but withstood the attacks until relief arrived from the Eastern settlements."

The fort at Le Bœuf was assaulted on the 17th of June, 1763. It was commanded by Ensign Price, who had a force of thirteen men. Finding it impossible to hold the post, they crept out at night, managed to elude the savage enemy, and escaped to Pittsburg. From Le Bœuf the Indians, consisting of about 200 Senecas and Ottawas, marched immediately to Presque Isle, which surrendered on the 22d of the same month. This fort stood upon the bank of the bay, on a point of land just west of the mouth of Mill creek, that has been mainly dug away for railroad and other purposes. The following account of its capture is from Parkman's History of the "Conspiracy of Pontiac."

CAPTURE OF FORT PRESQUE ISLE.

"There had been hot fighting before Presqu'ile was taken. Could courage have saved it, it never would have fallen. * * At one of its angles was a large block-house. * * It was two stories in height, and solidly built of massive timber, the diameter of the upper story exceeding that of the lower by several feet, so that through the openings in the projecting floor of the former the defenders could shoot down upon the heads of an enemy assailing the outer wall below. The roof being covered with shingles might easily be set on fire, but to guard against this there was an opening through which the garrison, partially protected by a covering of plank, might pour water upon the flames. * * And now the defenders could see the Indians throwing up earth and stones behind one of the breastworks; their implacable foes were laboring to undermine the block-house, a sure and insidious expedient, against which there was no defense. * * * * The barrels of water always kept in the block-house were nearly emptied in extinguishing the frequent fires, and though there was a well in the parade ground, yet to approach it would be certain death. The only recourse was to dig one in the block-house itself. The floor was torn up, and while some of the men fired their heated muskets from the loopholes to keep the enemy in check, the rest labored with desperate energy at this toilsome and cheerless task. Before it was half completed, the cry of fire was again raised, and, at the imminent risk of life, they tore off the blazing shingles and arrested the danger. By this time it was evening. The little garrison had fought from earliest daylight without a minute's rest. Nor did darkness bring relief, for the Indians' guns flashed all night long from the intrenchments. They seemed determined to wear out the obstinate defenders by fatigue. While some slept, others in their turn continued the assault, and morning brought fresh dangers. The block-house was fired several times during the day, but they kept up their forlorn and desperate resistance. The house of the commanding officer sank into glowing embers. The fire on both sides did not cease till midnight, at which hour a voice was heard in French, calling out that further defense was useless, since preparations were made to burn above and below at once. Ensign Christie, the officer in command, demanded if any one spoke English, upon which, a man in Indian dress came forward. * * * He said if they yielded they would be saved alive, if not, they would be burned. Christie resolved to hold out as long as a shadow of hope remained, and while some of the garrison slept, the rest watched. They told them to wait until morning. They assented, and suspended their fire. When morning came, they sent out two persons, on pretense of treating, but in reality to learn the truth of the preparations to burn the block-house, whose sides were pierced with bullets and scorched with fire. In spite of the capitulation, they were surrounded and seized, and, having been detained for some time in the neighborhood, were sent as prisoners to Detroit, where Ensign Christie soon made his escape."

INDIANS AND ENGLISH AT PRESQUE ISLE.

During the interval between the summer and fall of 1763 many barbarities were committed by the Indians upon the white settlers. Late in that year a covenant was made with the tribes of New York and Western Pennsylvania, but hostilities, though not upon an extended scale, were soon renewed. Early in 1764, a British army of 3,000, under the command of Gen. Bradstreet, passed up the lake in canoes. They stopped at Presque Isle and dragged their canoes across the neck of the peninsula to avoid paddling several miles around. After relieving Detroit, Bradstreet returned to Presque Isle, where, on the 12th of August, 1764, he made a treaty of peace with the Delawares and Shawnees, which was scarcely signed till it was broken.

No authentic record of events in this section can be found from that date until 1794. The fort appears to have been abandoned, and it is probable that the English made no attempt to exercise more than nominal control over the country.

OCCUPIED BY THE AMERICANS.

The treaty of peace with Great Britain, which secured the independence of the United States, was made in 1783. By its provisions the British Government abandoned all claim to the western country, and agreed to withdraw its troops and yield up the forts, block-houses and other military structures. In October, 1784, a treaty was made with the Six Nations by which they relinquished to Pennsylvania all of the northwestern part of the State to a line parallel with the southern boundary of New York. By another treaty, made on the 9th of January, 1789, with a portion only of the Six Nations, they acknowledged "the right of soil and jurisdiction to and over" the Triangle "to be vested in the State of Pennsylvania." Some dissatisfaction having arisen among the Seneca tribe in consequence of this act, the Legislature empowered the Governor to draw a warrant for $800 in favor of Cornplanter, Half Town and Big Tree, in trust for the use of the tribe and in full satisfaction of all demands, in consideration of which the said chiefs, on the 3d of February, 1791, signed a release of all claims against the State for themselves and their people forever. On the 3d of March, 1792, the Triangle was purchased from the United States by the Commonwealth, and a month later an act of Assembly was passed to encourage its settlement by white people. State troops, to facilitate this purpose, were first stationed at LeBeuf early in May, 1794.

INDIAN THREATS.

The treaty which ceded the territory embraced in the Triangle was very obnoxious to a large portion of the Six Nations, among the most hostile being Joseph Brant, head of the Mohawk tribe. On the other hand, Cornplanter, the Seneca chief, was friendly to the Americans, and it was mainly through his efforts that another war with the Indians was averted. Early in 1794, an Indian council was held at Buffalo to protest against the settlement at Presque Isle, on the result of which, it was given out, would depend the issue of peace or war. To this council Cornplanter, whom Brant was seeking to win to his side, was invited. It was attended by Gen. Israel Chapin, United States Superintendent of the Six Nations, who wrote to the Secretary of War: "I am afraid of the consequences of the attempt to settle Presque Isle at present. The Indians do not acknowledge the validity of the Cornplanter sale to Pennsylvania." By request of the council, he went to LeBeuf on or about the 26th of June, 1794, accompanied by Mr. Johnson, British Indian Agent, and twenty-five chiefs and warriors, the purpose of the latter being to remonstrate with the State officers at that post against the placing of garrisons in the Northwest. The representatives of the Six Nations claimed to be anxious to live at peace with the United States, but pretended to be much disturbed by the presence of the troops, fearing that it would involve them in strife with the hostile Indians. They were assured by Ellicott and Denny, the state officers at LeBeuf, that the soldiers could not move from there till ordered, and that they would await the commands of their superiors in authority. The council adjourned without accomplishing anything of a definite character. Another Indian council was held at LeBeuf on the 4th of July, 1794, at which the chiefs reiterated their purpose of preventing a garrison being stationed at Presque Isle.

WAYNE'S VICTORY SETTLED ALL TROUBLE.

The savages continued to be sullen and threatening for some months. Several raids were made upon the southern settlements, among others on Cussewago, near the Crawford county line. A Mr. Dickson, living near there, was fired upon by a party of Indians on the 10th of September. Twelve soldiers, sent from LeBeuf for the protection of the settlement, were fired upon, and the Indians drove off several horses.

Mutters remained in this alarming condition till October, when news reached LeBeuf of Wayne's victory on the Maumec. This had a wonderful effect on the Indians of our vicinity. A number of warriors of the Six Nations had taken part in the fight, and the reports they brought back of Wayne's fighting qualities had a disheartening effect upon their comrades. The Senecas, who had been strongly urged to go into the war, gave the messengers a peremptory refusal. Notwithstanding this decision, disturbances broke out on several occasions. On Saturday, the 29th of May, 1795, four men who were journeying from LeBeuf to Presque Isle were attacked near the present Union depot in Erie, by a party of Indians, in retaliation, it is supposed, because some of their friends had been fired upon by whites along the Allegheny. Ralph Rutledge, one of the number, was killed and scalped, and his body was interred on a piece of rising ground on the west side of State street, near its junction with Turnpike. His son was also shot and scalped, but lived to be taken to the fort at LeBeuf, where he died. This is the last Indian difficulty known to have taken place in the county.

A treaty of peace was effected with the Western tribes by Gen. Wayne at Greenville, Ohio, on the 3d of August, 1795, and another was made with the Six Nations at Canandaigua, N. Y., on the 9th of November ensuing.

VILLAGES AND GRAVEYARDS OF THE INDIANS.

There is no evidence that any large number of Indians ever made their abode within the limits of Erie county after it became known to the whites. In 1795, there were Indian villages on Mill creek, and at the head of the bay, each numbering from twenty to thirty families. Other villages were located at Waterford and Cranesville.

On the Scouler farm, in the southeast corner of the city, was an Indian graveyard, where the boys of fifty years ago used to dig into the mounds and gather bones as relics. The first field east of the burial ground was cleared in 1821. For some years after it was a frequent thing to find stone hatchets and other rude implements of the aborigines. It was the custom for many years after the incoming of the whites, for parties of Indians to camp near by and indulge in peculiar rites in commemoration of their ancestors. The last Indian encampment was in June, 1841, when about a dozen Indians spent a couple of days on the site.

Indian graves, arrow heads, pieces of pottery, and other curiosities have been found in a grave on the Hunter place, bordering French creek, in LeBœuf township. A graveyard was opened on the Ebersole farm, east of Erie City, which contained numerous bones, beads and other Indian remains. All of the bodies were in a sitting position. Graves have been found in spots all along the Ridge road from Ebersole's woods to State street in Erie.

Early in the century occasional bodies of Indians passed through the county on friendly visits between the New York and the Western tribes. Parties of 100 to 150 red men, women and children are known to have encamped on the parks in the City of Erie.

INDIAN PURCHASES.

The land in the northern and northwestern parts of the State was purchased from the Six Nations by commissioners appointed by the Legislature, who met in conference with the Indians at Fort Stanwix (now Rome), N. Y., and concluded a treaty in October, 1784. This action of the Six Nations was confirmed by a treaty made with the Delawares and Wyandots at Fort McIntosh in January, 1785. Neither of these purchases covered the territory known as "The Triangle."

CHAPTER VIII.

LIFE AND DEATH OF GEN. ANTHONY WAYNE.

THIS work would not be complete without a sketch of the career of Gen. Anthony Wayne, whose last sickness, death and burial are inseparably associated with the history of Erie county.

He was born in the township of Eastown, Chester county, Pa., on the 1st of January, 1745. After receiving a good education, he embraced the profession of a surveyor, at which he was engaged for a brief period in his native county. A member of the Assembly in 1774, and of the Provincial Convention in the same year, to consider the troubles with Great Britain, he became one of the Committee of Safety in 1775. Believing war to be inevitable, he resigned his civil office in September, and, after some time spent in military study and practice, raised a regiment, of which he was commissioned colonel. His first service was with Gen. Sullivan in the spring of 1776, and he bore a brilliant part in the battle of Three Rivers, Canada. When the expedition returned, he was placed in charge of the posts of Ticonderoga and Mt. Independence. In February, 1777, he was commissioned a brigadier general, and served with Washington in the New Jersey and Delaware Valley campaign. On the 20th of September, 1777, while stationed at Paoli, near his Chester county home, with a detachment of 1,500 men, his position was betrayed by some Tories to the enemy, who fell upon him during the night and killed and wounded one-tenth of his command. A court-martial convened by Gen.

Martin Thony

Washington, at Wayne's urgent request, decided, after minute investigation, that he did everything that could be expected from an active, brave and gallant officer under the orders which he then had.

CALLED "MAD ANTHONY" BECAUSE OF HIS
DASH AND BRAVERY.

He led the attack of the American right wing at Germantown, and received the special applause of Washington for his conduct at Monmouth. His surprise and capture of Stony Point, one of the strongest British positions on the Hudson, was among the most gallant events of the war, and elicited resolutions of thanks from Congress and the Legislature of Pennsylvania. His last sphere of duty during the Revolution was in Georgia, from which he succeeded in driving the enemy. He was distinguished in all councils of war for supporting the most energetic measures, from which, and from his wonderful dash and courage, he won the popular appellation of "Mad Anthony." At the close of the war, he retired to his farm in Chester county. He was called in 1789 to serve in the Pennsylvania convention, and in that body earnestly advocated the adoption of the United States Constitution.

SUBDUES THE WESTERN INDIANS.

In the year 1792, Wayne was commissioned major general by President Washington and assigned to the Northwestern frontier, for the purpose of forcing the Indians into subjection. After various minor engagements, he gained a signal victory over the savages on the Maumee, in August, 1794. His skill, promptness and bravery made a strong impression among the hostile tribes, and they hastened to sue for forgiveness. He was then appointed sole commissioner to deal with them on the part of the United States, and effected a treaty of peace at Greenville, Ohio, in 1795, which paved the way for the settlement of northwestern Pennsylvania and northern Ohio.

HIS LAST SICKNESS AND DEATH AT ERIE.

In the fall of 1796 he embarked in a small vessel at Detroit for Presque Isle, now Erie, on his way homeward. During his passage down the lake, he was attacked with the gout, which had afflicted him for some years, and been much aggravated by his exposure in the Western wilds. The vessel being without suitable remedies, he could obtain no relief, and on landing at Presque Isle was in a dangerous condition. By his own request, he was taken to the block house, the attic of which had been fitted up as a sleeping apartment. Dr. J. C. Wallace, who had served with him as a surgeon during his Indian campaign, and who was familiar with his disease, was then stationed at Fort Fayette, near Pittsburg. The general sent a messenger for the doctor, and the latter started instantly for Erie, but on reaching Franklin was astonished to learn the news of his death, which occurred on the 15th of December, 1796. Two days after his death the body was buried, as he directed, in a plain coffin, with his uniform and boots on, at the foot of the flagstaff of the block house. The top of the coffin was marked, "A. W., O. B., December 15, 1796," in round-headed brass tacks, driven into the wood. At the time of his decease Wayne was the ranking officer of the United States army.

THE REMAINS DUG UP AND REMOVED.

In the spring of 1800, Col. Isaac Wayne, the general's son, came to Erie, through what was then a wilderness, for the purpose of removing the remains to Chester county. He engaged Dr. Wallace, the same one spoken of above, to attend to the disinterment and preparation of the remains, and gave him entire charge of the operation, declining to witness it on the ground that he preferred to remember his father as he knew him when living. On opening the grave, all present were amazed to find the body petrified, with the exception of one foot and leg, which were partially gone. The boot on the unsound leg had decayed and most of the clothing was missing. Dr. Wallace separated the body into convenient parts and placed them in a kettle of boiling water until the flesh could be removed from the bones. He then carefully scraped the bones, packed them in a small box and returned the flesh, with the implements used in the operation, to the coffin, which had been left undisturbed, and it was again covered over with earth. The box was secured to Col. Wayne's sulky and carried to Eastern Pennsylvania, where the contents were deposited in a second grave among those of the general's deceased relatives.

In explanation of Dr. Wallace's course, it is argued that the remains had to be placed in as small a space as possible, to accommodate the means of conveyance. Col. Wayne is reported to have said, in regard to the affair: "I always regretted it; had I known the state the remains were in before separated I think I should certainly have had them again deposited there and let them rest, and had a monument erected to his memory."

SITE OF HIS BURIAL PLACE MARKED.

About the year 1878 Dr. Germer, for many years Health Officer of the city of Erie, ascertained the site of the block-house, which had long before disappeared with the other structures, and digging down at the foot of the flagstaff readily found the grave and coffin. The lid of the coffin, with the initials, etc., before described, upon it, was fairly preserved, but the balance had mostly rotted away. Largely through the efforts of Dr. Germer and Capt. Welsh, an appropriation was obtained from the Legislature, with which a substantial log block-house in imitation of the original was built in 1880, to mark the site, and the grounds were surrounded by a railing with cannon at each of the four corners. The grave has been neatly and substantially built up with stone, and the coffin lid, with other relics of the early days, is carefully sheltered within the block house—the whole forming as appropriate a monument to the hero, as could well be devised. The block-house is on the grounds of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, and is open to visitors during certain hours of each week day.

WAYNE'S FINAL RESTING PLACE.

The Wayne family burial ground, where the bones of the gallant General repose, is in the cemetery attached to St. David's Episcopal Church, at Radnor, Delaware county, not far from the Chester county line, less than an hour's walk from Wayne Station, on the Pennsylvania R. R., and fourteen miles west from Philadelphia. A plain granite shaft, with a pyramid cap, has been erected over the remains, one side of which contains the following inscription:

CHAPTER IX.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH OCCUPATION.

AS early as 1611-12 Sieur de Champlain, an adventurous Frenchman, ascended the chain of lakes as far as Lake Huron. At a period extending from 1620 to 1640 the Indians were visited by numerous French Catholic priests, among whom were the celebrated Joliet and Marquette, on the double mission of spreading the Gospel and promoting the interests of their king and nation. In 1679 La Salle launched the schooner Griffin in Niagara river, and sailed with a picked body of men to Green bay, in Lake Michigan. A French post was established at Mackinaw in 1681. The dominion of the country was not wholly given over to the French by the English until 1753. The French did a large trade with the Indians by exchanging beads, goods, provisions, guns and ammunition for furs.

Although the French possession was undisturbed for years, it must not be inferred that it was quietly acquiesced in by the English. The French claimed that their discovery of the St. Lawrence and the Mississippi entitled them to the ownership of the territory bordering upon those streams and their tributaries. The English claim was based upon a grant by King James I, in 1606, to "divers of his subjects, of all the countries between north latitude 48 deg. and 34 deg., and westward from the Atlantic ocean to the South sea," and also upon purchases of Western lands made from the Six Nations by commissioners from Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, representing the mother country. A long and sometimes acrimonious controversy was waged between the foreign departments of the two nations over the question.

FIRST FRENCH SOLDIERS ON LAKE ERIE AND THE OHIO.

Up to the year 1749 the French had done nothing of an official nature looking to the occupation of the country between Lake Erie and the Ohio. Their discoverers had taken possession of it long before in the name of the king, and from that time it had been a sort of common tramping ground for traders of both nations, without being directly subject to the control of either. In the year named Capt. Celeron, with a detachment of 300 men, was sent by the Captain General of Canada to "renew the French possession" of the Ohio and its tributaries. He came up Lake Erie to the mouth of Chautauqua creek, from which point he crossed over to the Allegheny. Descending the latter river and the Ohio as far as the Muskingum, he deposited leaden plates at the mouths of some of the most important streams, as a "monument of renewal of possession," and as a mark for the guidance of those who might follow him. The expedition caused much alarm among the Indians, who regarded it as the beginning of a scheme to "steal their country," and also created much commotion throughout the English colonies.

FORMAL FRENCH OCCUPATION.

The final occupation by the French began in the spring of 1753. The expedition was in charge of three young officers—Sieur Marin, commander, and Major Pean and the Chevalier Mercier, assistants—and consisted, according to various authorities, of from 250 to 300 men. The little army marched up Lake Erie by land and ice to Presque Isle, where it was decided to build a fort and establish a base of supplies. The reasons which prompted the selection of Presque Isle were the short portage to Lake LeBœuf and the facility with which canoes could be floated down French creek from the latter to the Allegheny.

On the 3d of August the fort at Presque Isle was finished, the Portage road, six leagues long, was "ready for carriages," the storehouse, half way across, was in a condition to receive stock, and the fort at LeBœuf was nearly completed. The Indians willingly assisted in the transportation of the stores. Among the soldiers was one Stephen Coffin, who gives the following account of the French Fort Presque Isle: "It was of chestnut logs, squared and lapped over each other to the height of fifteen feet, about 120 feet on the sides, with a log house in each corner, and had gates in the north and south sides."

GEORGE WASHINGTON AT LEBŒUF.

The Commander-in-Chief, Marin, died in the fall of 1753, soon after the main body of the troops started on their return to Canada, leaving the forts at Presque Isle and Le-Bœuf respectively in charge of Capt. Ripart and Commander St. Pierre. The latter was visited during the winter by a gentleman who afterward rose to the first place in American love and history. This was no less a personage than George Washington, then in his twenty-first year, who was accompanied by Christopher Gist, an experienced white frontiersman, and one Indian interpreter. They reached LeBœuf on the 11th of December and remained till the 16th, during which time Capt. Ripart was called over from Presque Isle to confer with Washington and St. Pierre. Washington's treatment, though formal, was courteous and kind, and he has left on record in his journal a warm compliment to the gentlemanly character of the French officers. The object and result of Washington's mission are given in the following letters, the first being the one he was charged with delivering to the Commander-in-Chief of the French forces by Gov. Dinwiddie, of Virginia, and the second the reply of St. Pierre:

DINWIDDIE'S LETTER.

OCTOBER 31, 1753.

SIR: The lands upon the River Ohio, in the western part of the colony of Virginia, are so notoriously known to be the property of the crown of Great Britain that it is a matter of equal concern and surprise to me to hear that a body of French forces are erecting fortresses and making settlements upon that river within His Majesty's dominions. The many and repeated complaints I have received of these acts of hostility lay me under the necessity of sending, in the name of the King, my master, the bearer hereof, George Washington, Esq., one of the Adjutants-General of the forces of this dominion, to complain to you of the encroachments thus made, and of the injuries done to the subjects of Great Britain, in violation of the law of nations and the treaties subsisting between the two crowns. If these facts are true and you think fit to justify your proceedings, I must desire you to acquaint me by whose authority and instructions you have lately marched from Canada with an armed force and invaded the King of Great Britain's territory, in the manner complained of; that, according to the purport and resolution of your answer, I may act agreeably to the commission I am honored with from the King, my master. However, sir, in obedience to my instructions, it becomes my duty to require your peaceable departure; and that you would forbear prosecuting a purpose so interruptive of the harmony and good understanding which His Majesty is desirous to continue and cultivate with the most Christian King, etc.

ROBERT DINWIDDIE.

ST. PIERRE'S REPLY.

FROM THE FORT ON THE RIVER AU BŒUF, }
December 15, 1753. }

SIR: As I have the honor of commanding here as chief, Mr. Washington delivered to me the letter which you wrote to the commander of the French troops. I should have been glad that you had given him orders, or that he had been inclined to proceed to Canada to see our General, to whom it better belongs than to me to set forth the evidence and the reality of the rights of the King, my master, to the lands situate along the River Ohio, and to contest the pretensions of the King of Great Britain thereto. I shall transmit your letter to the Marquis Duquesne. His answer will be a law to me. And if he shall order me to communicate it to you, sir, you may be assured I shall not fail to dispatch it forthwith to you. As to the summons you send me to retire, I do not think myself obliged to obey it. Whatever may be your intentions, I am here by virtue of the orders of my General, and I entreat you, sir, not to doubt one moment but that I am determined to conform myself to them with all the exactness and resolution which can be expected from the best officer. I do not know that in the progress of this campaign anything has passed which can be reputed an act of hostility, or that is contrary to the treaties which subsist between the two crowns; the continuance whereof interests and pleases us as much as it does the English. Had you been pleased, sir, to descend to particularize the facts which occasioned your complaint, I should have had the honor of answering you in the fullest, and, I am persuaded, the most satisfactory manner, etc.

LEGARDEUR DE ST. PIERRE.

[A further account of Washington's visit will be found under the heading of Waterford.]

WAR AT LAST.

Both sides were busily engaged during the winter in preparing for the war which was now inevitable. The French plan was to establish a chain of fortifications from Quebec along Lakes Ontario and Erie and the waters of French creek and the Allegheny to the junction of the last-named stream with the Monongahela, and thence along the Ohio and Mississippi, to the Gulf of Mexico. Provisions, arms and ammunition were sent from Quebec to Presque Isle, and from there distributed to the lower forts.

As soon as the weather would permit in the spring of 1754, troops were moved by both sides in the direction of the Ohio. The first French detachment to reach Pittsburgh, then known as the "Forks of the Ohio," was on the 17th of April. It consisted of 1,000 French and Indians, with eighteen cannon. Their route was from Presque Isle to LeBœuf, thence down French creek and the Allegheny. The English had put up a stockade at the "Forks of the Ohio," now Pittsburgh, during the winter, which was unfinished and guarded only by an ensign and forty-one men. This small body immediately surrendered. On the 3d or 4th of July, 500 English capitulated to the French at Fort Necessity, in Fayette county, after an engagement of about ten hours. The French seem to have been uniformly successful in the campaign of 1754. Deserters from their ranks reported that the number of French and Indians in the country during the year was about 2,000. On the 9th of July, 1755, Braddock's defeat took place near Pittsburgh, an event which raised the French hopes to a pitch of the utmost exultation, and seemed for the time to destroy all prospect of English ascendancy in the West.

DuQuesne, in a letter of July 6, 1755, says: "The fort at Presque Isle serves as a depot for all others on the Ohio. * * * The effects are put on board pirogues at Fort LeBœuf. * * * At the latter fort the prairies, which are extensive, furnish only bad hay. * * * At Presque Isle the hay is very abundant and good. The quantity of pirogues constructed on the River AuBœuf has exhausted all the large trees in the neighborhood."

THE FRENCH IN 1756-7 AND 1758.

A prisoner who escaped from the Indians in 1756 described Fort LeBœuf as "garrisoned with 150 men, and a few straggling Indians. Presque Isle is built of square logs filled up with earth; the barracks are within the fort, and garrisoned with 150 men, supported chiefly from a French settlement begun near it. The settlement consists of about one hundred families. The Indian families about the settlement are pretty numerous; they have a priest and schoolmaster, and some grist mills and stills in the settlement." The village here referred to was on the east bank of Mill creek, a little back from the lake, almost on a line with Parade street.

No events of importance occurred in this section in 1757 or '8. The forts were garrisoned by small bodies of men; but a considerable force was maintained on the line between the lake and the Ohio. The supplies for the troops were brought by canoes, creeping along the south shore of the lake, from Buffalo. The forts were allowed to get out of repair and could easily have been captured.

FORTS PRESQUE ISLE AND LEBŒUF.

An Indian spy employed by the English in 1758 gave some additional particulars of the fort at Presque Isle. "It is," he said, "square, with four bastions * * * The wall is only of single logs, with no bank within—a ditch without. * * * The magazine is a stone house covered with shingles, and not sunk in the ground, standing in the right bastion, next the lake. * * * The other houses are of square logs." Fort LeBœuf he described as of "the same plan, but very small—the logs mostly rotten. Platforms are erected in the bastions, and loopholes properly cut; one gun is mounted in a bastion, and looks down the river. It has only one gate, and that faces the side opposite the creek. The magazine is on the right of the gate, going in, partly sunk in the ground, and above are some casks of powder to serve the Indians. Here are two officers, a storekeeper, clerk, priest and 150 soldiers, who have no employment." [See Waterford.]

THE ENGLISH VICTORIOUS.

The English made sufficient progress during 1758 in the direction of the Ohio to compel the French to evacuate Fort DuQuesne on the 22d of November. By this time the Indians had lost confidence in the triumph of the French, and many were either siding with the English or pretending to be neutral. The English finally besieged Fort Niagara below Buffalo, compelling the French to withdraw 1,200 men from Detroit, Presque Isle and Venango for its defense. Its capture by the English astonished and terrified the French in this section. A messenger reached Presque Isle from Sir William Johnson, the victorious English commander, notifying the officer in charge that the other posts must surrender in a few days. The French began making hasty preparations for departure. Their principal stores at Presque Isle were sent up the lake August 13, 1759, and the garrison waited a brief time for their comrades at LeBœuf and Venango, when the entire army left in batteaux for Detroit.

The English did not take formal possession of Forts Presque Isle and LeBœuf until 1760, when Major Rogers was sent out for that purpose. A treaty of peace was signed at Paris in 1763, by which the French ceded Canada and confirmed the Western country to the British Crown. The Indians did not take kindly to the British, and eventually made a concerted effort to drive them out of the country, as detailed in another chapter, but failed of success.

AN ENGLISH ARMY AT ERIE.

Col. Bradstreet, with an army of 3,000, arrived at Presque Isle in August, 1764, and met a band of Shawnees and Delawares, who agreed to articles of peace and friendship. These proceedings seem to have been entered into by the savages merely as a deception, for in a short time they renewed hostilities. Another expedition, under Col. Boquet, was fitted out, and punished the troublesome tribes so severely that they were glad to accept the conditions offered them.

The independence of the United States was acknowledged by Great Britain in 1783. By the treaty of peace the mother country abandoned all pretensions to the western region. Her officers in Canada, however, still retained a hope of the ultimate return of the colonies to the protection of the British crown. The English had, by this date, won the confidence of the Indians, who were kept hostile to the Americans by representations that Great Britain would yet resume possession of the country. As late as 1785 Mr. Adams, our minister at London, complained to the English Secretary of State that though two years had elapsed since the definitive treaty, the forts at Presque Isle, Niagara and elsewhere on the northern frontier were still held by British garrisons. The actual American occupation dates from 1795.

THE FRENCH FORTS AND ROAD.

While the British occupied the country they put Fort Presque Isle in repair and kept it up until after our National Independence was acknowledged, soon after which it fell into ruin. Its site was easily traceable as late as 1863, by mounds and depressions on the bank of the lake near the mouth of Mill creek on its west side.

The fort at LeBœuf stood within the present limits of Waterford borough, on the brow of the hill above LeBeauf creek, nearly in line with the iron bridge across that stream. A ravine, which has since been partially filled up, extended along its north side, down which flowed a rivulet, leading Washington to describe the fort as standing on "a kind of an island." Practically the same site was successively occupied by the English and Americans.

The French road commenced at the mouth of Mill creek, extended up that stream a short distance, and then struck off to the higher land, nearly following the line of Parade street. A branch road led from the south gate of the fort, and connected with the main road in the hollow of Mill creek. From the southern end of Parade street the main road ran across Mill Creek township to the present Waterford plank road. Leaving the latter, the French road took across the hills and terminated at the gate of Fort LeBœuf, near where the Eagle Hotel stands. The route known as the French road in Summit township is understood to be exactly on the line of its historical original. The road was laid out thirty feet wide, and was "corduroyed" throughout most of its length.

CHAPTER X.

PURCHASE OF THE TRIANGLE.

THE limits of Pennsylvania are described in the charter granted by King Charles II. to William Penn as "three degrees of latitude in breadth, and five degrees of longitude in length, the eastern boundary being the Delaware river, the northern the beginning of the three and fortieth degree of northern latitude; on the south a circle drawn at twelve miles distance from New Castle (Delaware) northward and westward unto the beginning of the fortieth degree of northern latitude, and then by a straight line westward to the limits of longitude above mentioned."

The boundaries of the State were long a subject of earnest and sometimes bitter dispute. Fifty years before the grant to Penn, King James I. granted to the Plymouth Company "all the land lying in the same latitude with Connecticut and Massachusetts, as far west as the Pacific ocean, not previously settled by other Christian powers." Under the construction placed upon this clause by Connecticut, more than one-third of Pennsylvania, including the whole northern part, belonged to that province. The dispute was finally settled by the action of Congress, which appointed Commissioners in 1782, to investigate the subject, who reported that "Connecticut has no right to the land in controversy."

THE LINES BETWEEN NEW YORK AND PENNSYLVANIA.

Pennsylvania and New York, in 1785, mutually agreed upon commissioners to determine and establish the east and west boundary line between the two States, being the forty-second degree of latitude. The commissioners who finally did the work, which was confirmed by the Legislatures of both States, were Andrew Ellicott on the part of Pennsylvania, and James Clinton and Simeon DeWitt on that of New York. They surveyed the entire line from the Delaware to Lake Erie, planting a stone every mile, with the distance from the river marked upon it, and marking mile trees in the same manner. The distance from the point of departure to where the north line of Pennsylvania terminated on the shore of Lake Erie in Springfield township, this county, was found to be 259 miles and eighty-eight perches.

THE TRIANGLE.

The charter of New York defined its western boundary as extending from the south shore of Lake Erie to the forty-second degree of latitude, on a line drawn from the western extremity of Lake Ontario. In determining this line it became necessary to agree whether the "western extremity of Lake Ontario" included Burlington bay, or was at the Peninsula dividing the latter from the lake. Andrew Ellicott and Frederick Saxton, the surveyors sent out to establish the boundary, decided upon the peninsula as the proper point from which to draw the line, and the western boundary of New York was therefore fixed at twenty miles east of Presque Isle. This left a triangular tract, which was not included in the charter of either State, and which was variously claimed by New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut.

HOW PENNSYLVANIA SECURED THE TRIANGLE.

At an early period, Gen. William Irvine was sent to the Northwest by the authorities of Pennsylvania to examine into the quality of its lands and report upon the best manner of putting them into the market. While upon this tour he was struck with the fact that the State had no harbor upon the lake, and the great desirability of securing the one at Presque Isle. On his return to the East he interested a number of intelligent and progressive citizens in the project of purchasing the Triangle. After a protracted negotiation,

New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut released their claims to the United States government, and the latter, in turn, conveyed the tract to Pennsylvania. The contract for the sale of the Triangle, made between the Representatives of the United States and Pennsylvania was ratified by Congress on the 4th of September, 1788. On the 18th of April, 1791, the Governor was authorized by the Legislature to complete the purchase. March 3, 1792, a patent was issued to the State, signed by George Washington as President, and Thomas Jefferson as Secretary of State. The consideration was $151,640.25, in Continental certificates, which were much below par.

THE INDIANS OFFENDED.

Pending the negotiations with the general government, the State authorities proceeded to secure a release of the Triangle tract from the Six Nations, which was only effected after a protracted effort. The conference for this purpose with the chiefs and warriors of the several tribes was held on the 9th of January, 1789, and the deed from the Indians appears to have been signed sometime during the same month. The price paid to the Six Nations was $2,000 by Pennsylvania and $1,200 by the United States.

The cession of the Triangle gave offense to a portion of the Indians, who claimed that they had not been fairly represented in the council. There was a great deal of talk among them of resisting its occupancy by the State, and at one time matters looked really serious. On the 3d of February, 1791, Cornplanter, Half Town, and Big Tree executed a second instrument, in which, after reciting the dissatisfaction that existed among the Seneca nation, they acknowledged the receipt of $800 as full satisfaction of all claims and demands by their nation against the commonwealth.

VALUABLE INFORMATION.

The Triangle, which includes the city of Erie and the Peninsula, extends some forty-three miles in a straight line along the lake, and is about eighteen miles in breadth along the New York boundary, tapering from there to a point in Springfield township, between four and five miles east of the Ohio line. It embraces 202,187 acres, and the United States received pay for it at the rate of three-fourths of a dollar per acre. The townships included in the Triangle are North East, Greenfield, Venango, Harbor Creek, Greene, Summit, Mill Creek, a small portion of Springfield, about two-fifths of Girard and McKean, and four-fifths of Fairview. The terminus of the Triangle on the shore of Lake Erie was marked by a stone in Springfield township. [See map.]

Some time ago a corps of engineers, representing both States, renewed the monuments marking the boundary between New York and Pennsylvania, many of which had been destroyed or lost sight of. In the execution of their task they made use of blocks of Quincy granite, about four feet long and six inches square at the top, set ordinarily at a distance of one mile apart. The letters "Pa." and "N. Y.," about two inches long, face Pennsylvania and New York respectively.

CHAPTER XI.

FIRST STEPS TOWARD THE SETTLEMENT OF ERIE COUNTY.

IN the year 1785 David Watts and William Miles were sent under the auspices of the State to survey the Tenth Donation District, embracing portions of Waterford, Wayne and Amity townships. March 24, 1789, it was resolved by the General Assembly that not exceeding 3,000 acres should be surveyed at Presque Isle, LeBœuf and two other places for the use of the commonwealth. This was followed by the settlement law of the 8d of April, 1792, which provided for the survey of all the lands north and west of the Allegheny and Ohio rivers and Conewango creek, and their sale upon terms that will be stated in another chapter. The Pennsylvania Population Company, formed at Philadelphia March 8, 1792, purchased a large tract of land in the Triangle with the object of inducing settlement. On the 8th of April, of the same year, the Legislature passed and Gov. Mifflin approved a bill for laying out a town at Presque Isle.

MEASURES FOR PROTECTION.

Rumors of Indian hostilities induced the Legislature February 25, 1794, to authorize the Governor to station a detachment of the State troops at such place or places at or near Presque Isle as might be necessary for the protection of the settlers. In accordance with its provisions, Gov. Mifflin, on the 1st of March, 1794, issued a circular to the Brigade Inspectors of Washington, Westmoreland and Allegheny counties, requiring them to raise men to serve eight months, unless sooner discharged, with a stipulation that, if necessary, they should continue in service till the next meeting of the Legislature. Four companies were to be organized within the district, of whom one captain, one lieutenant, two ensigns, six corporals, six sergeants and ninety-five privates were to be detached for the Presque Isle expedition. The command was given to Capt. Ebenezer Denny, of Allegheny county, who is presumed to have seen service in border warfare.

Gen. William Irvine and Andrew Ellicott had been appointed commissioners to lay out a road from Reading to Presque Isle. On the day the circular was issued they were notified that Albert Gallatin had been associated in their appointment, and that they three were to lay out the town contemplated by the act of 1792. The Governor's instructions desired them to "promote peace, order and friendship with the peaceable Indians or British garrison, should any intercourse * * be produced by accident or necessity." Capt. Denny was required "to comply with every lawful request of the commissioners," and was further reminded that the objects of his appointment were "strictly those of protection and defense."

LE BŒUF OCCUPIED AND AN INDIAN WAR FEARED.

The troops took possession of "the forks of French creek, about two miles below the old post of LeBœuf," on or near the 11th of May, where they built a small block-house, pending the cutting out of the logs which obstructed the navigation of the stream. From this point, Gen. John Wilkins, of Pittsburgh, who accompanied the expedition, wrote on the day of their arrival that "the British are determined to oppose the progress of the State troops from LeBœuf to Presque Isle by sending a number of Indians and English to cut them off." In a few days more the detachment reached LeBœuf, where they immediately erected two small picketed block-houses, which, Wilkins reported, "will make them sufficiently strong until the re-enforcement arrives under Capt. Denny." The latter event did not occur until the 24th of June.

While these events were in progress, a letter reached Gen. Knox, Secretary of War under President Washington, from Gen. Israel Chapin, the United States Commissioner to the Six Nations, to the effect that the British "feel very much alarmed at the garrisoning of Presque Isle. * * If the garrison destined for that place," wrote Chapin, "is not very strong, it is doubtful whether it will not be attacked." On the 9th of May, Gen. Knox wrote to Wilkins and Denny, cautioning them to "proceed with the utmost vigilance and precaution." The next day, he addressed a communication to Gen. Mifflin, stating that "affairs are critically circumstanced between the United States and the Six Nations," and giving it as the opinion of the President, "on mature reflection, that it is advisable to suspend for the present the establishment of Presque Isle." In accordance with this suggestion, the Governor rescinded all orders for drafting men, directed the commissioners, who had not yet left Pittsburgh, to postpone further proceedings, and commanded Denny's detachment to remain at LeBoeuf, "unless it should be found necessary to retire from the station in order to prevent an actual contest with the friendly Indians."

The people of the western counties were highly indignant at the suspension of the proceedings for settlement, and, without knowing the reason that prompted Gov. Mifflin, hotly condemned what they called his timidity. The Governor, however, soon righted himself by spreading the intelligence abroad that he had acted in pursuance of a special request from President Washington.

THE GARRISON AT FORT LEBŒUF.

Three days after reaching LeBoeuf, Denny asked for "a few militia," on the ground that a number of his men at LeBoeuf were ill with the flux and others had to be detached. To the Governor he reported on the 4th of July: "Have been busy erecting a stockade post. Moved the detachment in yesterday. Am now beyond the power of any body of hostile Indians. None have been around since the party on the 21th. Hear firing almost daily, but whether friends or foes is uncertain." Ellicott, who must have arrived soon after Denny, wrote on the 1st of August: "The Indians consider themselves as our enemies and that we are their's. From this consideration they never come near the garrison except as spies and then escape as soon as discovered." Denny notified the Governor on the same date that they had four block-houses at LeBoeuf, on two of which a six-pounder was mounted, the others not being calculated for cannon. Over each gate was a swivel. The officers occupied their tents in the absence of more agreeable quarters. The situation he regarded as excellent, except that there was a hollow way parallel with the rear of the works and within gunshot that would "cover any number of Indians." This was examined every morning before the gates were thrown open. The troops at the post numbered one hundred and ten, inclusive of officers. [See Waterford.]

PEACE SECURED.

A treaty of peace was concluded with the Six Nations at Canandaigua, N. Y., on the 11th of November, in which they unreservedly acknowledged the title of Pennsylvania to the Triangle, and for themselves and their successors released all claims upon the lands within its limits. This happy conclusion was much hastened by the terror of Anthony Wayne's name and victories. As soon as tidings of the treaty reached Washington, word was sent by the President to Gov. Mifflin that the temporary obstacles to the establishment were removed. It being too late in the season when the good news arrived at LeBoeuf to do any effective work at Presque Isle, the detachment remained at the former post until early spring. The force there on the 27th of March, 1795, consisted of ninety-nine in all.

Maj. Craig, of the United States Army, stationed at Pittsburgh, reported to the Secretary of War on the 24th of May, 1795, that "the State troops at LeBoeuf are nearly all disbanded. Capt. Buchanan," he says, "who commanded at that post (Denny having left), arrived here yesterday with the greater part of the men under his command, who are all discharged." In Buchanan's communication to the Governor, of June 19, he states, however, that Lieut. Mehaffey, with twenty-six men, marched from Pittsburgh with Commissioners Irvine and Ellicott toward LeBoeuf. He, Buchanan, expected to start that day with the balance of the escort. This would imply that a new set of men had been enlisted for the purpose.

WATERFORD AND ERIE LAID OUT.

While Ellicott was at LeBœuf, in the summer of 1794, he laid out the town of Waterford, the plan of which was afterward sanctioned by the Legislature. An act for laying out towns at Presque Isle, LeBœuf, Venango and Conewango (Erie, Waterford, Franklin and Warren) passed that body in April, 1795, being the second in regard to the first-named place.

About two hundred men from Wayne's army landed at Presque Isle early in the spring of 1795, under command of Capt Russell Bissell. They set to work at once, cutting timber for block-houses, of which two were erected on the bluff overlooking the entrance to the harbor, just east of the mouth of Mill creek. They also cleared a good deal of land to raise corn for the use of the garrison. A sawmill was put up, and by 1796 a warehouse and stockade were completed. The supplies of food, etc., for some time were mainly obtained by vessel from Detroit.

In June, 1795, Ellicott and Irvine, commissioners, arrived, accompanied by a corps of surveyors, and escorted by State troops under command of Capt. John Grubb, to lay out the town of Erie, which was done during that year. Troops remained at the post until 1806, but were few in number. [See chapters relating to Erie city and the several townships for a further account of the early settlements.]

CHAPTER XII.

LEGISLATION IN REGARD TO LAND AND EARLY LAND SALES.—[See Chapter I, Erie City.]

ONE month after the cession of the Triangle, in 1792, the General Assembly passed an act for the encouragement of emigration to the newly-acquired territory. This measure, generally known as the "actual settlement law," was in substance as follows:

The lands north and west of the Rivers Ohio, Allegheny and Conewango are to be sold to any person who will cultivate, improve and settle the same, or cause them to be improved and settled, at £7 10 shillings for every hundred acres, with an allowance of six per cent. for roads, etc.

On application to the Land Office, giving a description of the lands applied for, a warrant is to be issued to the applicant for any quantity not exceeding 400 acres.

No title shall vest in the lands unless the grantee has, prior to the issuance of his warrant, made or caused to be made, or shall, within two years next after the same, make or cause to be made an actual settlement thereon, by clearing, fencing and cultivating at least two acres for every hundred in one survey, and erected a house, and resided or caused a family to reside on the same for the five years immediately following; and in default thereof new warrants shall be issued to actual settlers; "provided, that if any such actual settler or grantee shall, by force of arms of the enemies of the United States, be prevented from making such settlement, or be driven therefrom, and shall persist in his endeavors to make such actual settlement, then, in either case, he and his heirs shall be entitled to have and to hold such lands in the same manner as if the actual settlement had been made."

The lands actually settled and improved to remain chargeable with the purchase money and interest, and if the grantee shall neglect to apply for a warrant for ten years after the passage of this act, unless hindered by death or the enemies of the United States, the lands may be granted to others by warrants reciting the defaults.

LAND COMPANIES.

Almost simultaneously with the enactment of the "actual settlement law," the Pennsylvania Population Company was formed at Philadelphia, to settle and dispose of the lands in the Triangle. John Nicholson, the famous land speculator, was elected president. Previous to the organization of the company, Mr. Nicholson had applied for 800 warrants in the Triangle. These he transferred to the corporation, which paid for them and perfected the title. The company took up about 500 additional warrants in Erie and Crawford counties. The lands located by the Population Company embraced the whole Triangle except the town plot of Erie, the Erie State Reserve, the Garrison Reserve and Irvine's Reservation, in addition to tracts in the southern part of Erie county. The corporation was dissolved in 1814, after the last war with Great Britain, and the remaining lands and unsettled contracts for the sale of lands passed into the hands of individual members.

The Population Company, on the 8th of March, 1793, issued instructions to their agents, offering the following inducements to settlers in Erie county :

A gift of 150 acres each to the first twenty families that shall settle on French creek.

A similar gift to the first twenty families that shall settle in "the Lake Erie territory."

A gift of 100 acres each to the next fifty families (after the first twenty) who shall settle on French creek.

A similar gift to the next fifty families (after the first ten) who shall settle in the Lake Erie territory.

The settlers were privileged to locate on any lands of the company they chose, and if they cleared at least ten acres, and erected a comfortable house thereon, in which they resided, were to have a deed after two years. In case they were driven off by the Indians, no part of the two years was to run against them, and no title was to vest in any person or his heirs who abandoned the lands before receiving his deed.

Thirty thousand acres were offered for sale to actual settlers, in tracts not exceeding 300 acres, at $1 per acre, payable at the option of the purchaser, in three years, with interest the last two years.

THE HOLLAND LAND COMPANY.

Some time after the Revolution, a number of wealthy gentlemen living in Holland, organized under the name of the Holland Land Company, purchased of Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution, vast bodies of land in western New York and northwestern Pennsylvania. They also took up by warrant large tracts in Erie and Crawford counties, besides those purchased from Morris. The warrants were issued to them at various times in 1793, 1794 and 1795. The lands of the Holland Company in Erie county lay south of the Triangle line, across the entire width of the county. Maj. Alden, the first agent of the company, was succeeded by William Miles. In 1815, H. J. Huidekoper, a member of the corporation, came on from Holland, took charge of the company's affairs, and established his office in Meadville. The lands remaining unsold were bought by Mr. Huidekoper in 1833. William H. Seward, afterward famous as a statesman, was agent for the company in western New York, having his office in Mayville or Westfield.

ANOTHER COMPANY FORMED AT HARRISBURG.

An association was formed at Harrisburg on the 13th of August, 1796, under the title of the Harrisburg and Presque Isle Company, for the purpose of "settling, improving and populating the country near and adjoining to Lake Erie." It was limited to ten persons, among whom were Richard Swan, Thomas Forster, Samuel Laird and William Kelso. The company purchased thirty-seven Erie in-lots and eight outlots at the public sale at Carlisle in August, 1796. They also obtained possession of 430 acres at the mouth of Walnut creek, and of some land at Waterford. Mr. Forster came on as agent, in company with Mr. Swan, in the spring of 1797, and located on the Walnut creek property. By the fall of that year, they had a sawmill erected, and the next year a gristmill was commenced, which was completed in the fall of 1798. They laid out a town at the mouth of the creek and called it Fairview. Both Forster and Swan took up large tracts in the vicinity on their own account. The title to a portion of the company's property was disputed by the Population Company, and, after long litigation, the Walnut creek site was sold at Sheriff's sale.

TENTH DONATION DISTRICT.

The Legislature in 1783 directed the laying out of large tracts in the northwestern and western portions of the commonwealth, to be known as Donation Districts, and to be applied in fulfillment of a promise made on the 7th of March, 1780, "to the officers and privates belonging to this State in the Federal army, of certain donations and quantities of land, according to their several ranks, to be surveyed and divided off to them, severally, at the end of the Revolutionary war." The Donation District was divided into sub-districts, each of which was known by its number. The Tenth District commenced about a mile east of the borough of Waterford and extended eastward across the present townships of Amity and Wayne to the Warren county line. It was surveyed on the part of the State, in 1785, by David Watts and William Miles. Few of the soldiers for whose benefit the lands were set aside, moved onto them, the patents having generally been disposed of at a small price to speculators.

THE MORAVIAN GRANT.

In recognition of its services in maintaining missionaries at its own expense among the Indians, the State, in 1791, voted to "the Society of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the heathen"—commonly known as the Moravians—two grants of land of 2,500 acres each, with allowance, to be located respectively on "the River Conneaut, near the northwestern part of the State," and on "the heads of French creek." The society located 2,875 acres in LeBoeuf township, which they named the "Good Luck" tract, and 2,797 in Springfield and Conneaut townships, to which they gave the title of "Hospitality." These lands were leased until 1850, when they were purchased by N. Blickensderfer and James Miles. The first agent for the Moravians was William Miles, of Union, who was succeeded by his son James as manager of the "Hospitality," and by John Wood, of Waterford, as manager of the "Good Luck" tract.

STATE RESERVATIONS.

In laying out the lands of the county for settlement, the State reserved four tracts, which are briefly described below:

Irvine's Reservation consisted of 2,000 acres in Harbor Creek township, donated by the commonwealth to Gen. William Irvine as a special reward for his services during the Revolution.

The tract which became known as the Erie State Reserve commenced at the head of the bay and ran south three miles, then eastward, parallel with the lake, eight miles, then back to the lake shore three miles, excluding the lands originally embraced within the limits of Erie. These lands were first surveyed by George Moore in 1795, again by John Cochran in 1796-97, and finally by Thomas Rees in 1799. The latter laid them out in three tiers—the one furthest from the lake consisting of 150-acre tracts, the second mainly of 130-acre tracts, and the last, or nearest to the lake, of tracts ranging from 50 to 100 acres. None of the lands were sold until 1801, and but few before 1804. Those who bought earliest paid from $3 to $4 per acre; one-fifth in hand, the balance in four equal annual payments. One party who owned 411 acres deeded the whole of it, in 1804, for a male slave. The final sale of the Reserve lands took place on the first Monday of August, 1833, when a number of fifty-acre tracts on the bank of the lake west of the city were purchased at from $9 to $22 per acre.

The Reserve at Waterford consisted of 1,800 acres in Waterford township, and 400 in LeBoeuf. Provision for its sale was made in the act of 1799, and most of the tract had passed into private hands by 1804.

The Garrison tract was provided for in the act of 1794, for laying out a town at Presque Isle, which directed the Governor to reserve "out of the lots of the said town so much land as he shall deem necessary for public uses; also, so much land, within or out of the said town, as may, in his opinion, be wanted by the United States for the purpose of erecting forts, magazines, arsenals and dock-yards." It lies on the bank of the bay on the east side of Mill creek, and is now occupied in whole or in part by the grounds of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home.

LANDS SET ASIDE FOR ACADEMY PURPOSES.

By an act passed in 1799 it was provided that in the sales of land 500 acres should be held back from each of the Reserve tracts at Erie and Waterford "for the use of such schools and academies as may hereafter be established by law" in those towns. The lands that fell to the share of Waterford Academy lie in LeBoeuf township, at the mouth of LeBoeuf creek. They were sold off about 1840.

The Erie Academy grant was in Mill Creek township, and extended some distance along the Waterford turnpike, commencing near the present southern boundary of the city. The land has mainly passed into the hands of private owners.

SURVEYORS AND LAND AGENTS.

Under the act of 1792, the territory north and west of the Ohio, Allegheny and Conewango rivers, was divided into five districts, each of which was assigned to a deputy surveyor. District No. 1, embracing the Triangle, was assigned to Thomas Rees, Jr., who left for Presque Isle in the spring of 1798. After long delay, on account of Indian threats, he reached his destination; but the attitude of the Indians was so hostile, and reports of Indian murders so frequent, that he abandoned the field and returned to the East. In the spring of 1795 Mr. Rees came on again, put up a tent at the mouth of Mill creek, and resumed his duties as a surveyor. About this time he was also appointed agent for the Population Company. He employed several assistant surveyors during the season, among whom were George Moore and David McNair, and by fall reported the sale for the company of 74,790 acres to some 200 different persons. Few of these, however, made an immediate settlement upon the land, through fear of Indian depredations. Mr. Rees resigned both as deputy surveyor and agent for the Population Company at the beginning of 1796, and from that date until the spring of 1802 served the State as commissioner for the sale of lots, etc. He was succeeded in the first position by John Cochran, and in the second by Judah Colt, who continued until his death. Mr. Rees took up a large tract in Harbor Creek township, about one mile south of the present Buffalo road, to which he cut a highway in 1797. The several parties who acted on the part of the State for the sale of lots and lands were as follows:

Wilson Smith was appointed deputy surveyor for the town of Erie April 25th, 1800.

Judah Colt, who had been appointed to succeed Mr. Rees as agent of the Population Company, came on in that capacity on the 1st of July, 1796. He was assisted in his duties by Elisha and Enoch Marvin. Singular to state, they preferred the high lands in Greenfield township, and the first permanent settlement in the county, outside of Erie and Waterford, was made early in 1797 at Colt's Station. [See Greenfield.] Mr. Colt died in 1832, and left a large estate. His successor for most of the members of the company was Judah C. Spencer. A few of the members placed their interests in charge of Thomas H. Sill. Dunning McNair established an agency for the company on Conneaut creek in 1797, later in the year than the settlement in Greenfield, and made contracts with most of the early settlers of that region.

CHANGE IN THE SETTLEMENT LAW.

In 1794 the Legislature passed an act which provided that no further applications should be received by the land office for any unimproved land within the Triangle. This was after it had been ascertained that the territory was not sufficient to supply the warrants issued to the Population Company. The same act directed that no warrant should issue after the 15th of June of that year, for any land within the Triangle except in favor of persons claiming by virtue of some settlement and improvement having been made thereon, and that all applications remaining in the land office after that date for which the purchase money had not been paid, should be void. It was stipulated, however, that applications might be "received and warrants issued until the 1st of January, 1795, in favor of any persons to whom a balance might be due in the land office on unsatisfied warrants issued before the 29th of March, 1792, for such quantities of land as might be sufficient to discharge such balances;" provided, that the act should not be "so construed as that any warrants, except those wherein the land is particularly described, should in any manner affect the title of the claim of any person having made an actual improvement before such warrant was entered and surveyed in the Deputy Surveyor's books."

Another act, passed in September of the same year, made it unlawful for any application for lands to be received at the land office, after its passage, "except for such lands where a settlement has been or hereafter shall be made, grain raised and a person or persons residing thereon."

EXTENSIVE LAND SALES.

At an early date David Watts and William Miles, the first surveyors under the State, located 1,400 acres at Wattsburg and 1,200 acres at Lake Pleasant. In 1796, Mr. Miles also purchased four tracts on the lake shore from the Population Company, on which he agreed to place settlers. Martin Strong, who came to the county in 1795 as a surveyor for the Holland Land Company, took up a large tract on the ridge, in Waterford and Summit townships. David McNair chose 800 acres of the Walnut creek flats, at Kearsarge, besides other extensive tracts. He at one time owned some of the most valuable property in the county, including half of what is now South Erie. George Fisher, of Dauphin county, secured a vast body of land in Waterford and Washington townships, and William Wallace, who was the first lawyer in the county, became the owner of numerous tracts in various townships. Many sales were made by the different companies between 1796 and 1799, and by 1800 a good share of the county had passed into the hands of actual settlers, or persons who intended to become such.

THE FIRST PURCHASERS.

LITIGATION OVER LAND.

Mr. Colt's first years as agent of the Population Company were much disturbed by hostile manifestations and costly litigation to maintain the real or assumed rights of the organization. The causes of the troubles, in brief, were as follows: The law of 1792 provided that any actual settler, or grantee in any original or succeeding warrant, who should be driven from the country by the enemies of the United States, and who should persist in the endeavor to make a settlement, should be entitled to hold his lands in the same manner as if an actual settlement had been made. The Population Company and the Holland Company claimed that by their several efforts to occupy the lands in 1793, '94 and '95, they had fulfilled all the conditions of the law. In the spring of 1795, a proclamation was issued by the Governor declaring that the Indians had been conquered, and stating that the northwestern section of the State was open to settlement. The effect of this was to induce a number of people to emigrate to the county, some of whom purchased from the agents, while others set up adverse claims, asserting that the companies had forfeited the lands.

The companies alleged that peace was not really secured until 1796, citing the Rutledge murder as proof. To this the adverse claimants replied that the murder was not committed by the Indians, but was the deed of white men in pay of the company, to relieve them from their embarrassment. The principal seat of the troubles was in Greenfield and North East townships; but they extended in some degree to Conneaut, Harbor Creek and other sections.

The Holland Company also had difficulties with various parties who claimed to be actual settlers. Among those who became involved in litigation with the company was William Miles, who had located and placed settlers upon lands which the company complained had been allotted to them. The Miles suits were ultimately settled by amicable arrangement, and he became the agent of the company.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania decided against the adverse claimants, creating an intense feeling of indignation and disappointment throughout the Northwest. This settled the business, so far as the Population Company was concerned, it being a State corporation, wholly composed of citizens of Pennsylvania. The Holland Land Company, being a foreign concern, brought their action in the United States Circuit Court, where the decision was precisely like that of the State Supreme Court. It was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the other courts were fully sustained in an opinion rendered by Chief Justice Marshall in 1805.

This result settled the dispute for good. There being no further question of title, the county began to fill up rapidly. Some of the adverse settlers left in disgust and despair; but the majority entered into arrangements with the companies to purchase the land which they had improved.

LAND SPECULATION IN 1836.

One of the wildest, if not the most reckless, land speculations ever known in Erie county took place in 1836, being confined mainly to the borough of Erie and vicinity. It grew out of the important internal improvements conceived and set in operation about that time, added to a tremendous over-issue of paper money throughout the country. The canal to Beaver had been surveyed, a charter had been granted for the railroad to Sunbury, and considerable work had been done by the United States Government in building piers and deepening the harbor. A widespread impression sprung up that Erie was destined to become a great city. The charter of the United States Bank at Philadelphia expired in 1836. In the early part of that year, the State Legislature chartered the United States Bank of Pennsylvania with a capital of $35,000,000. This institution established a branch at Erie, erecting the old custom house on State below Fifth street, and the residence adjoining, for a banking office and cashier's house. The stock of the Erie branch, amounting to $200,000, was all taken on the 27th of February, 1836. These matters combined gave an extraordinary impulse to real estate in the borough of Erie. The price of town lots jumped up 100 per cent. In a single week the sales of real estate amounted to over half a million dollars. One lot, purchased in February for $10,000, was resold in Buffalo within a month for $50,000. The speculation lasted until 1837, when the banks failed throughout the Union, causing a terrible revulsion. Although the speculation in this county was limited to Erie and its vicinity, a general spirit of adventure prevailed in the whole nation, and thousands of persons were ruined by their faith in inflation and the speculative tendency of the time. The history of that day is one of the best arguments that can be produced against the theories of those who believe in the issue of a large volume of paper currency without taking proper steps for its redemption and security.

[For an account of the land sales and settlements at Erie, see the chapter on that subject under the heading of Erie City.]

CHAPTER XIII.

FIRST SETTLERS IN THE COUNTY—EARLIEST MARRIAGES, BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

AS may be seen by the preceding chapters, the first known American citizens who located permanently within the bounds of Erie county were Thomas Rees and John Grubb, who reached Erie in the spring of 1795 and remained until their deaths. At a later date in the same year William Miles and William Cook, with their wives, made a settlement in Concord township, near the Crawford county line, where they were the sole residents for some years. A month or so later, Col. Seth Reed, accompanied by his wife and sons, Manning and Charles John, came to Erie in a sail boat from Buffalo, which was piloted by James Talmadge, who took up lands during the season in McKean township. These three ladies were the first white persons of their sex who are known to have resided in the county. The other settlers during 1795 were Rufus S. and George W. Reed, James Baird and children, Mrs. Thomas Rees and Mrs. J. Fairbanks, at Erie; Amos Judson, James Naylor, Lieut. Martin, and Martin Strong, in Waterford; John W. Russell, George Moore and David McNair, in Mill creek; Capt. Robert King and family, William and Thomas Black and Thomas Ford and wife, in LeBoeuf; Jonathan Spanlding in Conneaut; Michael Hare and two men named Ridue and Call, in Wayne; James and Bailey Donaldson, in North East, and James Blair in Girard. So far as the records show, these were the only white people living in the county that year. Among the settlers during the interval between 1795 and 1800 were the following:

1796—Washington township, Alexander Hamilton and William Culbertson; Erie, Capt. Daniel Dobbins; Mill Creek, Benjamin Russell, Thomas P. Miller, David Dewey, Anthony Saltsman and John McFarland; Greenfield, Judah Colt, Elisha and Enoch Marvin, Cyrus Robinson, Charles Allen, Jo-

Reed; North East, William Wilson, George and Henry Hurst and Henry and Dyer Loomis; Springfield, Samuel Holliday, John Devore, John Mershom, William McIntyre and Patrick Ager; Venango, Adam and James Reed, Burrill and Zalmon Tracy; Waterford, John Lytle, Robert Brotherton, John Lennox and Thomas Skinner.

1797—Waterford, John Vincent and William Smith; Wayne, Joseph Hall and — Prosser; Union, Hugh Wilson, Andrew Thompson, Matthew Gray, Francis B. and Robert Smith; Elk Creek, Eli Colton; Venango, Thomas, John and David Phillips; Springfield, Oliver Cross; Fairview, Thomas Forster, Jacob Weiss, George Nicholson, John Kelso, Richard Swan, Patrick Vance, Patrick and John McKee, Jeremiah and William Sturgeon and William Haggerty; LeBoeuf, Francis Isherwood, James, Robert and Adam Pollock; Conneaut, Col. barger and John Dietz; Venango, William Allison and wife; Springfield, Nicholas LeBarger; Fairview, John Dempsey; Conneaut, Abiathar and Elihu Crane; Washington, Peter Kline; Girard, Abraham and William Silverthorn; North East, Thomas Crawford, Lemuel Brown, Henry and Matthew Taylor, William Allison, Henry Burgett, John, James and Matthew Greer; Waterford, Aaron Hinrod.

1790—Waterford, John, James and David Boyd, Capt. John Tracy, M. Himebaugh, John Clemens, the Simpsons and Lattimores; Erie, John Teel; McKean, Lemuel and Russell Stancliff; Summit, Eliakim Cook.

The above is not claimed to be a complete list of the settlers up to 1800, but is as nearly full as can now be obtained. Emigration was slow the first five years in consequence of the land troubles. After 1805, the county commenced to fill up more rapidly, and to attempt to give a roll of the settlers would exceed the limits of a work like this. [See the City, Township and Borough Chapters.]

NATIVITY OF THE PIONEERS.

Most of the people named above were from New England or New York, but quite a number were Scotch-Irish from the southern counties of Pennsylvania, and a few were of Pennsylvania Dutch descent. The New Yorkers were in general from the interior of that State, and the Pennsylvanians from Dauphin, Cumberland, Lancaster and Northumberland counties. The Riblets, Ebersoles, Loops, Zucks, Browns, Stoughs, Zimmermans, Kreiders, and others of that class, came in at a period ranging from 1801 to 1805. From that time the people who settled in the county were almost universally of New England and New York origin until about 1825, when another emigration of Pennsylvania Dutch set in, which continued until 1835 or thereabouts. Among those who located in the county during this period were the Weigels, Warfels, Mohrs, Metzlers, Bergers, Brennemans, Charleses and others whose names are familiar. The foreign element began to come in at a comparatively recent date—the Irish about 1825, and the Germans from five to ten years after. The first settlers were a hardy, adventurous race of men, and their wives were brave, loving and dutiful women.

FIRST MARRIAGES, BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

The earliest marriage was that of Charles J. Reed, of Walnut Creek (Kearsarge), to Miss Rachel Miller, which occurred on December 27, 1797. The earliest recorded birth was that of John R., son of William Black, in Fort LeBœuf, August 29, 1795. Mr. Boardman, of Washington township, was born in the Conneauttee valley the same year.

The earliest known deaths occurred in the years below:

Ralph Rutledge, killed by the Indians at Erie, May 20th, 1795. His son was fatally shot at the same time, and died shortly after, in the fort at LeBœuf.

Gen. Anthony Wayne, in the block-house at Erie, December 15, 1796.

Col. Seth Reed, at Walnut Creek, March 19, 1797.

PRIMITIVE MODE OF LIVING.

The majority, if not all, of the settlers were in moderate circumstances, and were content to live in a very cheap way. They had to depend on the produce of their little clearings, which consisted to a large extent of potatoes and corn. Mush, corn bread and potatoes were the principal food. There was no meat except game, and often this had to be eaten without salt. Pork, flour, sugar and other groceries sold at high prices, and were looked upon as luxuries. In 1798-99, wheat brought $2.50 per bushel; flour, $18 a barrel; corn, $2 per bushel; oats, $1.50; and potatoes, $1.50. The mills were far apart, the roads scarcely more than pathways through the woods, and the grists had to be carried in small quantities on the backs of men or horses. Few families had stoves, and the cooking was done almost entirely over open fires. The beds were without springs and were made up in general by laying coarse blankets upon boxes or rude frames. All clothing was homemade. Every house had a spinning wheel, and many were provided with looms. Liquor was in common use, and there was seldom a family without its bottle, for the comfort of the husband and the entertainment of his guests.

The first buildings were log cabins constructed of unhewn logs laid one upon another with the crevices filled in with mud. These gave way, as the condition of the people improved, to structures of hewn timber in which mortar was substituted for mud. Hardly any of the houses were plastered. Many were without window glass, and wall paper was unknown. As saw mills increased, frame buildings of a better character were substituted for the log cabins, and occasionally a brick or stone structure was erected, which was talked about in all the country round as a marvel of architecture. The people were separated by long distances; for years there were few clearings that joined. In every house there was an immense fire-place, in which tremendous amounts of wood were consumed, which practically cost nothing.

When a new residence or barn was to be erected, the neighbors were invariably invited to the raising. On such occasions, liquor or cider was expected to be freely dispensed, and it was rarely the case that the invitations were declined. These raisings were the merry-making events of the day, and generally brought together twenty-five to fifty of the settlers, who worked hard, drank freely, and flattered themselves when they were through that they had experienced a jolly good time.

A HARD BUT HEALTHY LIFE.

All the cooking and warming, in town as well as in country, was done by the aid of fires kindled on the brick hearths or in the brick ovens. Pine knots or tallow candles furnished the light for the long winter nights, and sanded floors supplied the place of rugs and carpets. The water used for household purposes was drawn from deep wells by the creaking sweeps. There were no friction matches, by the aid of which a fire could be easily kindled, and if the fire went out upon the hearth over night, and the tinder was damp, so that the spark would not catch, the alternative remained of wading through the snow a mile or so to borrow a brand from a neighbor. Only one room in any house was warm, in all the rest the temperature was at zero during the extreme winter nights. The men and women undressed and went to their beds in a temperature as cold as our barns and woodsheds.

Churches and schoolhouses were sparsely located, and of the most primitive character. One pastor served a number of congregations; and salaries were so low that the preachers had to take part in working their farms to procure support for their families. The people went to religious service on foot or horseback, and the children often walked two or three miles through the woods to school. There were no fires in the churches for a number of years. When they were introduced they were at first built in holes cut in the floors, and the smoke found its way out through openings in the roofs. The seats were of unsmoothed slabs, the ends and centers of which were laid upon blocks, and the pulpits were little better. Worship was held once or twice a month, consisting usually of two services, one in the forenoon and one immediately after noon, the people remaining during the interval and spending the time in social intercourse.

WILD BEASTS AND FISH.

A dense forest covered the county, when it was opened to settlement, which abounded with deer, bears, wolves, panthers, rabbits, foxes, raccoons, squirrels, opossums, minks, skunks, martins, and some wild cattle, or "buffalo," as they were called by the French. Every man kept a gun and went into the woods in pursuit of game whenever the supply of food in his household ran short. Deer were abundant for years. There were numerous deer-licks, where the animals resorted to find salt water, at which the hunters lay in wait and shot them down without mercy. Packs of wolves often surrounded the cabins and kept the inmates awake with their howling. A bounty was long paid for their scalps, varying in amount from $10 to $12 per head. Accounts are given of sheep being killed by wolves as late as 1813. Occasionally a panther or wild cat terrified whole neighborhoods by its screaming. The last panther was shot at Lake Pleasant by Abram Knapp in 1857.

The country was full of pigeons, ducks, geese, pheasants, partridges, and turkeys in their season, all of which fell easy victims to the guns or traps of the pioneers. The lakes, of course, contained plenty of fish, and most of the small streams abounded in trout. It does not appear that the county was ever much troubled with poisonous snakes. There were some massasaugies and copperheads on the peninsula; but the interior seems to have been remarkably free from dangerous reptiles.

Taken altogether, while they had to endure many privations and hardships, it is doubtful whether the pioneers of any part of America were more fortunate in their selection than those of Erie county.

CHAPTER XIV.

GRISTMILLS, SAWMILLS, FACTORIES, TANNERIES, BREWERIES, ETC.—[See Chapters XIII and XVI, Erie City History.]

THE first mill in Erie county was built at the mouth of Mill creek in 1796, under the direction of Capt. Russell Bissell, of the United States army, to supply timber for barracks, dwellings, etc., for the use of the troops who had been sent forward as a protection to the settlers. It gave name to the stream and stood until 1820, when it burned down. The dam was just east of Parade street, nearly on a line with Fourth. In 1831, George W. Reed and William Himrod built another sawmill on the old site, the frame of which was standing for more than thirty years after its erection.

The second sawmill was built by John Cochran in 1800, on the site of what became known as the Eliot or Densmore mill. The following year, he added a gristmill, both being constructed of logs. In the year 1816 John Teel replaced them by a frame, which was subsequently operated by John Gray and son James, Jonathan Baird and John McClure. In May, 1836, upon the death of John Cochran, it fell into the hands of his son Robert, and about 1845 was sold to Gen. C. M. Reed, who conveyed it to George A. Eliot. In 1850, Mr. Eliot gave the control of it to his son John, who in March, 1871, sold it to Henry Shotwell; thence it passed into the possession of William Densmore. When Mr. Teel rebuilt the mill, the contract price was $300. He took in part pay for his services the two outlots bounded by Chestnut, Sasafra, Twentieth and Twenty-second streets. The land alone, included in this property, is now worth $60,000.

In 1806, Robert Brotherton built a sawmill at or near the site of the present Hopedale mill. The farm and mill were purchased by John Gingrich, and the latter was discontinued when timber became scarce in the neighborhood. An oil mill was subsequently erected there by C. Siegel. Upon his father's death, Henry Gingrich inherited the property, and about 1850 built a flouring mill, which he called "Hopedale." This mill was operated for some years by Oliver & Bacon, who left it in 1865, and it was then taken in charge by its owner, Henry Gingrich.

During the years 1807-8, another sawmill was erected on Mill creek at its intersection with Eighth street, by Thomas Forster and William Wallace, who got control of the water-power from Twelfth to Parade streets. About 1810, R. S. Reed purchased the property and built a gristmill below. In 1822, George Moore bought these mills and added a carding and fulling-mill. Some time during the winter of 1834-35, the mills were purchased by E. D. Gunnison, who became associated in business with Abraham Johnson, and they built and named the Fairmount flouring-mill. Gunnison sold his interest to John H. Walker, who converted the carding and fulling mill into a plaster mill, and built a large tannery opposite and a number of dwellings for the workmen. Jehiel Townner was miller for many years. The tannery burned down and the mill fell into the hands of Liddell, Kepler & Co. In the spring of 1850 it was bought by P. & O. E. Crouch, and is now owned and operated by J. B. Crouch & Co.

Rufus S. Reed built a gristmill on Mill creek in 1815. It was located on Parade street between Fourth and Fifth, and the dam crossed the stream just below Sixth street. He afterward added a distillery, both of which were carried on by him until his death. The mill stood until some twenty years ago.

The same year (1815), Robert Large erected a gristmill near the corner of Eleventh and French streets, with the dam above Twelfth. It did not, however, prove successful, and in 1822 was sold to Alvah Flint, who converted it into a cloth, carding and fulling-mill. This was kept up until 1840, when the site and water-power were purchased by Vincent, Himrod & Co., who erected a foundry subsequently known as the Erie City Iron Works. It is now occupied by Althof's planing mill and the Ball Engine Works.

BREWERIES.

The first beer brewery in the city was built in 1815, by Maj. David McNair, on Turnpike street, near where the Erie City mill was afterward erected. He added a distillery in 1823, and in 1827 built a grist mill on State street, south of the Lake Shore R. R., the motive power for all being furnished by the water of Ichabod run. This stream came down from the ridge on the west side of the city and emptied into Mill creek near the State street bridge of the Lake Shore Railroad company. The small amount of water that remains has been carried into the sewers. The mill went down, and in 1849 the Erie City mill was built by McSparran & Dumars, to use the water of the same stream. It became the property of William Densmore, who still carries on the milling business at the corner of State and Sixteenth streets.

Jacob Diefenthaler was the second beer brewer in the city. He was succeeded by John Knobloch. The brewery was located on the east side of French street, between Third and Fourth. Mr. Jacobi started a beer brewery in the same locality, which he sold out to George L. Baker, who converted it into an ale brewery. The former then built a beer brewery on Fourth street near Poplar, which had quite a successful run. Jacob Deitz established the brewery afterward operated by Charles Koehler, now owned by Frederick Koehler & Co. An ale brewery was started by James Carnagie on Myrtle street, east side, between Second and Third, about 1837, which only continued a few years. The Eagle brewery (Jackson Koehler's) was founded by Fry & Schaff in 1846, and long operated by Henry Kalvelage; the National brewery (Conrad's), by Jacob Fuess, about 1848. A Mr. Heilman was in the brewing business for some time. One of the most prominent of the early breweries was that of Alfred King, on the Ridge road, a little west of Erie cemetery. Mr. King also did a large business in barley and malt.

TANNERIES, BRICKYARDS, ETC.

The pioneer tannery of Erie was erected by Ezekiel Dunning, on Holland street, between Fifth and Sixth, about the beginning of the present century. It was long known as Sterrett's tannery, and was kept in operation until 1852. The next tannery in the order of time was established in 1805, by Samuel and Robert Hays, on the corner of Ninth and French streets. The latter sold his interest to Samuel, and he in turn was succeeded by his sons, W. B. and J. W. Hays, who carried on a tannery in Erie for many years. William Arbuckle, who learned the trade with Samuel Hays, started a tannery in 1820, on Eighth street, west of Myrtle, which he ran until 1890, when it ceased operations.

A fulling-mill was started about 1830, at the northwest corner of Tenth and Myrtle streets, by John Glover. It was abandoned about 1840.

The first brickyard in the county was opened in 1808, by Isaac Austin and B. Rice, and was located east of Parade, between Second and Third streets. From brick made in this yard, James Baird erected the first brick house in Erie county. It stood on German, between Front and Second streets, was two stories in height, and occupied for many years by Thomas Wilson. The building was used as a hospital in 1813 for the wounded prisoners captured at the battle of Lake Erie, and was burned down in 1827.

When there was not one-fifth of the population, a distillery was to be found in almost every neighborhood. Some families were as particular about laying in their barrel of whisky as their barrel of pork, and would rather be without the latter than the former.

MILLS OUTSIDE OF ERIE.

The second and third sawmills in the county were put up in 1797—one by Thomas Forster at the mouth of Walnut creek, and the other by Robert Brotherton, on LeBoeuf creek, near the Waterford station of the P. & E. R.R. The latter added a gristmill in 1802. In 1798, a fourth sawmill was built near the mouth of Four-Mile creek by Thomas Rees, for the Population Company. The fifth was built by Leverett Bissell, on French creek, in Greenfield township, in 1790.

During the year 1798 the first gristmill in the county was built at the mouth of Walnut creek under the superintendence of Thomas Forster. The other mills established outside of Erie City before the last war with Great Britain were as follows:

One on Spring run, Girard township, by Mr. Silverthorn, in 1799.

A grist and sawmill by William Miles, at Union, in 1800, later known as Church's mill. In the same year, a small gristmill, by James Foulk, at the mouth of Six-Mile creek.

A sawmill by William Culbertson, in 1801, and a gristmill in 1802, at Edinboro, since known as Taylor & Reeder's mills.

A sawmill by Capt. Holliday, in 1801, and a gristmill in 1803, at the mouth of Crooked creek, in Springfield township.

A sawmill in 1802 or 1803, by John Riblet, Sr., on Four-Mile creek, half a mile south of Wesleyville.

Lattimore's and Boyd's sawmills, in Waterford township, about 1802. Gristmills were added to each at a later date, and allowed to go down some fifty years ago.

A grist and sawmill, in 1803, by Capt. Daniel Dobbins and James Foulk, near the mouth of Twelve-Mile creek, since known as Neely's mill.

A gristmill on Sixteen-Mile creek, in North East township, by Col. Tuttle, in 1807, afterward known as Scouller's.

Three miles south of the city, on what is now the Waterford Plank Road, Robert McCullough, in 1802 or 1804, put up a saw and gristmill, which became known as the Erie County Mills. He used the water of Mill creek. In 1814, a small gristmill was built by Thomas Miller, on the little stream which empties into the bay at the Head, to which he soon after added a mill for making linseed oil.

LATER MILLS.

The following shows when the mills mentioned were erected:

1814—The West Girard grist and sawmill, on Elk creek, by Peter Woolverton. A sawmill where Lines' mills stand, on Crooked creek, in Springfield, by Amos Remington and Oliver Cross.

1815—A sawmill by William Saltsman, at the foot of the gully of Four-Mile creek, in Harbor Creek township.

1816—A sawmill by James Love, on Walnut creek, in Mill Creek township. A sawmill on Mill creek, by Foote & Parker.

About 1820—The Strong gristmill, on Crooked creek, in Springfield, by Andrew Cochran.

1822—The Lowville mills, by Samuel Low. The Wattsburg mills, by William Miles.

1823—The Nason mill, on Bear run, in Fairview, by Daniel Bear. The Porter mill, on Conneaut creek, in Springfield, by Comfort Hay. Two mills in Amity township, near Milltown, one by Capt. James Donaldson. A gristmill at Wesleyville, by John Shattuck.

1824—A sawmill in the south part of Greenfield, by John Whiteside.

1825—Shattuck's sawmill at Wesleyville. The mills at Wellsburg, by Samuel Wells.

1826—The old Cooper mill, on Four Mile creek, by William Saltsman.

The Burger gristmill, on French creek, in LeBoeuf township, was built by George Burger about 1830; the Line gristmill, in Springfield, by Mr. Case, about 1832; the Sterrettania mills, on Elk creek, by David S. Sterrett, in 1839; the Moore sawmill, in LeBoeuf, about 1840; and the Branchville mill, about 1850.

OTHER MILLS AND FACTORIES.

Among the earliest mills were Weigle's, at the crossing of Walnut creek by the Ridge road, in Fairview township, built by S. F. Guldner; the Elgin mills, on Beaver Dam run, by Joseph Hall; the grist mill on Le-Boeuf creek, in Greene, by Jacob Brown; and the Backus mill on Six-Mile creek, in Harbor creek. All of these were established in the beginning of the century, but the exact dates cannot be obtained. A sawmill was built at an early period by Michael Jackson, and a gristmill by Amos King, at Albion. In 1810 there was a carding and woolen mill on the site of the Cass factory in Harbor creek.

Soon after the war of 1812-14, a perfect mania arose for building sawmills, and every stream that could be turned to use was employed to drive from one to a dozen wheels. The county was still largely covered with forest trees, and all of the streams contained an abundance of water. The cutting off of the timber was followed by the drying up of the streams. Most of the mills have gone down, and those that remain generally use steam. With few exceptions, the gristmills remain on the sites originally adopted.

IRON WORKS.

The first concern in the county for the manufacture of iron goods was a foundry at Freeport, North East township, built in 1824, by Philetus Glass. The next was established in 1833 " by Messrs. Hinkley, Jarvis & Co., of Westfield, N. Y., who erected two small wooden buildings near the corner of Eleventh and State streets, in Erie, and began the manufacture in them of iron castings for plows, sawmill machinery and a cheap class of stoves. The motive power at first consisted of one blind horse. Various changes in the members of the firm connected with the business occurred in the eighteen years which followed; W. H. Johnson, James Sennett, Pardon Sennett, E. A. Lester and Walter Chester being members of the firm under various names during that period. The invested capital in land, buildings, machinery and patterns was $22,000 in 1851, and it was considered a large establishment. Then followed other firms: Sennett & Co., Sennett, Barr & Co., Barr & Johnson, Barr, Johnson & Co., Johnson, Black & Co., and Black & Germer.

" In 1840 W. H. Johnson withdrew from the firm of Johnson, Sennett & Co., 'The Old Furnace,' and, associated with William Himrod, David Himrod and B. B. Vincent, organized 'The New Furnace Company,' which had its works on the square bounded by State, French, Eleventh and Twelfth streets. The business has been continued under the firm names of Johnson, Himrod & Co., Vincent, Himrod & Co., Tibbals, Shirk & Whitehead, and the Chicago and Erie Stove Company."

Out of "The New Furnace Company" has also grown the Erie City Iron Works, Cleveland & Hardwick and others of the most prominent manufacturing institutions in the city.

Of the later mills and factories mention will be made in the city, borough and township chapters. The number in the county, outside of Erie and Corry, in 1880, was computed to be as follows: Creamery, 1; cheese factories, 28; gristmills, 86; tanneries, 14; saw, shingle, lath and heading mills, 117; cider, jell and vinegar factories, 27; planing mills and sash, door and blind factories, 17; woolen, carding and fulling mills, 6; paper mills, 2; brick and tile works, 8; manufactories of wooden articles, 39; beer breweries, 3; carriage and wagon shops, 11; miscellaneous, 12; total, 316. Altogether, there were probably 450 different manufacturing establishments in Erie county, and the number doubtless exceeds 500 at present.

WAGES AND THEIR PAYMENT.

The following interesting particulars were contributed by M. R. Barr, Esq., to the Erie Souvenir, published in 1888: "To one acquainted only with the present methods of paying wages, the old-time method would seem to be as extraordinary as it really was. Printed due-bills in the fractional parts of a dollar in eighths, and for one, two, five and ten dollars, were issued, payable in merchandise or castings, and this 'currency' was good in the hands of employes for such meat, flour and other provisions as they might need for their own use; but if presented by any other party payment could only be claimed in regular 'store goods' or castings. A small portion of the wages was paid in cash; but an employe must be an exceptionally good and important 'hand' if his cash receipts on account of wages exceeded an average of a dollar per week.

"After the passage of the law by the Pennsylvania Legislature forbidding the issuing of printed due-bills, or anything in the similitude of bank bills, or intended to circulate as bank bills, or payable in anything but cash, a scheme was devised and executed by the 'New Furnace Company,' to issue metallic tokens having very much the appearance of coin, and in the fractions of a dollar, in eighths and one dollar amounts; and thereafter 'Pewterington,' as it was generally called, formed quite a considerable part of the circulating medium in local trade, and entirely superseded 'Blue Crackee,' as the due-bills were named (excepting those payable in 'castings only'), and which were vulgarly called 'Crackee and be d—d.'

"The following incident illustrates the mode of paying wages forty years ago: The bookkeeper, Mr. M., said to the member of the Furnace Company firm who acted as cashier: 'Mr. C., one of the men, Mr. H., wants six dollars in cash this evening to pay the taxes on his farm.' 'Well,' replied Mr. C., 'he cannot have so much money as that at once.' Mr. M. argued that H. had had no money since he (M.) had been bookkeeper for the firm, and, by M.'s persuasion, C. consented to give H. the money. H. was called into the office and the money handed to him; and Mr. C. asked, 'Mr. H., how long have you worked in this establishment?' H. replied, 'Over ten years.' 'How much of your wages have you had in cash during that time?' inquired

Mr. C. 'Just what I now have in my hand. This is the first money I have ever received for my work,' was the reply of H.

"The system of monthly cash payment of wages was commenced by Barr & Johnson in 1862, and very soon afterward they were followed by Tibbals, Shirk & Whitehead, who paid their workmen their full wages in cash weekly, and this system has been regularly continued, with but few exceptions, by all the manufacturing firms of the city to the present day."

CHAPTER XV.

MAIN THOROUGHFARES, MAIL ROUTES, STAGE LINES, OLD TAVERNS, ETC.

It is scarcely necessary to remind those who have read the preceding chapters that the French cut a road from Presque Isle to LeBeauf in 1753, the first year of their occupation, and kept it up as long as they maintained posts in western Pennsylvania. This was the first, and for more than forty years the only road in Erie county. The French road began at the mouth of Mill creek, ran south on a line parallel with Parade street, in Erie, to the corners in Marvintown, and then across Mill creek, Summit and Waterford townships, to Fort LeBeuf, in the present Waterford borough.

An act passed the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1791 to open a road from Presque Isle to French creek, and another in 1795 for the survey of a route from LeBeuf to the Juniata river in Millin county. The Susquehanna and Waterford turnpike was located by Andrew Ellicott in 1796, from Lake LeBeuf to Curwensville, in Clearfield county, by way of Meadville and Franklin. Its purpose was to give a continuous road from Erie to Philadelphia.

The earliest road opened after the American occupation was by Judah Colt, as agent of the Population Company, in 1797, from Freeport, on the lake near North East, to Colt's Station, and from the latter place to the forks of French creek, or Wattsburg, late in the season of 1798. The Eastern road through Greenfield, from North East to Wattsburg was laid out about 1800; the ones from Waterford to Cranesville through Washington township, and from Waterford to Edinboro, about 1802, and the road from North East to Waterford, by way of Phillipsville, in 1804.

The State opened a road through the northern tier of counties, from the headwaters of the Delaware river, in almost a direct line, to Ohio, in 1802 or 1803, which is still known as the State road.

THE BUFFALO ROAD.

This road was surveyed by James McMahon in 1805, and appears to have been ready for travel in the same year. It was opened westward, from the New York line, in a direct course to Wesleyville, at which place travel diverged by a cross-road to the Lake road, and reached Erie, which consisted of a small collection of houses at the mouth of Mill creek, by the latter thoroughfare. The court, in 1812, ordered the completion of the road to Peach street in Erie, and it was thrown open to travel some time in that year. The Buffalo road generally follows a nearly straight line from Peach street to the city of Buffalo, but there is an abrupt jog at the Saltsman place, the reason for which has been a puzzle to many. It is said to be due to two causes,—first, there was an ugly swamp on the straight line, south of the present road; and, second, it was considered more desirable to enter the city on the line of Eighteenth street. The Buffalo road forms the principal street of the borough of North East, and of the villages of Wesleyville, Harbor Creek, Moorheadville, and Northville. The distances from Central park in Erie by this route are as follows: Buffalo; 90 miles; Northville, 19; North East, 15; Moorheadville, 10½; Harbor Creek, 7½; Wesleyville, 4½.

P. S. Hunt

THE RIDGE ROAD.

The Ridge road is practically a continuation of the Buffalo road, and is connected with it by the southern part of Peach street in the city of Erie. It follows the line of the First Ridge and traverses the western part of Mill Creek, and the entire width of Fairview, Girard and Springfield townships to the Ohio line. It was opened in 1805, the same year as the Buffalo road. The Ridge road passes through and constitutes the principal streets of East Springfield, Girard and Fairview boroughs and the villages of Weigleville, Swanville, West Girard and West Springfield. It is 100 miles by this route to Cleveland, 25 to West Springfield, 21 to East Springfield, 16½ to West Girard, 16 to Girard, 12 to Fairview, 9 to Swanville, and 2½ to Weigleville, measuring from Central park in Erie City.

THE LAKE ROAD.

The Lake road crosses the entire county from east to west, at a distance from Lake Erie varying from a few rods to half a mile. It enters Erie on the east by Sixth street, and leaves on the west by Eighth street. The Lake road becomes merged into the Ridge road at or near Conneaut, Ohio. It was laid out in 1806, and opened partly in that year and at intervals of several years after, as the country became settled. This road is the main avenue to the Head, Trinity cemetery, Lakeside cemetery and the various club houses and pleasure resorts east and west of the city. It is occupied in part by the electric road from the western terminus of Eighth street, in Erie, to a little beyond the crossroads at the Catholic cemetery.

THE WATERFORD TURNPIKE.

The Erie and Waterford turnpike was originated by Col. Thomas Forster. Previous to its completion, the travel between Erie and Waterford was wholly over the old French road, which had been but slightly repaired and was in a horrible condition. The turnpike company was formed in 1805, its avowed object being the building of a link in the great contemplated thoroughfare from Erie to Philadelphia by way of the French creek, Juniata, and Susquehanna valleys. Work was commenced in 1806 and the road was completed in 1809. The turnpike was a paying property until 1845, when it ceased to be remunerative to the stockholders. It was soon after abandoned by them and accepted as a township road. Judge Cochran opposed the building of the "pike" on the ground that it was unconstitutional to make the public pay toll. The toll question was tested before the county court, and Judge Moore gave an opinion sustaining the constitutionality of the act of incorporation.

The turnpike originally ended at Waterford; but twenty years later the Waterford & Susquehanna Turnpike Co. was organized, which extended the route by Meadville and Franklin to Curwensville, Clearfield county, where it connected with another turnpike running across the State, making a good wagon road from Erie to Harrisburg and Philadelphia. The first toll gate out of Erie was kept by Robert Brown, near the southern line of Erie City, and the second by Martin Strong, on the summit between Erie and Waterford.

The "pike" commenced at the Ridge road, now Twenty-sixth street in Erie, and from there extended across Mill Creek, Summit and Waterford townships to Waterford borough. It is four miles by this route to Kearsarge and fourteen to the borough of Waterford.

THE EDINBORO PLANK ROAD.

The Erie & Edinboro Plank Road Co. was organized in 1850, and the road was completed in 1852. It followed the course of the Waterford turnpike to a point a little south of Walnut creek, where it branched off and adopted a route partly new and partly the old Edinboro road. The road bed was covered, as the name indicates, with heavy planks, and the grade being in general quite moderate, furnished an easy and pleasant thoroughfare while it was kept in good condition. The Edinboro & Meadville plank road, completed simultaneously, formed a smooth, continuous route from Lake Erie to the county seat of Crawford county. Though the travel was large, neither road proved a profitable investment, and both were abandoned as plank roads and became township roads in 1868 or 1869. The distances are twenty miles to Edinboro, fourteen to McLane, twelve to Branchville, ten to Middleboro and four to Kearsarge.

THE WATERFORD PLANK ROAD.

The Erie & Waterford plank road was commenced in 1850 and completed in 1851, one year in advance of the one to Edinboro. In laying out the road an entirely new route was adopted, following the valleys of Mill creek, Walnut creek and LeBoeuf creek, and obviating the heavy grades of the old turnpike. So skillfully was the engineering and grading performed, that a horse can trot most of the length of the road. The stranger traveling over this easy route would scarcely believe that at the Walnut creek summit he was about 500 and at Graham's summit between 650 and 700 feet above the level of Lake Erie. There were three toll gates on the line—one a short distance north of Waterford, another at Capt. J. C. Graham's, in Summit, and the third near Eliot's or Densmore's mill. The road never paid a profit, and was abandoned to the townships in 1868 or 1869. The distance between Erie and Waterford is slightly more than by the turnpike.

ERIE AND MEADVILLE PLANK ROAD.

About the same time that the above plank roads were built, another was pushed through from Waterford to Drake's mills, Crawford county, to prevent the diversion of travel that was feared from the opening of the Erie & Edinboro and Edinboro & Meadville roads. This enterprise was no more of a financial success than the others, and, like them, was given up to the townships.

THE "SHUNPIKE," OR ROAD TO AVOID THE TOLLS.

The stage company owning the line between Erie and Waterford had a quarrel over tolls with the turnpike company in the winter of 1827-28, which resulted in the construction by the former, at considerable expense, through Summit, Greene and Waterford townships, of a new road, to which was given the suggestive name of the Shunpike. The route adopted commenced at Waterford, near where the plank road and turnpike separate, and ran across the country until it connected with the old French road. A good share of the route is still used as a township road.

THE WATTSBURG PLANK ROAD.

A road was opened in 1809 from Erie to Wattsburg, through Phillipsville. In 1828 a re-survey was made under the authority of the State, which appropriated a small sum for the purpose. This resulted in some changes in the location. In 1851, the Erie & Wattsburg Plank Road Co. was organized. The plank road was completed in 1853, a year after the one to Edinboro, and two years after the one to Waterford. In the adoption of a route the old road was pretty closely pursued, except for a short distance in Greene township, and from the Siegel place in Greene, to Lowville, where a new route was adopted. The highest points are at the H. L. Pinney and Bailey places, in Greene township, the elevation above Lake Erie being some 500 feet at the former and 600 at the latter.

There were four regular toll gates—at Lowville, at Oscar Sears's in Venango, at Diefenthaler's in Greene, and at Marvintown. The road was a non-paying enterprise, and it was allowed to run down, though toll was still exacted. In the spring of 1865, public feeling became so much excited that a party of farmers was formed who started at Erie and tore down every gate on the road. Though they were severely threatened, none of the party were tried or punished, and no toll has been charged on the road since. It is now kept up by the townships through which it extends. The distances from Erie are: To Wattsburg, twenty miles; to Lowville, eighteen miles; to St. Boniface, seven and a half miles, and to Belle Valley four miles.

THE LAKE PLEASANT ROAD.

The first road in the direction of Lake Pleasant was opened in 1821-22 from Erie to a point near the Martin Hayes farm, in Greene township. In 1826-27, at a heavy expense for the period, the county continued the road past Lake Pleasant to French creek, where it meets the thoroughfare between Union and Wattsburg. The distance from Erie to Lake Pleasant is twelve miles, and to French creek two and a half miles further. It is said to be two miles shorter from Erie to Wattsburg by this road than by the plank road. The road branches off from the Wattsburg plank at the Davidson place, a mile or more outside of Erie.

THE COLT'S STATION ROAD.

The road from Wesleyville to Colt's station was laid out about 1813, to give a route between Erie and Mayville, N. Y. At Colt's station, an intersection is made with the North East and Wattsburg road.

HOUSES FOR PUBLIC ACCOMMODATION.

The first public house on the south shore of Lake Erie, west of Buffalo, and the first building erected within the limits of Erie City, was the Presque Isle Tavern, built by Col. Seth Reed in July, 1795. It stood near the mouth of Mill creek, and was a one-story log and stone structure. The next year, Col. Reed built a two-story log building on the southwest corner of Second and Parade streets, which he turned over to his son, Rufus S. Reed, who kept a store and tavern in it for many years.

The third tavern was built in Erie by George Buehler in 1800, at the northeast corner of Third and French streets, which afterward became known as the "McConkey House." This building was occupied as Perry's headquarters in 1813.

[A fuller account of the early public houses in Erie will be found in Chapter XIV. of the City History.]

Outside of Erie, the earliest public house was opened in Waterford by Lieut. Martin in 1795. Public houses were established by Richard Swan at Manchester in 1805; by Henry Burgett in North East in 1806; by Lemuel Brown on the site of the Haynes house, in the same place, in 1808; by John Ryan on the Buffalo road, between Erie and Wesleyville, in 1809; by George W. Reed in Waterford in 1810; and by John and David Phillips in Phillipsville in the same year.

Previous to the introduction of railroads, the Buffalo and Ridge roads were among the busiest thoroughfares in the country, being the great avenues for emigration, trading and droving between the Northeastern States and the West. Numerous public houses sprung up and did a good business. The tavern keepers of those days were usually men of much force of character, and wielded wide political influence. It is said that at one time there was not a mile along the roads named without a public house.

Among the most noted of the old lake shore taverns were the "Doty" and "Keith" Houses at East Springfield; the "Martin House" at Girard; the "Fairview House" at Fairview; "Swan's Hotel" at Swanville; the "Halfway House," a little west of the county almshouse; the "Weigle House;" the "Ryan" or "Taggart House" near Wesleyville; "Fuller's Tavern" at Wesleyville; and the "Brawley House" at North East.

Back from the lake shore the best known of the older hotels were Martin Strong's, at the summit of the Waterford turnpike; the "Eagle Hotel" at Waterford; the "Robinson House" at Edinboro; the "Sherman House" at Albion; the "Wattsburg House" at Wattsburg; and the "Lockport House" at Lockport.

The Erie City hotels, and the more recent ones outside, will be described in their proper connection.

TRADE AND TRAVEL.

Up to 1800, a good share of the travel and transportation was by means of small boats on the lake from Buffalo, and by way of French creek from Pittsburg. The boats on French creek generally went no farther up than Waterford, but in times of good water they were poled to Greenfield Village. They were either canoes or flat-bottomed vessels, the latter being somewhat like the mud scows now seen on Presque Isle bay, but small and shallow, drawing but a trifling amount of water. Those on the lake were originally propelled by oars; but it was not long till sails were introduced. In winter many persons came into the country, either on foot or in sledges, by traveling on the ice of the lake.

By 1810, there were roads to all points south, east and west, and the opportunities for travel and transportation became greatly improved. The roads, however, were still rough and muddy, and horseback riding was the favorite mode of travel. As the roads became better, the once familiar two-horse wagons were introduced. These were covered with cotton cloth stretched over hickory ribs, and furnished shelter for a whole family, besides carrying their goods. Each party brought their provisions along, stopping at meal times by the springs or streams, and doing their cooking over open fires. From the direction of Pittsburg the French creek route continued to be the one used till some time after the second war with Great Britain. The supplies for Perry's fleet, including the cannon, were largely transported in flat boats to Waterford, and from there by the turnpike to Erie.

The first step ahead was the introduction of stage coaches. After that came the steamboats, which carried hundreds of passengers on each trip. For a number of years succeeding the opening of the canal, thousands of emigrants, bound for the southwest, reached Erie by steamboat, and from there went by way of the new water route, down to the Ohio.

THE OLD STAGE LINES AND MAIL ROUTES.

A route was opened in 1801 between Erie and Pittsburg, via Waterford and Meadville, to carry mail once a week. The mode of transportation was on horseback, and later by horse and common wagon. A regular stage line commenced running about the date of the completion of the turnpike. In 1826 stages began running each way three times a week, carrying a mail every trip. This was increased to a daily mail, each direction, which continued until the era of railroads.

In 1806 a route was established between Erie and Buffalo, to carry the mail once a week. The first line of stages between Erie and Buffalo, making weekly trips, was established in December, 1820. At the beginning a stage left Buffalo every Saturday at noon and reached Erie the next Monday at 6 p. m.; returning, it started from Erie at 6 a. m. every Tuesday and arrived at Buffalo on Thursday at noon. By January 8, 1824, a stage with mail was making semi-weekly trips between Erie and Cleveland. On the 10th of February, 1825, a mail coach commenced running daily between Erie and Buffalo, and soon after a daily stage and mail line was commenced between Erie and Cleveland.

In 1827 a line of four-horse coaches was placed on the road between Buffalo and Cleveland by a company of which Rufus S. Reed was one of the chief men. This event was as much talked about as the opening of a new railroad would be to-day. The new line carried a daily mail each direction, and was a source of large profit to its owners. Eighteen hours were allowed as the time between Buffalo and Erie.

A mail route to Jamestown, N. Y., via Wattsburg, was established in 1828. At the start a man or boy on foot carried a pouch once a week. The route to Edinboro was established in the winter of 1835-36, and the pouch was carried weekly on a horse's back.

The arrival of the stage was as important an event fifty years ago as that of a railroad train to-day in a village with but a single line.

AN IMPORTANT INDUSTRY.

The salt trade, which commenced about 1800, and continued until about 1819, was one of the leading industries of the early days. The salt was purchased at Salina, N. Y., hauled from there to Buffalo in wagons, brought in vessels to Erie, unloaded in warehouses at the mouth of Mill creek, and from there carried by ox teams to Waterford, where it was placed in flat boats and floated down French creek and the Allegheny to Pittsburg. It is estimated that when the trade was at its best, one hundred teams and as many persons were constantly on the road between Erie and Waterford. The time for making each trip was calculated at two days, and the average load for a four-ox-team was fourteen barrels. A number of warehouses were erected on the bank of LeBeuf creek at Waterford for storing the salt until the water was at a suitable stage for floating it down French creek. There was a period when salt was almost the only circulating medium in the county. Oxen, horses, negro slaves and land were sold to be paid for in so much salt. The discovery of salt wells on the Kiskiminitas and Kanawha, about 1813, cheapened the price of the article at Pittsburg, so that Salina salt could not compete, and the trade by way of Erie steadily diminished.

CHAPTER XVI.

NAVIGATION OF THE LAKES—MERCHANT AND GOVERNMENT VESSELS—THE LIGHT-HOUSE AND LIFE-SAVING SERVICE, ETC.

THE first sailing vessel that floated on the waters of Lake Erie was built by Robert Cavalier de la Salle, an adventurous Frenchman, on the Niagara river, six miles above the Falls, in the year 1677. She was named the "Griffin," and was of six tons burthen. La Salle navigated Lakes Erie, Huron and Michigan, to Green bay, where, with a picked body of men, he left the vessel and marched overland to the Mississippi. With the exception of one more attempt by the French to sail the lakes, many years afterward, which proved a failure, no record is to be found of any other sailing vessel on the lake until 1766, when the British, who had secured possession of both shores, built and launched four. They were of light burthen, and were chiefly used for carrying troops and army supplies. All transportation of a commercial character, and all of the very limited passenger business was carried on by batteaux until after the close of the Revolutionary war.

The earliest American sailing vessel on the lake was a small boat, owned and run by Capt. William Lee, in which he carried passengers and light articles of freight between Buffalo and Erie. She was constructed to use oars in going against the wind, and had no crew, the passengers being obliged to "work their passage."

The first sailing vessel built on the south shore of Lake Erie was the sloop "Washington," of thirty tons, at the mouth of Four-Mile creek, for the Pennsylvania Population Company, owners of the bulk of the land in the Triangle. She was launched in September, 1798, and was employed for some twelve years in the service of the company.

The first vessel launched at Erie was built at the mouth of Mill creek in 1799, Capt. Lee and Rufus S. Reed being her principal owners. She was named the "Good Intent," and sunk at Point Abino in 1806, with all on board. The "Harlequin," built at Erie in 1800 by Eliphalet Beebe, was also lost the first season, with her entire crew. About 1801 the "Wilkinson," of sixty-five tons, was owned at Erie. Another early Erie vessel was the schooner "Mary," of 100 tons, built in 1805.

VESSELS OF WAR.

The British kept a fleet of armed vessels on the lakes from 1792 until Perry's victory in 1813, and in 1810 had as many as seven in commission. They were called the "provincial marine service," and were manned mostly by Canadians. To counteract their movements, the United States Government, at various times up to 1800, had placed four vessels of war upon the lakes, the most formidable of which was the "Detroit," the one that brought Gen. Wayne to Erie on returning from his Western expedition. She was wrecked off Presque Isle the next fall. Of this class of vessels the only one that was in service on Lake Erie at the outbreak of the last war with Great Britain was the "Adams," of 150 tons, which was captured by the British in 1812.

MERCHANT VESSELS.

Before the war of 1812-14, a dozen or more vessels comprised the whole merchant fleet of the lake, averaging about sixty tons. The chief article of freight was salt from Salina, N. Y. Some business was also done in carrying furs from the Far West to Buffalo.

Among the pioneer lake captains were Daniel Dobbins, William Lee, Thomas Wilkins, Seth Barney, C. Blake, James Rough, John F. Wight, William Davenport, Levi Allen, John Richards, George Miles and Charles Hayt. Capt. Richards quit sailing and went into ship-building with considerable success. Capt. Wilkins commenced with the Reeds in 1822, and was long one of their most popular commanders. Rufus S. Reed owned several vessels at an early day, and continued in the lake business during the balance of his life.

STEAMBOATS INTRODUCED.

The first steamboat to navigate Lake Erie was the "Walk-in-the-Water," of 342 tons, built on the Niagara river, between Black Rock and Tonawanda, and launched on the 28th of May, 1818. On her first trip it took from 7:30 p. m., on Monday, to 11 a. m. on Tuesday, to reach Cleveland from Erie, and the entire voyage from Buffalo to Detroit required forty-one hours and ten minutes, the wind being ahead all the way. She carried quite a number of passengers, who enjoyed the trip mightily. As the boat neared the head of the lake, the Indians ran down to the water's edge, and gave utterance to their amazement by repeated signs and shouts. The "Walk-in-the-Water" made regular trips each season between Buffalo and Detroit, on each of which she stopped at Erie.

The first steamboat launched at Erie was the William Penn, of 200 tons, on May 18, 1826. She was the sixth on the lake, and was built by the Erie & Chautauqua Steamboat Company, the managers of which included, besides some New York parties, R. S. Reed, P. S. V. Hamot, Josiah Kellogg, John F. Wight, Daniel Dobbins and Peter Christie, of Erie. The William Penn was first commanded by Capt. Thomas Wilkins, and afterward by Capt. John Spires.

Gen. C. M. Reed's first steamboat was the "Pennsylvania," Capt. John Fleeharty, master. She was built near the foot of Sassafras street, in July, 1832, and towed to Black Rock, where her engines were put in. Gen. Reed built the "Thomas Jefferson" in 1834 and the "James Madison" in 1836, both at Erie, in about the same locality as the "Pennsylvania." His boats did a heavy business, sometimes carrying a thousand passengers, besides large amounts of freight. The "Madison" is said to have cleared $30,000 on her first trip.

In 1837, the ill-fated "Erie" was built at the foot of French street, by the Erie Steamboat Co.—Thomas G. Colt and Smith L. Jackson being the chief men—and the "Missouri" followed, built by Gen. Reed in 1840. The "Erie" was subsequently purchased by Gen.

Reed, who owned the vessel until her destruction by fire. All of these were large, elegant, rapid and popular boats. In fact, the boats built at Erie had the reputation of being the best on the lakes, and Gen. Reed was long the most extensive and famous vessel owner on the entire chain.

In 1826, three steamboats entered and cleared from Erie harbor every week, and from two to ten schooners. The opening of the canal between Erie and the Ohio river, in the spring of 1845, gave an immense impetus to the lake trade at this port. In 1846 a daily steamboat line had been established between Erie and Buffalo. Tens of thousands of emigrants were brought from Buffalo each year, taking the canal route to the Ohio valley, and the harbor of Erie was one of the liveliest on the lake. The tide of travel by way of the lake continued until the completion of the Lake Shore R. R. to Toledo in 1853, when the emigrant business dropped off and the steamboats were compelled to depend mainly upon freight to and from the upper lakes. Before the opening of the canal, all the lake steamboats used wood for fuel, giving employment to a large number of men and teams.

FIRST PROPELLERS AND SHIPS.

The first propeller on Lake Erie was the "Vandalia," of 150 tons, built at Oswego, and brought through the Welland canal in 1842. Two others appeared the same season. The propellers have entirely taken the place of the old style steamboats.

The first full-rigged ship on the lake was the "Julia Palmer," of 300 tons, launched at Buffalo in 1836. The ship "Milwaukee" was built in the same year at Grand Island, in the Niagara river.

VALUABLE STATISTICS.

The following statistics of the vessels on Lake Erie at various periods show the progress that has been made:

In 1810, eight or nine sailing vessels, averaging sixty tons.

In 1820, one small steamboat and thirty sailing vessels, the latter averaging fifty tons.

In 1831, eleven steamboats aggregating 2,260 tons, and 100 sailing vessels, averaging seventy tons.

In 1845, forty-five steamboats, aggregating

30,000 tons, and 217 other vessels, aggregating 20,000 tons.

In 1860 (including Lake Ontario), 138 steamers, 197 propellers, 58 barks, 90 brigs and 974 sloops and schooners. Total tonnage, 536,000; valuation, $30,000,000.

The books of the United States Treasury Department gave the following as the tonnage on all the lakes June 30, 1894:

	GROSS
	NO.	TONNAGE.
Steam vessels	1,731	828,702.29
Sailing vessels	1,189	317,789.37
Canal boats	886	76,843.57
Barges	85	37,731.99
Totals	3,841	1,261,067.22

"The number of steam vessels registering 1,000 tons and upward is 359, with a gross tonnage of 634,467.84 tons. The number of vessels of this class owned in all other parts of the United States is 316, with a tonnage of 642,642.50 tons, so that half of the best steamship tonnage in the United States is owned on the lakes.

"The freight borne upon the lake waters during 234 days of 1894 exceeded 30,000,000 tons, being equal to one-quarter of the freight carried by all the railroads in the United States during 365 days."

Years ago the trade of the lakes was done in schooners of from 200 to 500 tons. A schooner of the latter size was considered a monster. Then came the steamers, carrying from 40,000 to 50,000 bushels of corn. Larger steamers began to crowd out the schooners from the grain, coal and iron trade, and in a few years they had grown until they carried 70,000 and 80,000 bushels. In the changes of the times the old lake schooners are rapidly passing from the field. Many marine men think the coming boat will be nearer 6,000 tons in carrying capacity than 4,000.

U. S. GOVERNMENT VESSELS.

The United States Steamer "Michigan," the only vessel of war now on the lakes, was launched at Erie on the 9th of November, 1843, and accepted and commissioned by the Government on the 15th of August, 1844. The "Michigan" is a side-wheeler, with a length over all of 167 feet, an extreme beam of 47 feet, a depth of hold of 14 feet, a registered tonnage of 450 tons and a displacement of 685 tons. She was built at Pittsburgh, transported in pieces to Cleveland, brought from that city to Erie in a steamer, and put together at Erie harbor, being the first iron hull ever set afloat on the lakes. Her tonnage, armament and crew are regulated by a treaty with Great Britain, which is also authorized to place a vessel of the same character on the lakes. Erie has always been the headquarters of the "Michigan."

Erie was the station for the United States revenue cutters from the time that branch of the Government service was established on Lake Erie up to a few years ago. The first cutter was the Benjamin Rush, of thirty tons, built at Erie by Capt. John Richards, about 1827, and first commanded by Capt. Gilbert Knapp, who was succeeded by Capt. Daniel Dobbins. The second was the "Erie," of sixty-two tons, launched at Reed's dock, in March, 1833, and placed in charge of Capt. Dobbins, with Douglas Ottinger as his second lieutenant. The "Erie" was succeeded in 1846 by the iron steamer "Dallas," of which Michael Connor was captain and Douglas Ottinger first lieutenant. This vessel was removed to the Atlantic coast, by way of the Canadian canals and the St. Lawrence river, in 1848. The "Jeremiah S. Black" was one of six steam cutters built by the government, being one for each lake, in 1857, and was placed under the command of Capt. Ottinger, who had been promoted. At the outbreak of the Civil war, these vessels were moved to the Atlantic coast under the direction of Capt. Ottinger. In 1864, Capt. Ottinger superintended the construction of the steam cutter "Perry," of which he was commander, with the exception of two years, until 1881, when he was placed on the retired list. This vessel was built on the Niagara river, and her capacity was fixed at 404 tons. She was peculiarly constructed, having propeller wheels at the sides. Some ten years ago she was condemned and sold to Buffalo parties, who used her as an excursion steamer. Immediately after the sale, the Government built a new cutter, also known as the "Perry," which continued in the lake service until the fall of 1890, when she was ordered to the ocean. After being refitted at New York, she took a trip around the Horn, and is now stationed in Pacific waters, as one of the fleet to protect the American seal interests.

APPALLING LAKE DISASTERS.

The early disasters have already been recited, and it is unnecessary to repeat them. The following are some of the most terrible incidents that have happened in later years on the bay and lake:

The schooner "Franklin," owned by P. S. V. Hamot, loaded at Buffalo for an upper port, left Erie on the 16th of October, 1820, and was never seen afterward. Capt. Hayt and three men, all residents of Erie or vicinity, were lost.

In April, 1823, four men—Hutchinson, Zuck, Fox and Granger—started to cross the bay in a boat. The water was rough, the boat capsized, and all but Granger were drowned.

The steambot "Washington" burned off Silver Creek in 1838, and sixty persons lost their lives.

Eleven men left the wharf at Erie in a small boat on the 14th of May, 1834, to go to the steambot New York, lying at the outer pier. A blinding snow storm prevailed, and the boat was upset. Nine of the party were drowned.

One of the most dreadful calamities in the history of lake navigation occurred on the 9th of August, 1841. The steambot "Erie," of Erie, owned by Gen. Reed, and bearing a large party of emigrants, was coming up the lake from Buffalo, and when off Silver Creek was discovered to be ablaze. In an inconceivably brief period of time the boat was burned to the water's edge. Two hundred and forty-nine persons were lost, of whom twenty-six were residents of Erie. Between 120 and 130 bodies rose to the surface and were recovered. The "Erie" was valued at $75,000. Her cargo was worth about $20,000, and the emigrants, it is calculated, had with them $180,000 in gold and silver.

In 1850 the steambot "G. P. Griffin" burned near Chagrin, Ohio, and 250 souls were lost.

The propeller "Henry Clay" foundered in 1851, and nothing was ever heard of any one on board.

Nineteen lives were lost by the foundering of the propeller "Oneida" in 1852.

In the summer of 1852 the steambot "Atlantic" collided with another vessel, and sunk off Long Point, opposite Erie. One hundred and fifty lives were lost.

The sloop "Washington Irving," of Erie, Capt. Vanatta, left that port for Buffalo on the 7th of July, 1860, and was never heard from again. She is supposed to have foundered. All on board—seven persons—were drowned.

The loss of life and property on the chain of lakes each year is very large. In 1860, 578 persons were drowned and a million dollars' worth of property destroyed. In one gale, on the 10th of September, 1882, 157 persons lost their lives, of whom upwards of 100 came to their deaths by the foundering of the Canadian steamer "Asia," in Georgian bay. One of the severest gales ever known occurred in November, 1883, lasting from the 11th for several days, and extending over the whole chain of lakes. Nothing like it had been seen for many years. From fifty to sixty vessels were lost, and the damage was scarcely less than a million dollars. The largest loss of life during a single season, in recent years, happened in 1887, when 204 persons were drowned. The storm of October 14-15, 1893, strewn the lakes with wrecks and caused the loss of over seventy seamen. In that year the dead numbered 123, and in 1892 they numbered ninety-nine. During the season of 1894 sixty sailors were lost, and thirty-eight vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 15,881 tons, passed out of existence.

OPENING OF NAVIGATION.

Navigation usually opens at the port of Erie late in March or early in April, and closes about the 1st of December. As a rule, the harbor of Erie is open two or three weeks before that of Buffalo. The following are some of the earliest and latest periods of opening:

Earliest.—1828, March 5th; 1829, January 29th; 1842, March 12th; 1850, March 11th; 1863, February 27th; 1878 and 1880, March 16th; 1883, April 13th; 1894, March 13th.

Latest.—1853, May 9th; 1855, May 10th; 1856, May 5th.

In 1834 navigation opened the 24th of March, but was much retarded by ice and storms. On the 14th of May, snow fell along the south shore of the lake to the depth of six inches.

The Revenue Cutter "Erie" sailed from the port of Erie to Buffalo about the last of December, 1837, without interruption. In February, 1838, the steamer "Dewitt Clinton" came into Erie from Buffalo and went from Erie to Detroit.

In the winter of 1844-45, the steamer "United States" made a trip every month between Buffalo and Detroit.

On the 13th of December, 1852, a steambot passed up the lake and another on the 10th of January, 1853.

The winter of 1803-4 was remarkably mild. The bay was only frozen over eight or ten days. Vessels could have entered the harbor any time during the month of January, and two did actually leave the port on the 13th of the month.

The straits of Mackinaw, upon the opening of which depends the lake traffic to Chicago, are generally clear of ice about the last of April or the 1st of May. Vessel insurance begins as a rule on the latter date, and always closes on the 1st of December.

U. S. COLLECTORS.

The U. S. Collection district of Presque Isle embraces the whole coast line of Pennsylvania on Lake Erie. The Collectors' office is in the old custom house (formerly the Bank building), on State street, VESSELS OWNED IN ERIE.

The following list of vessels owned in Erie in 1860 and 1894 is given for the purpose of comparison; the figures for 1894 being taken from the report of the Board of Trade:

1860.—Brig, one; barque, one; schooners, twenty-four; total, 5,294 tons; valuation, $300,000.

1894.—Sailing vessels, four; steam vessels, (wood), forty-five; steam vessels (iron), nine; yacht, one; sailing yacht, one; total tonnage, 30,055; valuation, $2,800,000.

BUSINESS OF THE PORT.

The entrances at the port of Erie during 1860 were 655, and the clearances 678, with a total tonnage of about 300,000. The following persons and firms were in the lake business in that year: Coal and shipping, Walker & Gilson, John Hearn & Co., Charles M. Reed, Josiah Kellogg, Starr & Payne, George J. Morton, Scott & Rankin; coal and iron, Curtis & Boyce; grocery and ship chandlery, Andrew Hofscie. With the exception of the lumber and fishing business, the whole trade of the port is now done by the Anchor Line, the Carnegie Company, and the firm of which the late Wm. L. Scott was the controlling spirit. The former do all the grain and miscellaneous business, and the two latter control the coal and iron ore trade.

The following table shows the business of the port for the years stated:

Vessels entered and cleared.....	2,024	3,195	2,683
Tonnage of same.....	1,565,183	2,492,253	3,069,739
Enrolled tonnage....	28,248	110,801

The first grain elevator at the port of Erie, now known as "Elevator A," was built in 1868, by William S. Brown, Orange Noble, Joseph McCarter and Henry C. Shannon. After being operated by the firm for a short time, it was sold to the Erie and Western Transportation Co., (generally known as the Anchor line), which erected two others, all three of which are still operated.

LIGHT-HOUSES AT ERIE.

The first light-house upon the chain of lakes was erected at Erie in 1818, on the bluff overlooking the entrance to the harbor, a tract of land for the purpose having been ceded to the United States Government by Gen. John Kelso. A new structure was built of Milwaukee brick in 1858, but proved to be defective, and it was replaced by a third building of stone in 1896, at a cost of $20,000. This was discontinued in 1880 and the building and land sold in the spring of 1881. There was a strong protest on the part of the lake men, which induced the government to re-purchase the land and restore the light at the opening of navigation in 1882.

About the year 1830, the government added a beacon light on the north pier at the entrance to the harbor of Erie. It consisted of a tall wooden tower, resting upon a heavy bed of masonry. This structure was carried away by a sailing vessel in the summer or fall of 1857, and was replaced by the present wrought iron tower in the summer of 1858. The light-house was modeled and forged into form in France, reaching Erie with nothing to be done except to bolt the pieces into their proper positions. Five different lights are maintained at this station, all fixed, white, sixth order lenses, and used as ranges. In addition to these and for the further protection of navigators, there is a 1,200-pound Meneely fog bell, which is operated by clock work, and tolls three times each minute in snowy and foggy weather.

A third light-house station was established on the north shore of the peninsula, and a handsome brick tower erected for the purpose, from which the first light was exhibited on the night of July 12, 1873. It is known as the Flash Light, and cost the government $15,000.

LIGHT-HOUSE KEEPERS.

Below is a list of the several Light-house Keepers, with the years of their appointment:

Erie (or Land) Light.—1818—1833, Capt. John Bone, of Erie; 1833, Robert Kincaid, of Erie; 1841, Griffith Hinton, of Harbor Creek; 1845, Eli Webster, of McKean; 1849, James W. Miles, of West Mill Creek, who died in the summer of 1853, the duties being performed by his wife, Isabel Miles, till the ensuing spring; April 1, 1854, John Graham, of Erie; April 1, 1858, Gen. James Fleming, of Erie; October 27, 1858, A. C. Landon, of Erie; July 15, 1861, John Goalding, of Erie; April 1, 1864, George Demond, of Erie; August 1, 1871, A. J. Fargo, of Fairview; 1885, George W. Miller, of Conneant, Ohio.

Presque Isle Pier Head (or Beacon) Light.—William T. Downs, years unknown; Benjamin Fleming, Erie, years unknown; John Hess, Erie, years unknown; Leonard Vaughn, Summit, years unknown; George W. Bone, Erie, appointed July 19, 1861; Richard P. Burke, Erie, March 1, 1863; Frank

Henry, Harbor Creek, May 1, 1869; Charles D. Coyle, Erie, 1884; Robert Hunter, Erie, 1889.

Presque Isle (or Flash) Light.—July 12, 1873, Charles T. Waldo, of Fairview; spring of 1880, George E. Irvin, A. J. Harrison; Fall of 1880, O. J. McAllister, of Wattsburg; 1880, George E. Town, of North East; 1883, Clark M. Cole, of Erie; 1886, Lewis Van-natta, Erie; 1891, Lewis Walrose; 1892, Thomas L. Wilkins, Erie.

Up to June, 1894, the appointment of Light-house Keeper was made by the Collector of the port, but under the civil service rules it is now vested in the Inspector of light-houses.

The new gas buoy, one of the latest and most useful inventions of the day, was placed in the harbor during the summer of 1895, through the recommendation of Capt. Gridley, light-house Inspector of the district.

NAVAL INSPECTORS.

The Erie lights are in the Tenth Light-house district of the United States, extending from the mouth of St. Regis river, in New York, to and including Grassy Island, in the Detroit river. Each district is in charge of a United States naval officer, who is officially known as Inspector.

The following have been the recent inspectors:

Com. Ellison, from — to 1868; 1868-71, Com. G. H. Scott; 1871-74, Com. N. Collins; 1874-77, Com. E. E. Potter; 1877-78, Capt. George Brown; 1878-80, Com. W. R. Bridgman; 1880-83, Com. George W. Hayward; 1883-87, Com. N. M. Dwyer; 1887-91, Com. Charles V. Gridley; 1891-93, Com. E. T.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The U. S. Life-Saving Service on Lake Erie was organized in 1876 by Capt. Ottinger, of the revenue service, who was soon succeeded in regular charge by Capt. D. P. Dobbins, a resident of Buffalo, but a native of Erie, who continued till his death, August 20, 1892. He was followed by Capt. Chapman, of Oswego, whose headquarters are in Buffalo. The Ninth district, of which the latter has supervision, embraces Lakes Erie and Ontario, and the Falls of the Ohio at Louisville, Ky. The stations on Lake Erie are located at Buffalo, Erie, Ashtabula, Cleveland, Fairport and Point Marblehead.

The original station at Erie was built on the north shore of the peninsula, with Clark Jones in charge. This location being found inconvenient, the station was removed to the north pier at the entrance of the harbor. William Clark took charge of the station in 1877. He was drowned while trying to rescue the passengers of the Badger State on June 4th, 1891. His successor was Andrew P. Jansen. A new and improved life-boat of the English type, which had been on exhibition at the World's Fair, was placed in the station during the spring of 1894.

U. S. WEATHER AND SIGNAL SERVICE OFFICE.

The U. S. Weather and Signal Service office, intended largely for the benefit of mariners, was established in Erie May 23, 1873. Peter Wood, who had been in the chief office at Washington city, assumed charge in February, 1884, and has been on duty ever since. The office is on the fourth floor of the government building, at State street and Central Park.

[For other information regarding the harbor, the lake trade, fishing interests, etc., see Chapter V., Erie City.]

CHAPTER XVII.

THE WAR OF 1812-14—PERRY'S VICTORY—ERIE COUNTY'S PART IN THE WAR.

WAR was declared for the second time by the United States against Great Britain on the 18th of June, 1812. At that time the Canadian territory bordering the lakes and the St. Lawrence was far in advance of the United States on the opposite side in population, commerce and agriculture. The British were also much better prepared for war, having a series of military posts, from Niagara to Sault Ste. Marie, and being provided with a "Provincial Navy," which gave them the mastery of the lakes. They were on the best of terms with the Indians on both sides of the water, who were generally hostile to the Americans.

Erie, than a mere handful of buildings, from its position near the center of the lake and the excellence of its harbor, was regarded as one of the most important points on the south shore.

On the east, there was no village of any size nearer than Buffalo, and the country between scarcely contained ten families to the square mile. Westward the greater portion of the region remained an unbroken forest, the only settlements worthy of a name being those which surrounded the military posts at Cleveland, Sandusky, Toledo and Detroit.

BEGINNING OF THE WAR.

When hostilities commenced, they were so little expected on the frontier that Capt. Daniel Dobbins, Rufus Seth Reed and W.W. Reed sailed in a trading vessel for Mackinaw soon after the opening of navigation. While at that place a body of British and Indians took possession of the island and captured the party with their vessel. As prisoners of war they were carried in their own vessel to Detroit, where they were allowed to depart, and finally reached home in safety.

On the outbreak of the war a military company was in existence at Erie, under command of Capt. Thomas Forster. The members immediately tendered their services to the President, and were accepted for the time being. In anticipation of the conflict, Gov. Snyder had organized the militia of the State into two grand divisions—one for the east and one for the west. The western division was under the command of Maj.-Gen. Adamson Tannehill, of Pittsburg; the brigade of which the Erie county militia formed a part was commanded by Brig.-Gen. John Kelso, and the Erie county regiment was under the command of Dr. John C. Wallace. Among the officers of the regiment were Capts. Andrew Cochran, Zelotus Lee, James Barr, William Dickson, Robert Davison, Warren Foote, John Morris, — Smith and — Donaldson. Capt. Barr and his men were sent to Sandusky, and spent the winter of 1812-13 there. Capt. Cochran's Springfield company kept guard along the lake for some months, and was frequently called out at later stages of the war. The company commanded by Capt. Foote was assigned, in the beginning, to "keep sentry at the head of the peninsula."

Before the close of June, Gen. Kelso ordered out his brigade for the defence of Erie. This was quickly followed by a general call for the Sixteenth Division, the State having by this time been apportioned into more numerous military districts. The brigade rendezvous was on the farm of John Lytle, upon the flats at Waterford station. Upward of two thousand men were collected from Erie, Crawford, Mercer and the adjoining counties. August 13, a detachment of 2,500 of the Northwestern militia—increased in September by 2,000 more—were ordered to march to Buffalo, which was menaced by the enemy. They continued at Buffalo the winter through, under command of Gen. Tannehill, and it is related to the credit of Erie county, that while many others deserted, not one man of Col. Wallace's command shirked his duty. In the meantime measures had been taken for the defence of Erie, which was reported in danger of an attack by the enemy's fleet several times during the year.

The summer campaign of 1812 along the lake was a series of disasters to the Americans. The surrender of Detroit by Hull, the defeat of Van Rensselaer at Niagara in October, and the capture of the Adams, the only armed vessel that had been left to us, gave the British full control upon the lake.

A LAKE FLEET PROVIDED FOR.

Upon the return of Capt. Dobbins to Erie, he was called into immediate consultation with Gen. Mead, commander of the post, who sent him to Washington for the purpose of informing the President of the situation on the lakes. On reaching the capital, he met the cabinet, in official session, and earnestly advocated the establishment of a naval station and the building of a fleet powerful enough to cope with the British upon the lake. These suggestions were adopted. A Sailing Master's commission in the navy was tendered to him and accepted, and he was ordered to proceed to Erie and begin the construction of gunboats. An effort was made to secure ship carpenters, but only one being secured, Capt. Dobbins decided to go on with such house builders and laborers as he could gather together.

About January 1, 1813, Commodore Chauncey came to Erie, accompanied by a United States naval constructor, and, after approving what Dobbins had done, ordered him to prepare for the building of two sloops of war in addition to the gunboats. The keels of these vessels were ready to lay and much of the timber on hand about the 10th of March, when a gang of twenty-five carpenters, in charge of Noah Brown, a master ship builder from New York, reached Erie. A temporary guard was improvised, consisting of Capt. Forster's volunteer military company, who had got back from Buffalo, and the workmen at the station.

ARRIVAL OF COMMODORE PERRY.

Lieut. Oliver Hazard Perry, to whom the command on Lake Erie had been assigned, arrived at Erie March 27, 1813, and established his headquarters in "Duncan's Hotel" (later the "McConkey House"), at the northeast corner of Third and French streets.

He was only twenty-seven years of age, and his sole war service was as a Midshipman in the war with Tripoli; but he was active, brave and patriotic. By the joint exertions of Perry and Mead, a thousand State militia were ordered to rendezvous at Erie on or before the 20th of April. The old American block-house of 1795, which had nearly gone to ruins, was hurriedly restored, as was also the one on the point of the peninsula. Redoubts were subsequently thrown up at several points on the bank of the bay and lake.

It is next to impossible at the present day to comprehend the difficulties that attended Perry and Dobbins in their efforts. Of practical ship builders there were few in the lake country. The timber for the vessels had to be cut in the forests and used while yet green. Iron was scarce, and had to be picked up wherever it could be found. The guns, arms and ammunition had to be brought by small boats from Buffalo and Pittsburgh.

Carpenters, blacksmiths, sail makers, riggers, and other workmen came on from New York and Philadelphia, infusing new energy into the operations. The "Lawrence" and "Niagara," sloops of war, and the pilot boat "Ariel," schooner-rigged, were built on the beach at the mouth of Cascade run, now occupied by the Erie & Pittsburgh docks, and the "Porcupine" and "Tigress," gunboats, on a beach that jutted out from the mouth of Lee's run, afterward the terminus of the canal. The brig "Caledonia" and sloop "Trippe," and the schooners Ohio, Amelia and Somers were brought up the lake from Black Rock, great vigilance being required to elude the enemy. They reached Erie on the 17th of June.

PERRY'S FLEET.

The entire fleet with which Perry was expected to humble British pride on the lake was now concentrated in the harbor of Erie. It consisted of the "Lawrence" and "Niagara," built after the same model, being 100 feet straight rabbit, 100 feet between perpendiculars, 30 feet beam, 9 feet hold, flush deck, and pierced for twenty guns, with two stern ports; the "Ariel" and "Scorpion," each of 63 tons; the "Porcupine" and "Tigress," of about 50 tons; the "Caledonia," of 85 tons; the "Trippe," of 63 tons, and the "Amelia," "Somers" and "Ohio," of 72, 65 and 62 tons respectively. The "Lawrence" was named after the heroic Capt. James Lawrence, who was killed in the encounter between the Chesapeake and Shannon, and whose last words, "Don't give up the ship," were inscribed by Perry on his fighting flag. One of the schooners brought up from Black Rock, the "Amelia," was condemned as worthless and sunk in the harbor.

Up to the 25th of June something like 150 men and officers had arrived for service in the fleet, of whom many were sick in the hospitals, of which there were three—in the court house, on the point of Misery bay and in the block house, respectively. More men reached Erie on or about the 25th of July, and by August 1st Perry's force numbered about 300, of whom quite one-third were landsmen, who volunteered for the service.

While Perry was preparing the fleet, vessels of the enemy anchored in the roadstead several times, and would have entered the bay but for the shallow water on the bar. Sometimes the "Queen Charlotte," the British flagship, would appear alone, and at others the whole squadron. July 19th, six of the enemy's vessels were in sight outside the harbor, where they lay becalmed for two days. Perry went with three gunboats to attack them, and a few shots were exchanged at a mile's distance. A breeze springing up, the enemy sailed away, evidently desiring to avoid a fight. All this time the meager land force at Erie was kept busy parading the bank of the lake, to give the impression to the enemy of a larger army than was really the case. On the 27th of August a force of 1,600 State militia was reported as being in camp at Erie.

CROSSING THE BAR.

On Sunday, the 1st of August, the vessels were moved to the mouth of the bay, then free from piers, and preparations were made for getting them over the bar and for defending them in case of an attack while the operation was in progress. The guns, ballast and other heavy material were removed from the "Lawrence" to the sand beach, being so adjusted as to be readily replaced, and the ship was lifted over the bar by the aid of "camels." This proceeding was considerably delayed by an unfavorable wind, and it was not until the morning of the 4th, after two nights and days of wearisome labor, that the "Lawrence" was floated to her anchorage in the roadstead.

The "Niagara" was lifted over by the same process a few days after, the smaller vessels crossing without serious trouble.

Before the work of moving the "Niagara" over the bar was completed, the enemy appeared early one morning, and hove to about eight miles out for the purpose of reconnoitering. After looking over the situation for an hour or two, the British crossed the lake to Port Dover, where it had been intended to concentrate a sea and land force for a combined attack upon Erie. This failed because the troops could not be got up in season.

ON THE WAY TO BATTLE.

On the 9th, to the joy of all, the little band were joined by Lieut. Elliott, with some officers and ninety men, most of whom were experienced sailors. The squadron, though still lacking a proper equipment, was now thought to be ready for active service, and, on the morning of the 12th of August, sailed up the lake in search of the enemy. A dinner was given to Perry, just before his departure, by the citizens of Erie, at which he expressed a desire to return a victor or in his shroud. The fleet consisted of ten vessels. Before sailing Perry had been created a commander, and Elliott had been promoted to the same rank. Most of the officers were young men—the average ages of the commissioned ones being less than twenty-three years. With few exceptions, they had no acquaintance with the navigation of the lakes. While at Sandusky, Sailing-Master Dobbins, in command of the "Ohio," was ordered to Erie with his vessel, for the purpose of procuring "provisions and other articles," and very unwillingly remained at anchorage in the harbor while the battle was in progress.

THE ENEMY MET AND BEATEN.

On the 10th of September, at the rising of the sun, while the fleet lay in Put-in-Bay, the lookout shouted "Sail, ho!" and the men of the squadron, who were almost instantly astir, saw the British vessels, six in number, rise above the horizon. Feeble from sickness as he was, Perry gave the signal immediately to get under way, adding that he was "determined to fight the enemy that day." At a quarter before 12 o'clock, when the "Detroit" and "Lawrence" were still more than a mile apart, the sound of a bugle was heard on the British flagship, followed by cheers along their line, the band struck up "Rule Britannia," and in a moment after the music ceased, a shot was thrown at the "Lawrence" which fell short.

The purpose of this sketch being to deal with the subject mainly in its local bearings, no attempt will be made to give a minute account of the action, which has been graphically described by several of the most eminent writers of the country. It is enough to say, that, through some cause, the real nature of which has been hotly discussed, the "Niagara" did not engage the enemy at close quarters, and the battle, for a time, was maintained "by the 'Lawrence,' 'Caledonia,' 'Scorpion' and 'Ariel,' against the whole British squadron, assisted only by the long twelves of the 'Niagara,' and the distant, rambling shots from the headmost gunboats." The "Lawrence" for two hours sustained the fire of the two heaviest British vessels, as well as some stray shots from the others, "until every gun was dismantled, two-thirds of her crew killed or wounded, and the ship so badly cut up aloft as to be unmanageable." In this critical situation, Perry took his fighting flag under his arm and passed in a row boat, accompanied by his brother and four men, to the "Niagara," which was making an effort to gain the head of the enemy's line. The British felt sure that the day was theirs and sent up a cheer.

On boarding the "Niagara," Perry, who had stood erect in the boat the whole way, was met cordially by Elliott, in command of the vessel, who offered and was ordered to bring the gunboats into close action, while the former assumed command of the vessel. The gunboats being well up, and the "Caledonia" in good position, the signal to break through the British line was shown from the "Niagara" at 2:45 in the afternoon. The fire of the "Niagara" was reserved until she got abreast of the "Detroit," when she poured her starboard at pistol shot into that vessel and the "Queen Charlotte," while with the port broadside she sent a storm of ball into the "Lady Provost" and "Chippewa." The "Caledonia" and the gunboats followed close behind, dealing death on both sides, and the "Detroit" having fouled with the "Queen Charlotte," neither vessel was able to reply. After passing through the British line, the "Niagara" rounded to under their lee, and sent one broadside after another into the entangled vessels, causing such fearful damage that in fifteen minutes from the time she bore up a white handkerchief was waved from the "Queen Charlotte" as a symbol of submission, shortly succeeded by one from the "Detroit." The firing ceased almost instantly, after a struggle of almost three hours' duration. Two of the smaller British vessels undertook to escape, but were brought back by the "Scorpion" and "Trippe."

PERRY'S FAMOUS DISPATCH.

When the smoke of battle cleared away, the two squadrons were found to be intermingled, with the exception of the shattered "Lawrence," which was drifting with the wind some distance to the eastward. As the shout of victory went up, her flag, which had been struck after Perry left, was again hoisted to the masthead by the remaining few of her crew who were able to witness the triumph of their comrades. Perry sat down as soon as the firing had ceased and wrote on the back of an old letter this modest and memorable epistle to Gen. Harrison:

UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP NIAGARA,

September 10, 4 P. M.

DEAR GENERAL: We have met the enemy and they are ours; two ships, two brigs, one schooner, and one sloop.

Yours with great respect and esteem,

O. H. PERRY.

To the Secretary of the Navy he messaged: "It has pleased the Almighty to give to the United States a signal victory on this lake," detailing the number of captured vessels. These brief dispatches were forwarded by schooner to Gen. Harrison, then at the mouth of Portage river, distant some twelve miles.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration, the victory of Perry was one of the proudest in naval annals. The Americans had the most vessels, but the British had the superiority in guns, their number being sixty-three to our fifty-four. The men engaged were about equal in number, but the British marines were veterans while ours were chiefly raw volunteers.

The captured squadron consisted of the "Detroit," "Queen Charlotte," "Lady Provost," "Chippewa," "Hunter" and "Little Belt." Their killed were forty-one and the wounded ninety-four, being more than one in four of the men engaged. The casualties on the American side were twenty-seven killed and ninety-six wounded, of whom two-thirds belonged to the crew of the "Lawrence."

AFTER THE VICTORY.

The badly wounded were put on board the "Lawrence," which had been sufficiently repaired for the purpose, and brought to Erie, reaching port on the 23d, thirteen days after the battle. The citizens of Erie vied with each other in showing them every attention, no discrimination being made between friend and foe.

The Americans being now in absolute control of the lake, Perry and Harrison commenced instant preparations to retrieve the disasters to our cause on the frontier. Harrison's army, which had received large accessions of volunteers, was mainly transported on the serviceable vessels of the two fleets to the Canadian shore near the head of the lake. The British abandoned Malden, retreating up the Detroit river, followed by our army and squadron. At Sandwich, after finding he could be of no direct service on the water, Perry volunteered as an aide to Harrison. The battle of the Thames, the defeat of Proctor and the death of Tecumseh followed, wiping out all armed resistance in that quarter and leaving the western part of Canada in the quiet possession of the Americans.

Taking Harrison and his staff, who had been ordered to Fort George, on board the "Ariel," Perry sailed for Erie, where the "Niagara" was ordered to meet him. At Put-in-Bay the captured British naval commander, Barclay, and his attending surgeon were invited to join the party, and willingly accepted. The "Ariel," with her distinguished passengers, arrived at Erie on the morning of the 22d of October. As the vessel appeared off the point of the peninsula, two field pieces greeted her with a national salute. A large delegation of citizens met Perry at the foot of French street, escorted him and his party to "Duncan's Hotel" and almost smothered him with congratulations. In the evening, the town was illuminated and a torchlight procession paraded the streets. Perry had requested that no noise or display should be made near the hotel to annoy the wounded Commodore, a desire that was courteously complied with. The "Niagara" arrived at Erie the afternoon of the same day as the "Ariel." The forenoon of the 23d Perry employed in a visit to the "Lawrence," which lay at anchor in Misery bay, and in the afternoon he sailed for Buffalo, accompanied by Harrison and Barclay. Reaching that place on the 24th, he turned over the command on the Upper Lakes to Elliott, and journeyed eastward by land "amid a blaze of rejoicing." He never returned to Erie. While in charge of the squadron in the West Indies he was attacked by yellow fever, and died in 1819, on the anniversary of his birthday (August 23), at the early age of thirty-four.

The season being well advanced, Elliott ordered the vessels into winter quarters—the "Ariel" and "Chippewa" going to Buffalo, where they were driven ashore and went to pieces; the "Trippe" and "Little Belt" to Black Rock, where they were burned by the British when they crossed over to Buffalo, and the balance of the squadron to Erie.

On the 30th of December word reached Erie that an army of British and Indians had landed at Black Rock, forced our army to retreat, burned the villages of Black Rock and Buffalo, captured and destroyed the government vessels, and, flushed with triumph, were advancing up the lake for the purpose of capturing Erie. A defensive force of 4,000 State militia was collected. Though the rumor of a British advance proved false, a considerable body of troops was kept at Erie during the winter. The principal camp was just north of the First Presbyterian church, where the ground was covered with low log barracks, most of which burned down soon after they were abandoned.

A duel, growing out of the frequent disputes over the respective merits of Elliott and Perry, took place during the winter near the corner of Third and Sassafras streets, between Midshipman Senat, who commanded the "Porcupine" during the fight, and Acting Master McDonald, resulting in the death of the former. The unfortunate man was engaged to an Erie lady at the time.

CAMPAIGN OF 1814.

As soon as the ice was out of the lake, Elliott sent Dobbins on a cruise between Erie and Long Point, to obtain information of the enemy's movements and intercept any supplies that might be going by water.

In April Elliott was ordered to Lake Ontario, being succeeded by Capt. Arthur Sinclair. An expedition against Mackinaw was planned. The "Lawrence" and "Niagara" were rendered seaworthy, the "Detroit" and "Queen Charlotte" were brought from Put-in-Bay to Erie, and the squadron sailed for the upper lakes on the 25th of June. Their attack was repulsed and the expedition returned to Erie, with the exception of the "Scorpion" and "Tigress." These vessels were surprised and captured at the lower end of Lake Huron, by a body of British and Indians, who boarded them in boats at night. Sinclair left the "Lawrence" at Erie, and with the balance of the squadron conveyed a portion of the troops to Buffalo. Remaining there a few days, he came back to Erie, leaving the "Somers" and "Ohio," from which Dobbins had been detached, at the lower end of the lake. Shortly afterward, these vessels, while lying at anchor at Fort Erie, were boarded at night, and captured by a British party, making six that were destroyed by the enemy after the battle.

DISPOSAL OF THE VESSELS.

In 1815, orders were issued to dispose of the vessels to the best advantage. The "Lawrence," "Detroit" and "Queen Charlotte" were sunk for preservation in Misery bay; the "Caledonia" and "Lady Provost" were sold and converted into merchant vessels; the "Porcupine" was transferred to the revenue service, and the "Niagara" was kept afloat as a receiving ship for some years when she was beached on the northeast side of Misery bay.

At the auction of government property, upon the breaking up of the naval station, June 12, 1826, the "Lawrence," "Detroit," "Niagara" and "Queen Charlotte" were purchased by a Mr. Brown, of Rochester, who re-sold them in 1836 to Capt. George Miles and others. They raised some of the vessels, intending to fit them up for the merchant service. The "Detroit" and "Queen Charlotte" were found in tolerable condition, but the "Lawrence" being so badly riddled that she was not worth repairing, was again allowed to sink in the waters of the bay. After some years of duty, the "Detroit" was dismantled and sent adrift to go over Niagara Falls as a spectacle. Capt. Miles transferred his interest in the "Lawrence" and "Niagara" to Leander Dobbins in 1857, who in turn disposed of the vessel in 1875 to John Dunlap and Thomas J. Viers. In the spring of 1876, the latter had her raised, cut in two and transported on cars to Philadelphia for exhibition at the Centennial. The people, however, would not believe that a vessel no larger than a modern canal boat was the famous "Lawrence." The show proved a disastrous financial failure, and the old hulk was finally purchased by a firm who expected to realize something by converting it into relics. The "Niagara" was never removed from the place where she was beached. [See Chapter XVI.]

The bell of the "Queen Charlotte" was bought at auction by Rufus S. Reed, and presented to the borough of Erie. It hung in the court house that stood in the park till the building was torn down, when it passed into various hands, and was used for a period as a fire alarm. On one occasion it was rung so violently that it became cracked. It then fell into disuse and was lost sight of until 1893, when it became the property of the city, and is now suspended in the main corridor of the city hall.

ERIE COUNTY SOLDIERS AND OFFICERS.

The following is a partial list of officers from Erie county, who participated in the war:

Quartermaster General, Wilson Smith, 1812-14. Major General, Sixteenth Division—John Phillips, 1814. Brigadier General, First Brigade, Sixteenth Division—John Kelso, 1812-14; Henry Hurst, 1814. Paymaster, John Phillips, 1812-13. Major and Lieutenant Colonel, Dr. John C. Wallace. Commissaries, Rufus S. Reed, Stephen Wolverton. Sergeant Major, Henry Colt.

The members of Capt. Thomas Forster's company of "Erie Light Infantry," who spent the winter of 1812 at Buffalo, were as follows: First Lieutenant, Thomas Rees; Ensign, Thomas Stewart; First Sergeant, Thomas Wilkins; Second Sergeant, John Hay; Drummer, Ira Glazier; Fifer, Rufus Clough; Privates—Archibald McSparran, George Kelley, John Sloan, William Murray, Jonas Duncan,

Among those who came to Erie as ship-builders and became permanent residents of the town were John Justice, John Richards and Jeremiah Osborne.

THREE MEN KILLED AS DESERTERS.

Among the State militia who came on to defend Erie was James Bird, a young man from Center county. He volunteered for service in Perry's fleet and fought gallantly on the "Lawrence," receiving a severe wound.

In the spring of 1814, a warehouse having been fitted up at the mouth of Mill creek, Bird was one of the guard assigned for its protection. He and John Rankin, another marine, took advantage of the opportunity to desert. They were recognized shortly after at a tavern in Mercer county, brought back to Erie, tried by court martial, and condemned to death. A sailor named John Davis, who had deserted several times, was tried and sentenced with them to the same fate.

Their execution took place in October, 1814, on board the "Niagara," lying at anchor in Misery bay, Bird and Rankin being shot, and Davis hung at the yard arm. The bodies were interred on the sand beach, east of the mouth of Mill creek.

CHAPTER XVIII.

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS—CHURCH BUILDINGS—SUNDAY-SCHOOLS—OLD GRAVEYARDS—CEMETERIES, ETC.—[See Chapters VIII and IX Erie City; also Corry, Borough and Township Chapters.]

THE Catholic priests who accompanied the French to this section in 1753 caused a small log chapel to be erected at Fort Presque Isle, and another within the walls of Fort LeBœuf, at Waterford, in which the solemn rites of the mother church were regularly administered until the departure of the invading forces in 1759. As far as any record exists, these were the only religious services held within the bounds of Erie county previous to the year 1797.

The first Protestant exercises of which there is any account took place at Colt's Station, in Greenfield township, on Sunday, the 2d of July, 1797. About thirty persons assembled in response to a general invitation. No minister was located within the bounds of the county, and the services were led by Judah Colt, founder of the settlement.

THE PRESBYTERIANS FIRST IN THE FIELD.

In 1799 a tour was made through this section by Revs. McCurdy and Stockton, two missionaries who were sent out by the Ohio and Redstone Presbyteries. They visited Erie, Waterford and North East, and preached at each place. A period of two years ensued before the colonists were favored with another ministerial visitation, when Mr. McCurdy was again sent forth, assisted by Revs. Satterfield, Tate and Boyd, all of the Presbyteries above named. The first two reached Middlebrook, in Venango township, in August, 1801, and preached in a chopping that had been prepared for the purpose on the bank of French creek.

The efforts of the two ministers met with such favor that it was resolved upon the spot that a meeting house should be put up within the ensuing week. On the next Thursday the population for miles around gathered at the site that had been chosen, and by night had a rough log building under roof, the first house for Protestant worship erected in Erie county. This structure was succeeded by another and better one in 1802, known to every old settler as the Middlebrook Church. From Middlebrook, after organizing a congregation of eighteen members, Messrs. McCurdy and Satterfield continued their journey to Colt's Station and North East, where they were joined by Messrs. Tate and Boyd. At the latter place these four participated in the first sacrament of the Lord's Supper ever administered in Erie county, according to Protestant forms, on the 27th of September, 1801. An audience of about 300 had assembled, of whom some forty sat down to the tables. A congregation with the title of "The Churches of Upper and Lower Greenfield" was organized at the same time.

The Erie Presbytery was established on the 2d of October, 1801, including the territory between the Ohio and Allegheny rivers and Lake Erie, extending some distance also west of the Ohio line. The Presbytery first met at Mt. Pleasant, Beaver county, on the 13th of April, 1802, seven ministers only being in attendance. Supplications were filed from Upper and Lower Greenfield, Middlebrook and Presque Isle. Revs. McCurdy, Satterfield and McPherrin were chosen missionaries.

FIRST REGULAR PREACHERS.

Rev. Robert Patterson, who had accepted a call from "The Churches of Upper and Lower Greenfield," was received by the Presbytery on the 30th of September, 1802. He returned to North East, and entered upon his pastoral work on the 31st of December. A log church was built at North East in 1804, on the knoll now occupied by the cemetery of that borough. Mr. Patterson preached at Springfield during that year, and organized a preaching point there. The first church in the latter township was built in 1804 on the site of the cemetery at East Springfield.

Rev. Johnson Eaton came on from the southern part of the State in April, 1805, and preached for some time at the mouth of Walnut creek and in Springfield. In the fall of that year he went back to his home, returning in 1806 with a bride, and settling permanently in Fairview township. He had the whole county for his field, but gave special attention to the people at Fairview and Springfield. In 1807 he succeeded Mr. Patterson at North East, and he also held occasional services for several years at Colt's Station, Middlebrook, Waterford and Erie. A church was built at the mouth of Walnut creek in 1810. During the war with Great Britain, Mr. Eaton gave his services to the government as a chaplain, besides ministering to his congregation with as much regularity as the unsettled condition of the time would allow. By 1816, the population of Erie had increased sufficiently to enable an arrangement to be made by which he gave one-third of his time to the congregation there, which had been organized by him September 15, 1815. He continued as pastor of the Erie congregation until 1823, and of the Fairview church until his death, on the 17th of June, 1847.

In 1808, supplies were granted by the Presbytery to "Upper Greenfield, Middlebrook, Waterford and Erietown," and in 1809 it was reported to that body that none of these places could support a pastor.

No regular preaching of any kind was had at Erie until Mr. Eaton was called to give one-third of his time, as before stated.

The Presbyterian congregation at Waterford was organized in 1809, and that at Union in 1811, being the first in those places. Rev. John Matthews was settled as pastor of the Waterford congregation October 17, 1810. The Union congregation did not put up a building till 1831, and that of Waterford till 1834. In 1817, Rev. Mr. Camp was employed as a missionary to supply the churches unable to support a pastor, and served in that capacity for two years. The minutes of the Presbytery in 1820 show congregations at Springfield, North East, Waterford, Middlebrook, Union, Fairview and Erie.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPALIANS.

Occasional services were held by members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at an early date in various portions of the county, but principally in the western and southwestern townships. The first of which there is any positive knowledge was led by Rev. Joseph Bowen, a local preacher, at the house of Mrs. Mershon, near West Springfield, in September, 1800. A class was organized near Lexington, in Conneaut township, in 1801, and the same year a great revival was held at Ash's Corners, Washington township. The first church building was erected in 1804, about a mile south of West Springfield. The first quarterly meeting was held in that church in July, 1810. Meetings of the denomination in Erie were held by circuit preachers, at long intervals, commencing in 1801. Worship took place in the winter of 1810-11, in a tavern on the west side of French street, between Sixth and Seventh. A congregation would seem to have been partially established soon after the beginning of the century, but was probably unable to support a pastor until 1826, at which period the First Church of Erie city dates its organization. The earliest of the other congregations in the county were those at Mill Village, organized in 1810; North East, in 1812; Fair Haven, Girard township, 1815; Girard borough, 1815; Waterford borough, 1816; Union City and Fairview, 1817; Middleboro, 1819; Northville, 1820; Wattsburg, 1827; Wesleyville, 1828.

OTHER PROTESTANT DENOMINATIONS.

Rev. Robert Reid, a minister of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, gathered a congregation in Erie in 1811, which was the first regularly organized religious body in the city. Services were held in a school-house until 1816, when a church building was erected, eight years in advance of that of the First Presbyterian congregation. These two were the sole religious organizations in the city in 1820. A second society was organized by Mr. Reid at Waterford in 1812, three years after the Presbyterian body of that place.

In the year 1815 or '16, Rev. Charles Colson, a Lutheran minister from Germany, organized four congregations of that church, one each at Meadville, French Creek, Conneaut and Erie. The Erie society died out very soon, and does not appear to have been revived until many years later. The earliest Lutheran church in Erie city was built in 1836.

No organization of the Episcopalians was effected till March 17, 1827, when a number of persons withdrew from the Presbyterian church of Erie and became united as St. Paul's Episcopal congregation. Rev. Charles Smith came on from Philadelphia and assumed charge as rector. Services were held in the court-house till a building was completed in November, 1832. The Waterford society was organized the same year as the one at Erie.

The first building of the Christian denomination was erected at East Springfield in 1826, and the second in Fairview township in 1835.

The Lake Erie Universalist Association was organized in Wellsburg in 1830, where a church had been established the preceding year. The Erie church was not organized until 1844.

The earliest Baptist congregation was in Harbor Creek township in 1822. This was followed by societies in Erie in 1831, and in North East and Waterford townships in 1832.

The other Protestant denominations existing in the county are comparatively new and will be referred to in their proper connection.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

The Roman Catholics had no organization in the county until 1833, when a church was erected in the northern part of McKean township, and occupied until the new one was put up in Middleboro. St. Mary's and St. Patrick's congregations in Erie date from 1833 and 1837 respectively. The Catholics now number more communicants than any single denomination in the county. Their Cathedral church, at the corner of Tenth and Sassafras streets, in Erie, is the most extensive, costly and handsome religious edifice in this part of Pennsylvania. The corner-stone was laid August 1, 1875, and the building was dedicated August 2, 1893, having been eighteen years in process of erection, after the foundation walls had been laid.

The Erie Diocese comprises the counties of Erie, Crawford, Mercer, Venango, Forest, Clarion, Jefferson, Clearfield, Cameron, Elk, McKean, Potter and Warren. It was established in 1853, Rt. Rev. Michael O'Connor being the first bishop. He was transferred from Pittsburg in 1853, and re-transferred in 1854. His successor, Rt. Rev. J. M. Young, was consecrated April 23, 1854, and died September 18, 1866. Rt. Rev. T. Mullen, present bishop, was consecrated August 2, 1868. The vicar-generals have been the Very Revs. John D. Coady, Thomas A.

Casey and Peter J. Sheridan, the latter being the present incumbent.

EARLY SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The first Sunday-school in the county was founded by Rev. Mr. Morton and Col. James Moorhead, at Moorheadville, in 1817. In 1818, Mrs. Judah Colt returned to Erie after a visit to New England, where schools for the religious instruction of children on the Sabbath had recently been introduced, and, by the aid of Mrs. R. S. Reed and Mrs. Carr, established a class for girls, which met alternately at the houses of the ladies named. A public meeting was held in the court house on the 25th of March, 1821, to consider the project of regularly organizing "a Sunday-school and Moral Society." A paper for contributions was passed around, and the sum of $28.50 subscribed to procure suitable books. The school commenced in May with an attendance of sixty-four. Horace Greeley, then an employe in the office of the Erie Gazette, was one of the scholars in the winter of 1830-31. A second school was started in September, 1830, by the ladies of St. Paul's Episcopal congregation, and held its sessions in the court house until their church building was completed. The first schools had to encounter some opposition, even from zealous church members.

BIBLE SOCIETY AND Y. M. C. ASSOCIATION.

The Erie County Bible Society was established in 1824, and has been in continuous operation ever since. Its mission is to distribute the Holy Book free of cost to those who are too poor to buy, and at a moderate price to persons in better circumstances. It celebrated its seventy-first anniversary in April, 1895.

The first officers were Rev. Johnston Eaton, president; Rev. Robert Reid, vice-president; E. D. Gunnison, treasurer; George Selden, secretary; Giles Sanford, William Gould, Robert Porter, John McCord, Joseph Selden, Judah Colt, Robert McClelland, John Phillips, Oliver Alford, directors.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Erie was organized in September, 1860. The society owns a fine building at the corner of Tenth and Peach streets, which is conveniently fitted up for the purpose.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES.

The Society of Christian Endeavor was originated in Portland, Me., by Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark and wife, pastor of the Williston Church of that city, in the year 1881. The idea "took" with amazing fervor and the organization spread until it has societies in nearly every part of the world. At the last general convention of the society, held in Boston, in 1895, there was an attendance of over 50,000—the largest religious gathering ever known in America. The Erie County Union of Christian Endeavor was organized November 21, 1894, with Herman Eldridge, of Erie, as president; Miss Margaret McCord, of Erie, as corresponding secretary; Miss Ellen McCord, of North East, as recording secretary, and Mr. J. A. Bebee, of Union City, as treasurer. It embraces all of the societies in Erie county, fifty-two in number at the time of writing, July 20, 1895. The State convention of Christian Endeavor Societies was held in Erie during the last week in August, 1895.

OLD GRAVEYARDS AND MODERN CEMETERIES.

The first burial place of which there is a record was established at Colt's Station in Greenfield township, on the 6th of July, 1801. A party of fifteen met and cleared off an acre for the interment of the dead, which has remained as a graveyard to this day. Their example led the people of Middlebrook to follow suit, and a burial place was begun there in the following month. A graveyard was established at Erie nearly at the same time, on the bank of the lake, near the mouth of Mill creek, but was abandoned about 1805. Others were located at an early day at Waterford, North East, Fairview, Springfield and elsewhere.

In 1805, three lots were set aside for a graveyard at the southeast corner of French and Eighth streets, Erie, which was used by all denominations until 1827, when it became the property of the United Presbyterian Church. The property was sold in 1862 and the bodies were removed to the cemetery. The Presbyterians purchased four lots at the southeast corner of Seventh and Myrtle streets, in Erie, in 1826, and used them for burial purposes for upward of twenty years, when the bodies were taken up and the land sold. Near by was the Episcopal graveyard, established in 1827.

Ground for the earliest Catholic graveyard was purchased in 1837, and the property was duly consecrated August 2, 1840. It was established by St. Mary's congregation, and occupied the site of St. Benedict's Academy. In 1848, a large tract on Chestnut street, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth, was purchased, to which the bodies were removed from Ninth street, and which was long in use. St. Patrick's congregation started a small graveyard, about 1838, on Third street, between German and Parade. Finding it insufficient for their purpose, they purchased a five-acre tract, in 1852, at the corner of Twenty-fourth and Sassafras streets. Since the consecration of Trinity cemetery, in 1869, these graveyards have all been abandoned and the bones of the dead taken to the new location.

A graveyard has been maintained in connection with St. John's Lutheran Church for many years, but no further burials take place in it.

As the county increased in population, graveyards were located in every section, some of which continue, while the sites of others have almost or entirely been forgotten. Many families chose burial places on their farms, and some of these still exist. The establishment of the cemetery at Erie, which was dedicated in May, 1851, and speedily became one of the handsomest in the Union, has had a good effect upon the whole county.

Corry, Union City, North East, Waterford, Girard, Edinboro, Fairview, Springfield, Sterrettania, Lowville and other places now have cemeteries that speak well for the taste of their citizens.

CHAPTER XIX.

COUNTY, STATE AND UNITED STATES BUILDINGS.

UP to the time of building the first court house, in 1808, court was variously held in "Buehler's Hotel," corner of Third and French streets, in the log jail, which stood at Second and Holland streets, east of French, and in a building belonging to Conrad Brown, on the opposite corner from the hotel above mentioned. The original court house was a small brick building, that stood in the West Park, at Erie, a little north of the Soldiers and Sailors' monument. The county was too poor to afford the total expense, and the State generously granted $2,000 toward the erection of the building. On Sunday morning, March 23, 1823, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, this court house was destroyed by fire, with all the books, papers and records. The ensuing term of court was held in the Erie Academy, and that edifice was rented for county purposes and occupied by the various county officials for two years.

In 1824 the County Commissioners entered into contracts for the erection of a new building, which was completed and occupied in the spring of 1825. It stood nearly on the site of its predecessor, and was a two-story brick structure, surmounted by a wooden cupola. For nearly thirty years this was the principal hall of the town, being used for religious worship, political meetings, entertainments, and, in fact, for almost every public purpose. The building was long the most elegant court house in Northwestern Pennsylvania, and its erection was a heavy burden upon the county. In the cupola hung the bell of the captured British vessel, the "Queen Charlotte," a brief history of which has been given in a previous chapter. A little to the west of the court house was a two-story building containing the county offices.

The corner-stone of the third and present court house was laid on Tuesday, August 17, 1852. The building required nearly three years to complete, the first court held therein being on the 7th of May, 1855. It originally cost some $63,000, but subsequent additions and improvements have brought the sum to about $130,000. The land on which the court house stands was purchased for the County Commissioners in 1804. It was upon this lot, within the old jail ground, that Henry Francisco, the only person ever executed in the county by judicial sentence, was hung in 1838.

In 1889-90 the court house was enlarged by the addition of a wing, etc., to accommodate the increased business of the county, at a cost, with furnishings, of about $40,000. The original building was surmounted by a bell tower and had a fence in front, both of which were removed in 1894.

The cost of maintaining the court house, inclusive of heating and lighting the jail, and supplying the same with city water, was given as follows in the report of the County Commissioners for 1894:

Heating court-house and jail.....	$1,100 00
Lighting court-house and jail.....	1,045 87
Watchman's salary.....	720 00
Furniture, etc.....	137 44

$7,412 80

[For a list of Judges, Attorneys and Court Criers, see Chapter XX.]

THE COUNTY JAIL.

The first jail was a small log building, on the southwest corner of Holland and Second streets. A second jail, of brick, was put up on the site of the present court house in 1830. The third and existing jail was erected in 1850, and remodeled in 1869 at an expense of $30,671. Its total cost up to date, including sheriff's residence, which occupies the Fifth street front, is about $60,000. On the third floor of the sheriff's house is the hospital, in which are various conveniences for the sick.

The regular bill of fare for the prisoners is as follows: Breakfast—a loaf of bread and cup of coffee; dinner—meat, potatoes, and sometimes other vegetables; supper—a cup of tea and the balance of the bread left from breakfast and dinner. The meals are banded in to the prisoners through a narrow opening in the wall between the jail and the sheriff's kitchen. To the above is frequently added some palatable dish, through the kindness of the sheriff's family, and on holidays the prisoners are usually treated to roast turkey.

Prisoners of the worst class are sentenced to the Western Penitentiary at Allegheny; young men who are convicted of the first offense to the Allegheny County Work House and boys and girls to the State Reform School at Morganza, Washington county, or the Reformatory at Huntingdon.

The first jailer was Robert Irvin, who was succeeded by John Gray, James Gray, William Judd, Robert Kincaid and Cornelius Foy. John Gray held the position, off and on, for many years. The first sheriff who acted in the capacity of jailer was Albert Thayer, who was elected in 1825. For some years past the sheriff's duties have been too onerous to allow of his taking immediate charge of the jail, and the institution has been in care of a warden, acting under and responsible to that officer. [For list of Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs and Wardens, see Chapter XXVIII.]

The cost of maintaining the jail, as shown by the report of the County Commissioners for 1894, was as follows, exclusive of heat, light and water:

Clothing for prisoners.....	$ 26 64
Furniture, etc.....	72 00
Physician and medicine.....	125 00
Repairs, etc.....	99 88
Boarding prisoners (paid on account).....	3,000 00

COUNTY ALMSHOUSE.

John H. Walker, while a member of the Assembly, in 1832, procured an act ceding the third section of two thousand acres of State land in Mill Creek township, west of Erie, to the borough, the proceeds to be used in constructing a canal basin in the harbor.

It was stipulated in the act that one hundred acres should be reserved to Erie county, on which to erect an almshouse, the land to be selected by three Commissioners appointed by the County Commissioners. The latter officers, on May 7, 1833, named William Miles, George Moore and David McNair, who chose the piece of ground on the Ridge road, three miles west of Erie, which has ever since been known as the "poor house farm." The original tract was increased to about one hundred and thirteen acres, including the allowance, by the purchase of eight and three-fourths acres from Martin Warfel in 1877. This was added to subsequently by purchasing some five acres of the abandoned canal bed, making the present size of the farm about one hundred and eighteen acres.

Soon after the selection of the farm, an agitation began for the erection of a county almshouse on the property. A proposition to that effect was submitted to the people in 1839, and, after a hard fight, was voted down by a majority of 154. The friends of the measure claimed that the question had not been fairly treated, and it was again brought before the people at the spring election of 1840, when it was carried by the close vote of 1,599 in favor to 1,594 in opposition. Three Directors of the Poor were elected the same year. Contracts were soon after let for the construction of a building, and by the fall of 1841 it was ready for the reception of the paupers. Before that each borough and township took care of its own poor, under the supervision of two overseers elected by their citizens. While Mr. Stranahan was a member of the Legislature, he secured an act changing the almshouse to the southern part of the county, but the opposition of the city and the lake shore townships resulted in its repeal and the retention of the building upon its original site.

The present edifice was commenced in 1870 and substantially completed in 1871, though the finishing and furnishing continued until 1873. Its cost was $118,000. A further sum of $10,000 was voted in 1874, of which perhaps one-half was applied to the improvement of the building and grounds. About $3,000 of the balance are understood to have been used in building the barn, and nearly $2,000 in putting down gas wells upon the farm. A building for insane male persons was added in 1875, at a cost of about $2,000.

The food supplied to the inmates is clean and abundant, though plain. The hours for meals are: Breakfast at 7:15, dinner at 12:30, and supper at 5:30 or 6. Every inmate is obliged to be in bed by 9 o'clock p. m. and to rise by half-past six in the morning. Those who are over thirty-five years of age are allowed a certain quantity of tobacco each week. Few of the paupers are able to work, and those who are have to make themselves useful, the men by helping in the garden or on the farm, and the women by sewing or doing household service.

The poor house farm is one of the best in the county, and has generally been kept under fine cultivation. A few rods north of the buildings is a large spring, which will furnish an ample supply of water for all the needs of the institution to the end of time. A little to the east, inclosed by a neat fence, is the pauper burial ground, which already contains the bodies of about 200 unfortunates. Each grave is marked by a stone and a number corresponding with the one in the death book.

The charity system of the county is in charge of three Directors of the Poor, one of whom is elected annually. They employ a Steward of the almshouse, a Secretary and Treasurer, an Attorney, a Physician for the almshouse (who also attends to the Erie poor), and one physician each at Corry, North East, Union and other important points in the county. [For a list of the Directors of the Poor, Stewards of the Almshouse, and other officers of the Board, see Chapter XXVIII.]

STATE BUILDINGS—SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME.

While Hon. Morrow B. Lowry was a member of the State Senate, he conceived the idea of a Marine Hospital at Erie, for the care of sick and unfortunate seamen of the lake service. Through his efforts, appropriations were made from year to year, until a building was erected which constitutes in the main, the central portion of the present Soldiers' and Sailors' Home. The structure was never used for the purpose of the original appropriation, and was neglected for some years until it became badly out of repair. On June 3, 1885, a bill was introduced in the Legislature by Hon. I. B. Brown, of Corry, passed and approved by the Governor, creating a commission to locate a Home "for the disabled soldiers and sailors of Pennsylvania." This body, consisting of Gov. Pattison and ten other prominent citizens, concluded to make use of the Marine Hospital for the purpose. An appropriation was secured, Trustees appointed, additions made to the original structure, and, within less than a year from the day of the first legislation on the subject, the institution was ready for occupancy. The two most active men in "working up" the enterprise were Maj. John W. Walker and Capt. John H. Welsh, both of Erie.

The Home was dedicated on the 22d of February, 1887, at which time it was formally opened for inmates. Gen. Gobin, of Lebanon, delivered the dedicatory address, and speeches were made by Gov. Pattison and others. Maj. W. W. Tyson was appointed Commander, and has remained in the position ever since. He is assisted by Capt. N. W. Lowell as Quartermaster, who was chosen March 1, 1888. Dr. S. F. Chapin has been Surgeon since October 1, 1889, and David Reinhold Resident Physician since the fall of 1895.

The buildings have been much enlarged and improved, and the grounds, which embrace 107 acres, are kept up in a handsome manner. Altogether, the institution is a great credit to the State, and makes a most comfortable abiding place for the aged and unfortunate soldiers and sailors who become inmates. None but those who are disabled and without proper means of support are received.

The institution is in charge of a board of Trustees, of whom the Governor is, ex-officio, the President.

On the grounds of the Home is a blockhouse in imitation of the one in which Gen. Anthony Wayne died, which stands on or very near the place of his burial. It contains portions of his coffin and various mementos of the Revolutionary hero. The main men in locating Gen. Wayne's grave and securing the erection of the blockhouse were Dr. Edward W. Germer and Capt. John H. Welsh. [See Chapter VII., Erie City.]

NORMAL SCHOOL AT EDINBORO.

The Normal School at Edinboro for the training of teachers in the common schools, was first recognized as a State institution on January 26, 1861. It embraces a number of buildings, generally well adapted for the purpose, and in the main has had a large degree of success. The school was managed by Prof. J. A. Cooper from 1863 to 1892, and, since the latter date, by Prof. Martin G. Benedict. [See Edinboro.]

STATE FISH HATCHERIES.

Erie county has been selected as the site of two of the State hatcheries, for the propagation of fish, to restock the rivers, lakes and creeks—one at Erie and the other at Corry.

The one at Corry was established in 1873, by Seth Weeks, as a private enterprise, and made a State institution in 1876. It is located in Wayne township, a short distance east of Corry, and is wholly supplied by springs, which burst out copiously from the hill near by. [See Wayne township.]

The Erie hatchery was opened December 12, 1885. It occupies a neat building at the corner of Second and Sassafras streets, and draws its supply of water from the city water works. From 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 small fry—largely white fish—are hatched out each season, and placed in the lake or other suitable places. [See Erie City.]

Both hatcheries are under the supervision of the State Fish Commission, and in charge of William Buller, who has brought them up to a high state of efficiency.

UNITED STATES BUILDINGS.

Before the purchase of a government edifice in Erie, the postoffice and Collector's office were housed in private buildings. In 1844 Congress appropriated $27,000 for a government structure in Erie. Previous to that—in 1836-7—the United States Bank of Pennsylvania had erected a marble building for its branch in Erie, on the east side of State street, near Fourth, with a house for its cashier adjoining. The bank failed, and the Government bought the building in 1849. It was soon after occupied as the custom house, and the postoffice was moved into it in 1853. On the establishment of the internal revenue system, the offices for this district were located in the same building, which caused it to be inconveniently crowded. The postoffice was removed to the Noble block in 1867, and afterward to one of the store rooms in the Reed House.

In 1882 Congressman Watson secured an appropriation of $150,000 for a building in Erie, which should be adapted for the various United States offices in the city and district. This sum was increased to $250,000 through the efforts of Congressman Brainerd. A Commission on the part of the government selected the site of the old Rufus S. Reed mansion, at the southeast corner of Central Park and State street. For this the sum of $30,000 was paid. Ground for the building was broken in April, 1885, Henry Shenk being the contractor, Jacob Bootz, the superintendent, and Jos. P. O'Brien clerk to the latter officer. The structure was completed in 1887, within the amount appropriated, inclusive of the furniture. It was occupied by the post-office and custom house shortly after. The first floor is used by the postoffice; the second by the Collector of customs and the internal revenue offices. On the third floor are two rooms for the United States Courts and the offices appertaining to the same, and the fourth floor is used by the weather office, for jury rooms, etc.

The building fronts seventy-two feet on State street, and one hundred and fourteen on Central Park. The Collector of the port is custodian, makes all the appointments that relate to its care, and looks after repairs and improvements.

CHAPTER XX.

THE COURTS, JUDGES AND BAR OF ERIE COUNTY—SUPREME COURT—UNITED STATES COURTS—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE AND ALDERMEN.

AS heretofore stated, Erie county constituted a sub-division of Allegheny county up to the year 1800, and all judicial proceedings took place at Pittsburg, the county seat. The act creating Erie a separate county is dated the 12th of March, 1800. The county was too sparsely settled to maintain a distinct organization, and by the act of April 9, 1801, Erie, Crawford, Mercer, Venango and Warren were thrown temporarily together for election and governmental purposes. Meadville was designated as the place where the county business should be transacted. This arrangement continued for two years.

The first court in Erie was held by Hon. Jesse Moore, in April, 1803. The hours for convening were announced by the Crier by the blowing of a horn. This horn continued to be used for the purpose until 1823. The Supreme Judges at that time were obliged to hold Circuit Courts in the several counties of the State, and in the course of their duties Judge Yates visited Erie on the 15th of October, 1806, and Judge Brackenridge in 1807 and 1811. A session of the Supreme Court was held in the city in 1854, at which Judges Lewis, Woodward, Lowrie and Knox were present.

The County Courts were held by the President Judge, aided by two Associate Judges—usually farmers of good standing—until May, 1839, when a District Court was created to dispose of the accumulated business in Erie, Crawford, Venango and Mercer counties. Hon. James Thompson, of Venango, was appointed to the District Judgeship, and filled the position until May, 1845. The term originally was for five years, but was extended one year by request of the bar.

Previous to 1851, both the President Judges and Associate Judges were appointed by the Governor. The first election by the people was in October, 1851, when Hon. John Galbraith was chosen President Judge, and Hon. Joseph M. Sterrett and Hon. James Miles, Associates. The office of Additional Law Judge was created in 1856, Hon. David Derickson, of Crawford county, being its first incumbent, and expired by the operation of the constitution on the 17th of April, 1874. The Associate Judges were abolished on November 17, 1856, and since that date the entire duties of the Court have been performed by the President Judge. All law Judges in the State are elected for ten years.

The "new" constitution, which went into operation January 1, 1874, allowed the President Judge of each district, where there was an Additional Law Judge, to elect to which of the districts into which his original jurisdiction had been divided he might be assigned. Under this provision, Judge Wetmore selected the Thirty-seventh District, consisting of Warren and Elk counties, and Judge Vincent, Additional Law Judge for the district, became President Judge of Erie county, which had been created a district by itself.

PRESIDENT, DISTRICT AND ADDITIONAL LAW JUDGES.

The following is a list of the President, District and Additional Law Judges, with the dates of their commissions:

President Judges.—Alexander Addison, Pittsburg, August 17, 1791.

David Clark, Allegheny county, March 3, 1800.

Jesse Moore, Crawford county, April 5, 1803.

Henry Shippen, Huntingdon county, January 24, 1825.

Nathaniel B. Eldred, Wayne county, March 23, 1839.

Gaylord Church, Crawford county, April 3, 1843.

John Galbraith, Erie county, November 6, 1851.

Rasselas Brown, Warren county, June 29, 1860.

Samuel P. Johnson, Warren county, December 3, 1860.

Lansing D. Wetmore, Warren county, first Monday in January, 1870.

John P. Vincent, Erie county, April 17, 1874.

William A. Galbraith, Erie county, first Monday in January, 1877.

Frank Gunnison, Erie county, December 13, 1886.

Additional Law Judges.—David Derickson, Crawford county, first Monday in December, 1856.

John P. Vincent, Erie county, first Monday in December, 1866.

District Judge.—James Thompson, Venango county, May 18, 1839.

Three President Judges have died in office, viz.: Hon. Jesse Moore, at Meadville, on the 21st of December, 1824; Hon. Henry Shippen, at Meadville, in 1839; and Hon. John Galbraith, at Erie, on the 15th of June, 1860. Rasselas Brown, of Warren county, was appointed by the Governor to succeed Judge

John Galbraith, and served until December 3, 1860. One Judge for the district—Hon. Alexander Addison—was impeached and removed from his office. Judge Eldred resigned in 1843, but afterward went on the bench as President Judge of the Dauphin district.

Two of the Judges were promoted to seats on the Supreme Bench of the State. James Thompson was elected one of the Justices of the Supreme Court in 1856, and held the position until 1872, the full term of fifteen years, the last five of which he presided as Chief Justice. Gaylord Church was appointed a Supreme Judge in 1858, to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of one of the members of the Court. Judge William A. Galbraith is a son of Judge John Galbraith, being the only instance in the history of the county where a son was elected to fill a prominent official place occupied by his father.

The salaries of the Judges are paid by the State.

COMPETING CANDIDATES.

The following shows the competing candidates for President and Additional Law Judges since the offices have been elective:

ASSOCIATE JUDGES.

Two Associate Judges assisted the President Judge from the organization of the county until the 17th of November, 1876, when the office was abolished by the new constitution. The Associate Judges were appointed by the Governor until 1851, at which time the office was made elective. The incumbents of the position were not required to be learned in the law, and in every instance were either substantial farmers or intelligent business men. One Associate Judge, William Bell, died in office, and Samuel Smith resigned to take a seat in Congress. Before the constitution of 1838, all judges were commissioned for life or good behavior, but that instrument limited the term of President Judges to ten years and of Associate Judges to five years. The following is a list of the Associate Judges from the time the county was separated from Allegheny, with the dates of their commissions:

Appointed.—David Mead, Crawford county, March 13, 1800, resigned.

John Kelso, Erie county, March 14, 1800; resigned December 21, 1804.

[See Chapter XXVII. for the vote on Associate Judge since 1851.]

CITY RECORDER OF ERIE.

By a special act of Assembly a Recorder's Court was established in cities of the third class, the Recorder to be chosen by the people and to be a person versed in the law. The Court had equal jurisdiction with the city Aldermen in all criminal cases, and in civil cases not involving more than $500. Hon. Selden Marvin, who had been County Judge in Chautauqua county, was elected City Recorder of Erie in the fall of 1877, and continued to hold the position until 1892, three terms of five years each, when the act was pronounced unconstitutional. The Recorder was paid by fees, and his Court was held in a room on the second floor of the Noble block, now the Penn building.

DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

From 1804 to 1850, the position which answers to the present office of District Attorney was known by the title of Deputy Attorney General, and its incumbents were appointed by and retained in office during the pleasure of the Attorney General of the State. The name was changed to District Attorney in 1850, the office was made elective, and the term fixed at three years. Below is a list of the persons who have filled the position:

- 1804—William N. Irvine, Erie.
- William Wallace, Erie.
- 1809—Patrick Farrelly, Crawford county.
- Ralph Marlin, Crawford county.
- 1819—George A. Eliot, Erie.
- 1824—William Kelly, Erie.
- 1833—Don Carlos Barrett, Erie.
- 1835—Galen Foster, Erie.

1836—Elijah Babbitt, Erie.

1837—William M. Watts, Erie.

1839—Carson Graham, Erie.

1845—Horace M. Hawes, Erie.

1846—William A. Galbraith, Erie.

Of the above, all but Messrs. Kelly, Foster, Babbitt and Watts were appointed as anti-Federalists or Democrats. The District Attorneys elected by the people have invariably been Whigs or Republicans, with the exception of Mr. Baker. They are as follows:

1850—Matthew Taylor, Erie.

1853—Samuel E. Woodruff, Girard.

1856—G. Nelson Johnson, Erie. Died shortly after the election, and Charles W. Kelso appointed by the Governor to serve until the October election in 1857.

1884—Cassius L. Baker, Corry.

1887-90—A. E. Sisson, Erie.

1893—U. P. Rossiter, Girard.

[For the vote on District Attorney since 1850, see Chapter XXVII.; and for a list of the other Court officers, see Chapter XXVIII.]

SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Erie county is attached to the Eastern District of the Supreme Court, which holds its sessions at Philadelphia. The hearing of cases from Erie county commences on the last Monday in April of each year.

ONLY EXECUTION BY THE SHERIFF.

Although a number of persons have been tried for murder in the county, the death penalty has only been enforced against a single individual. Henry Francisco was sentenced by Judge Shippen on November 11, 1837, and hung by Sheriff Andrew Scott on March 9, 1838, within the yard of the jail, which then occupied the site of the present court house. [For full particulars, see Chapter XXV.]

John Berr

UNITED STATES COURTS.

By an act of Congress passed in 1860, Erie was named as one of the places for the sittings of the United States District and Circuit Courts for the Western District of Pennsylvania. The Supreme Judges may, if they choose, sit with the Circuit Judge or hold Court alone. The only time one of the Supreme Judges of the United States has been present in Erie was when Judge Strong was here in July, 1875.

The first session of the District Court was held in Erie in January, 1867, and of the Circuit Court in July, 1868, Judge Wilson McCandless presiding. Both Courts were regularly held by him until Hon. William McKennan, of Washington county, was sworn in as Circuit Judge. Judge McCandless continued to serve until July 24, 1876, when he was honorably retired on account of advanced years, and was succeeded as District Judge by Hon. Winthrop W. Ketchum. Judges McKennan and Ketchum were sworn in and began their official duties at Erie. Judges McCandless and Ketchum both died in 1880. The following is a list of the later officers of the Courts, with the dates of their appointment.

Judges U. S. Circuit Court.—William McKennan, Washington county, December 22, 1869; Marcus W. Acheson, Allegheny county, February 3, 1891.

Judges U. S. District Court.—W. W. Ketchum, Luzerne county, June 26, 1876; M. W. Acheson, Allegheny county, January 14, 1880; James H. Reed, February 20, 1891; Joseph Buffington, February 23, 1892.

U. S. District Attorneys.—R. B. Carnahan, Allegheny county, appointed —; H. Bucher Swoope, Clearfield county, 1870; David Reed, Allegheny county, 1874; H. H. McCormick, Allegheny county, June 29, 1876; William A. Stone, Allegheny county, July 6, 1880; George A. Allen, Erie county, December 4, 1886; Walter Lyon, Allegheny county, June 27, 1890; Stephen C. McCandless, Allegheny county, April 26, 1893 (temporarily appointed); Harry Alvin Hall, Elk county, June 8, 1893.

U. S. Marshals.—Samuel McKelvey, Allegheny county, appointed —; Thomas A. Rowley, Allegheny county, 1868; Alex. Murdock, Washington county, 1869; John Hall, Washington county, December 19, 1872; James S. Rutan, Beaver county, May 22, 1882; George W. Miller, Washington county, August 2, 1886; Joseph R. Harrah, December 20, 1889; John W. Walker, Erie county, January 16, 1894.

Clerks U. S. District Court.—Stephen C. McCandless, Allegheny county, appointed November 3, 1863; William T. Lindsey, Allegheny county, May 11, 1891.

Deputy Clerks (all from Erie).—George W. Gunnison, 1867; George A. Allen, 1869; F. W. Grant, 1873.

Clerks U. S. Circuit Court.—Henry Sproul, Allegheny county, —; H. D. Gamble, Allegheny county, January 5, 1870.

Deputy Clerks (all from Erie).—George W. Gunnison, 1868; George A. Allen, 1869; A. B. Force, 1871; Frank W. Grant, November 26, 1875.

The regular terms of both Courts at Erie were originally fixed to commence on the second Monday of January and the third Monday of July. The January term was held at Erie every year until 1875, since when it has been omitted.

Under the old system, the selection of jurors for the United States Courts was wholly in the hands of the Marshal, who summoned any person he pleased. In 1879, Congress passed an act making the Clerk of each Court a Jury Commissioner for his own Court, and requiring him to appoint another Jury Commissioner of opposite politics, thus securing representation on the juries from both of the leading parties.

THE BAR.

The first lawyer to locate in Erie was William Wallace, who came on from Eastern Pennsylvania in 1800, as attorney for the Pennsylvania Population Company. He remained until 1811, when he returned to Harrisburg. The second was William N. Irvine, who settled here in 1804, but also returned to Harrisburg in a few years, eventually becoming President Judge of the Adams district. Among the lawyers who located in Erie at an early day, and who became permanent residents were Anselm Potter, George A. Eliot, Thomas H. Sill, Philo E. Judd and William Kelly.

The early lawyers were obliged to practice in a dozen counties in order to make a livelihood, and some of them were away from their homes and offices more than half of the time. They traveled from one county seat to the other on horseback, with their legal papers and a few books in a sack across the saddle.

Among the first lawyers who practiced at the Erie bar was Henry Baldwin, of Pittsburg, who was appointed a Judge of the U. S. Supreme Court in 1830. John Banks, of Mercer, another practitioner, was appointed Judge of the Berks county Court, and became the Whig candidate for Governor in 1841.

Dudley Marvin, the eminent New York lawyer, was admitted to the Erie bar at an early day. Other early lawyers who practiced at the Erie bar were John B. Wallace, the Fosters, Ralph Martin, Patrick Farrelly, John J. Pearson and Gaylor Church. Gen. C. M. Reed was admitted, but never became a regular practitioner.

A NOTABLE LAW SUIT.

The most notable suit against a railroad company to recover damages for injuries sustained through the negligence or alleged negligence of the company's employes, and one that involved the largest sum of money ever paid in the United States for personal injuries received, was that of Louis Rosenzweig, attorney at law, of Erie, against the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company. The plaintiff had purchased a ticket "good for thirty days from November 25, 1883," for passage from Erie to Cleveland and return. Upon presenting his ticket on the following day, shortly after midnight, on his return trip, he was ejected from the train, on the ground that his ticket was not good on that train, the "Limited Express." The ticket presented was unconditioned, and the plaintiff had no knowledge that a recent order of the company limited its use; yet he tendered cash in payment for his passage, which was refused, and the plaintiff was compelled to alight from the train a short distance out from Cleveland, on a most dangerous part of the railway company's yard, where there were many tracks, and where freight trains were being made up and numerous locomotives, trains and sections of trains were passing in each direction. The plaintiff was an utter stranger to the locality, the night was dark, and the lights of passing engines served to accentuate the darkness when they had passed. While endeavoring to escape the dangers and perils of his position, he was struck in the back and seriously injured. Suit to recover damages was instituted by his law partner, George A. Allen, Esq., and subsequently Samuel A. Davenport and J. Ross Thompson, Esqs., were retained as associate counsel. The defendant company was represented by C. R. Roys, Esq., of Chicago, Hon. John P.

Vincent and Hon. S. M. Brainerd, of Erie, and, when the case reached the Supreme Court, Hon. Rasselas Brown, of Warren, was added to counsel for defense. The case was heard twice, in 1884, before Judge Galbraith, of the Court of Common Pleas, of Erie county, the trials occupying eleven days and two weeks respectively, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $48,750. It was carried to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania on error by defendant. The judgment of the lower Court was affirmed October 4th, 1886, the sum finally paid the plaintiff, being the amount of verdict, with interest, aggregating the sum of $53,150.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

The public careers of some of the above-named gentlemen include almost the whole political history of the county. The limits of this work leave room for only a few brief references. John H. Walker reached Erie when quite a young man, walking from Pittsburg to Meadville, where he was obliged to borrow money to enable him to reach his destination. Elijah Babbitt built his office and house in 1828, and stuck to the same spot the balance of his life. Messrs. Walker, Babbitt and Thomas H. Sill filled numerous public positions, among them some of the most conspicuous in the gift of the people. Dudley Marvin, after remaining in Erie a brief period, removed to Canandaigua, N. Y., and became one of the most eminent lawyers of that State. James C. Marshall moved to Girard in 1830, engaged in business, and did not return to the practice of law in Erie until 1844. Don Carlos Barrett's name was stricken from the roll of the bar in 1834, and he soon after left the county, never to return. He located in Texas and accumulated a large property. John Galbraith came to Erie from Franklin in 1837, and was elected President Judge. Carson Graham and John F. Duncombe went West and speedily grew prominent in public life, the one as a Judge and the other as a Legislator and popular orator. James D. Dunlap was the author of Dunlap's Book of Forms, and Benjamin Grant of several volumes of the State Reports. Horace M. Hawes emigrated to California and became worth several millions. William M. Heister returned to Reading, served a term or two in the State Senate, and was Secretary of State during Governor Packer's administration. George H. Cutler came to Erie county in 1835 from Cortland county, N. Y., where he had read law. After a time spent in other pursuits he took a second course of reading with Hon. John Galbraith, to comply with the rule. Selden Marvin came here from Chautauqua county, N. Y., where he served a term as County Judge, with credit and general acceptability. Henry Souther, before coming to Erie, had held several prominent State positions, and was Judge of Schuylkill county by appointment of the Governor. John J. Pearson served for thirty-two years as Presiding Judge of the Dauphin-Lebanon district. Gaylord Church was appointed to the Supreme Bench and served a brief term.

General Curtis went to Warren immediately after his admission, and lived there until 1866, when he came back to Erie. He was a Colonel in the war for the Union, and was elected to the Legislature and Congress. C. S. Gzowski moved to Canada and became prominent there. A monument to his memory stands in the Victoria Park at Niagara Falls. S. E. Woodruff lived in Girard until 1872, when he moved to Erie. Strong Vincent served gallantly in the war for the Union, rose to be a brigadier general, won an enviable reputation as a brave soldier and was killed at Gettysburg. Murray Whallon moved to California, where he was elected several times to the Legislature. Samuel A. Law went to New York, and was chosen to the Legislature of that State. John W. Douglass is now a resident of Washington City, after long service as Deputy Commissioner and Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and Commissioner of the District of Columbia. Judge Thompson removed to Philadelphia after his election to the Supreme Bench, of which he became Chief Justice. On his retirement from that position he entered upon the practice of law, and died in February, 1877, while addressing the Court of which he had been a member.

Moses McLean removed to Gettysburg and represented the Adams district in the Twenty-ninth Congress. Albert C. Ramsey moved to York, Pa., and was chosen colonel of a regiment in the Mexican war of 1847-48. George W. Smith changed to Butler and afterward to Kansas, where he was prominent in the Territorial troubles. Richard Sill went to Pittsburg and entered active business.

Payne, Washington, D. C.; T. S. Parker, Pittsburg; John W. Riddle, Pittsburg; William R. Scott, Meadville; C. B. Sleeper, West; C. R. Saunders, Cleveland; E. B. Van Tassel, Conneautville; Murray Whallon, California; George Williamson, West; A. D. Woods, Warren; Thomas J. Wells, Frank S. Shaw, Paul W. McKay and S. S. Bayle, Chicago.

Mr. Caughey entered the ministry after his admission to the bar, being the only instance of the kind in the history of the county.

The following left the county, but their locations, business, etc., are not known to the writer: R. B. Brawley, Charles P. Biddle, H. W. Blakeslee, Junius B. Clark, Edward Clark, M. E. Dunlap, St. John Goodrich, Michael Gallagher, John L. Gallatew, Thomas C. Himebaugh, Louis F. Keller, D. H. Kline, James H. Lewis, George H. Myers, R. F. Pugh, F. L. Perley, John J. and S. W. Randall, D. W. Rambo, Stephen Strong, D. B. J. Sterrett, Almon Virgil.

The following abandoned the profession and are engaged in other pursuits: F. H. Abell, J. W. Brigden, Rush S. Battles, S. J. Butterfield, U. Blickensderfer, James R. Burns, A. H. Caughey, C. C. Converse, E. Graser, A. M. Judson, George A. Lyon, E. J. O'Conner, J. F. Downing, John W. Walker.

In looking over the list of attorneys, it is curious to see how few have acquired fortunes by their practice. A number have become possessed of large means, but in every instance the writer recalls to mind, their financial prosperity has been due to real estate investments or to some other piece of good luck outside of the regular course of their profession. The law—in Erie county, at least—may be the pathway to reputation, but it is very far from being the easy road to affluence.

COURT CRIERS—LAW LIBRARY—BAR ASSOCIATION.

The following have been the court criers: David Langley, Basil Hoskinson, Robert Kincaide, Joshua Randall, Remras Baldwin, P. D. Bryant, Edward B. Lytle, A. E. White (since 1851).

The law library of the county consists of 1,200 or more volumes. It was purchased largely from the proceeds of fines in certain criminal cases. The selection of books is made by a library committee consisting of five members of the bar.

The Erie Bar Association has been in operation since about 1876, the object being to advance the general interest of the profession.

- The venerable James Chambers, of Harbor Creek, has been Justice of the Peace for a longer period than any other man in the county, if not in the State. Appointed by Gov. Ritner in 1838, he has held the office, with the exception of one or two brief intervals, ever since.

CHAPTER XXI.

DOCTORS, SURGEONS AND DENTISTS.

THE first and, for a number of years, the only resident physician in Erie county, was Dr. John C. Wallace, who located in the borough of Erie about the time of its first settlement. He continued in the practice of medicine nearly to the day of his death, which occurred on the 8th of December, 1827.

Dr. Plara Thayer located in or near Erie about 1811, and was joined in a short time by his brother, Dr. Albert Thayer. They resided on Federal Hill, and their practice extended over a good part of the county.

Dr. Asa Coltrin settled in Erie about 1815, and continued in practice until his death in November, 1824. The next physician in Erie was Dr. Peter Christie, who was a surgeon in the United States navy.

The list of Erie physicians was increased by the arrival of Dr. William Johns in 1822, and by Drs. Taber and Elijah Beebe in 1825. All of these remained until their decease.

Dr. Peter Faulkner located in South Erie in 1825. After a time he changed to Crawford county, but returned to Erie in 1848. His sons, Drs. William and Robert Faulkner, both became practitioners in Erie at a comparatively early period.

Dr. Jacob Vosburg reached Erie the same year as Dr. Faulkner, and Dr. Sanford Dickinson, who had practiced in Wattsburg a short time, removed to Erie in 1840.

Outside of Erie, the earliest physician was Dr. James Snedley, who located in North East at an early day. Dr. Ira Sherwin made his home in Harbor Creek in 1825, and Dr. W. T. Bradley in Wesleyville about 1840. Dr. Rufus Hills practiced in Girard from an early date until 1890, when he changed to Erie. He removed to Pittsburg, where he died. Dr. M. C. Kellogg practiced in connection with Dr. Vosburg at Erie until 1831, when he changed to Girard. He died in Albion, to which place he had removed, in 1855.

Among the physicians of prominence in Erie, at a later period, were Dr. William A. Wallace, Dr. P. Hall, Dr. C. Sevens, Dr. T. H. Stuart, Dr. S. Dickinson, Dr. J. L. Stewart, Dr. Perkins, Dr. H. A. Spencer, Dr. N. Seymour, Dr. George Bennett, Dr. W. O. Gilson, Dr. Charles Aichner and Dr. E. W. Germer—not naming those who are still in active practice in the city. Dr. Seymour removed to North East in 1894, and still gives some attention to the practice of medicine.

LAW AS TO REGISTRY.

The law of Pennsylvania provides that every person engaged in the regular practice of medicine or surgery shall be a graduate of a legally chartered medical college or university, and have his diploma registered in the Prothonotary's office in the county where he resides. In case the diploma has been lost, a certified copy of the same may be presented, or, if not obtainable, the party may make affidavit to the fact, with the name of the school he attended. Exception is made in the case of physicians who have been in continuous practice within this commonwealth for a long period. These are allowed to continue in practice, but must appear before the Prothonotary and make affidavit in accordance with the law.

LIST OF REGISTERED PHYSICIANS.

Below is a list of the physicians who registered in Erie county up to July 1, 1895, with the colleges from which they graduated, the time when, or the periods they claimed on the day of registry to have practiced. When no dates are given, they do not appear on the registry, due probably to an oversight in recording:

A corporation for the purpose of establishing a hospital, free dispensary and training school for nurses in Erie was chartered in 1894, including twelve physicians of the city and county, but its objects as to the hospital and training school are as yet unfulfilled. The free dispensary has been in operation for some time.

CHAPTER XXII.

NEWSPAPERS OF THE COUNTY.

THE earliest newspaper printed in the county was the Mirror, started in Erie by George Wyeth in 1808. It lasted but a short time. In 1812 the Northern Sentinel appeared, with R. J. Curtis as editor. It was discontinued at the end of a year, but revived in 1816 under the name of the Genius of the Lakes. The title was again changed to the Phoenix, and finally to the Reflector, and the paper was printed in Erie till 1819 or 1820, when it was removed to Mayville, N. Y., where it lived but a short time. Meanwhile, another journal had sprung into existence. This was the Patriot, founded in 1818 by Zeba Willis. It ran a course of one year in Erie, when the office was moved to Cleveland, and became the basis of the Herald of that city.

THE ERIE "GAZETTE."

The first paper in Erie that came to stay was the Weekly Gazette, established on the 15th of January, 1820, by Joseph M. Sterrett. Mr. Sterrett was assisted in the editorial conduct of his paper at various times by James Buchanan (not the President), J. Hoge Waugh, John Riddell and others. John Shaner was associated in its publication from 1835 to 1842, when J. P. Cochran and George W. Riblet took control. In 1845, Mr. Sterrett resumed charge, and on the 10th of September, 1846, he associated I. B. Gara with him, who edited the paper till May 3, 1865, when it was sold to S. A. Davenport. The latter not being a practical newspaper man was obliged to turn over the management to others, and it had numerous editors during the period between 1865 and 1873. Among them were E. L. Clark, John R. Graham, R. Lyle White, James Hendricks, B. F. McCarty, and perhaps others. On the 5th of June, 1873, the Gazette was purchased from Mr. Davenport by F. A. Crandall, who retained possession until February 1, 1882. Mr. Crandall started the Saturday Evening Gazette, March 20, 1875, and changed it to the Sunday Morning Gazette on the 17th of June in the same year. During its middle age, Hon. Gideon J. Ball and William Kelley were frequent contributors to the Gazette. Among the later editors of the paper were W. G. McKean, John R. Hess and F. A. Mallory. The office and good will were purchased by the Dispatch Company in 1890. The Sunday edition was discontinued in 1894, but the weekly edition is still printed, under the title of the Dispatch-Gazette.

Horace Greeley worked as a journeyman in the office of the Gazette during the winter of 1830-31. Among those who learned the printing trade in the Gazette office was Sidney Kelsey, a well-known newspaper man. The Gazette has always been anti-Democratic in its politics.

THE ERIE OBSERVER

Was started in 1830, as the result of a quarrel over the Masonic order, to which the Gazette was hostile. The first editor was T. B. Barnum, who was succeeded in 1832 by H. L. Harvey. The latter printed a specimen copy of a daily in 1836. Among the editors and publishers of the paper from 1837 to 1843 were S. W. Randall, Thomas Laird, Hiram A. Beebe, J. M. Kuester, W. McKinstry, Wm. A. Galbraith and John W. Douglass. In May, 1843, the office was purchased by A. P. Durlin and B. F. Sloan. These gentlemen tried the experiment of a semi-weekly for a few months in 1849. Mr. Durlin withdrew from the concern on the 26th of January, 1856, and was succeeded by M. M. Moore. This partnership continued until January 1, 1859, when Mr. Moore retired. On the 1st of January, 1861, Mr. Sloan sold the office to Andrew Hopkins. This gentleman disposed of it to Benjamin Whitman and James I. Brecht on the 17th of January, 1862. Their partnership continued until April 1, 1865. Mr. Whitman then became sole proprietor and remained such until December 1, 1878, when the office was purchased by R. B. Brown. The latter started the Daily Evening Observer on the 15th of October, 1881, which was discontinued in 1884. Mr. Brown sold to Eugene J. Miller in December, 1885, who, in turn, sold to John C. Brady. The latter consolidated the office with that of the Sunday Graphic, December 13, 1886, the joint papers being edited by F. E. Woods. The consolidated establishment was purchased by F. S. Phelps on the 1st of December, 1892, who united it with the Times office February 1, 1894, by which company the Observer is still published. Under the management of Mr. Whitman the Observer secured a State-wide reputation, and became the most prosperous paper ever known in the county. It has always been Democratic.

The earliest daily papers issued in the county were printed in the Observer office, first in 1836, as the Daily Observer, and second as the Daily Bulletin, in 1861. The latter was published by W. H. Harris, who received the daily telegraphic reports of war news at his restaurant, State street and the Park, had them issued in the form of a small newspaper, and continued their publication for a month or two.

THE ERIE DISPATCH.

In 1851, a small paper, named the Dispatch, was started at Waterford by Joseph S. M. Young. When the railroad war broke out, it took such a lively part on the side of the "rippers," or "anti-railroad men," that their leaders induced Mr. Young to remove his office to Erie. This he did in 1856. In a short time after the removal, the office was completely destroyed by fire. Its friends clubbed together and bought Mr. Young new material, which gave him a great advantage over his competitors. During 1861, a daily was started, which was only continued a few months. The office was purchased on the 1st of February, 1864, by B. F. H. Lynn. The daily was revived on May 22, 1864, and has been printed regularly ever since. Mr. Lynn became embarrassed and the establishment was sold at Sheriff's sale. After that it was conducted by various parties, among whom were S. Todd Perley, Azro Goff, W. P. Atkinson; Willard, Redway & Cook; Willard & Brewer; Willard, Brewer & Hooker; Camp, Belknap & Johnson, and the Dispatch Printing Co. Among the best known editors the Dispatch has had were J. R. Willard and Eben Brewer, both now living in Chicago. For a time the paper was managed by W. J. Robinson. Among those who have been on its editorial force were Nelson Baldwin, Eugene Camp, W. G. McKean, Sam Woods, D. P. Robbins, A. F. Moses, Otto Pettit, D.

S. Crawford, Frank Bray, Allen McKean and J. J. McAndrews. The paper was purchased by S. W. Bolles in December, 1894, who is now its editor and publisher.

The Dispatch started as an independent paper, but changed to Republican about 1860, and has ever since advocated that party. From 1864 to 1878, the Dispatch may be said to have been practically the only English daily in Erie. Others were started at various periods, but the most successful of them only lasted a year or two.

The publications issued from the office are the Daily Dispatch, Evening News, and Weekly Dispatch-Gazette.

THE ERIE HERALD.

This journal, a Democratic evening paper, first appeared on the 20th of July, 1878. Its editors were James R. Burns and H. C. Mismiser, teachers in the Erie High School. After it had been printed two or three months the paper was purchased by William L. Scott, and a weekly edition was added. Thomas F. O'Brien was placed in charge and continued as manager until after the election in 1881. Nelson Baldwin became managing editor in February, 1883, and continued in charge till the first Monday in December, 1893, when he became Collector of the port. He was first succeeded by S. E. Holly, and on Oct. 7, 1895, by J. M. Cooper. The latter is assisted by S. E. Holly, W. D. Kinney, Frank Weiss and others. The business managers of the establishment are Wm. Wallace and W. P. Atkinson, and the office is owned by the Herald Printing and Publishing Company, limited. Their publications are the Evening Herald, the Weekly Herald, and the Sunday Messenger. W. P. Atkinson is general manager of the newspaper branch of the office.

DAILY TIMES.

The Daily Times was started as an independent evening paper, on the co-operative plan, April 12, 1888, by nine union printers. Later all retired but J. H. Mead and J. F. Liebel, who became associated with J. H. Kelley, John Miller, Jr., and D. S. Crawford, Mr. Kelley being the managing and Maj. Crawford the local editor. In the course of time Mr. Miller and Maj. Crawford withdrew. The Graphic and the Observer offices were consolidated with the Times in February, 1894, F. S. Phelps becoming the managing editor. John J. McAndrews was local editor after Maj. Crawford, until June, 1895, when J. F. Liebel took charge of that department. The publications of the company are the Evening Times, the Weekly Observer and the Sunday Graphic.

THE EVENING NEWS.

Independent in politics, was started in 1892 by Mr. Hathaway of Cleveland. It was purchased by the Dispatch Company in 1893, and edited by Otto Pettit until the fall of 1894, when Sam Woods became the editor.

TAGEBLATT-ZUSCHAUER (GERMAN).

A Mr. Schuefflen started the Zuschauer (Spectator) in 1852. It was purchased by C. Moeser, in 1855, and by E. E. Stuerznickel in 1861. On the 1st of January, 1877, Mr. Stuerznickel sold the Zuschauer to F. G. Gorenflo. In March, 1890, Mr. Gorenflo commenced a daily edition. This was consolidated with the Tageblatt, a German daily started in 1884 by Otto Luedicke. Hugo Held became the manager. In October, 1889, the company purchased the Sonntagsblatt, and the two papers have since been published from the same office by Held, Gorenflo & Co. The name of the weekly edition is the Tageblatt-Sonntagsblatt, Frank Weiss being the editor. Both papers are Republican, with independent tendencies.

EXISTING SUNDAY AND WEEKLY PAPERS.

The Lake Shore Visitor was commenced in 1874, as the organ of the Catholics of the Erie diocese. The writing was mainly done by Bishop Mullen until 1875, when Rev. Thomas A. Casey became editor, who continued until his death, February 9, 1894, since when Bishop Mullen has been in charge. The first publisher was B. F. McCarty, who was succeeded by Thomas F. O'Brien.

The Erie Sunday Graphic was established by Boyle & McCauley on the 20th of May, 1880. In the spring of 1882, John T. Boyle purchased the interest of his partner, and on the 27th of August, 1882, he sold the office to Jacob Bender. The office was purchased by Woods & Hickernell in the spring of 1884, and Mr. Woods became sole owner in 1885. The Observer and Graphic were consolidated December 31, 1886. In 1893 the office was purchased by F. S. Phelps, who edited the two papers until February, 1894, when they were united with the Daily Times. In politics the Graphic is independent, with Democratic leanings.

The Erie Advertiser was started on the 1st of April, 1876, by John M. Glazier. Dr. D. P. Robbins purchased the plant November 10, 1891, and organized the Advertiser Printing Company, limited, April 18, 1893. The paper was independent, with Republican proclivities, until the consolidation mentioned below.

The Highland Light was established in 1892 by Rev. O. O. Wiard as a religious paper. It espoused the cause of the O. U. A. M. in 1893, and that of the A. P. A. in 1894. February 27, 1894, it was united with the Advertiser. The joint papers were published by the Advertiser Printing Company. Dwight J. Robbins was editor and manager. The Advertiser-Highland Light was discontinued in the fall of 1895, and succeeded by The Truth, under the same management.

The Sunday Messenger was started February 4, 1894, with S. E. Holly as editor, and Frank E. Woods as telegraph editor. Otto Pettit became editor, and was succeeded by J. H. Kelley in the spring of 1895. Mr. Kelly was followed by F. E. Woods, as editor, on Oct. 13, 1895. The paper is issued by the Herald Company, and takes no part in politics.

The weekly editions of the Herald, Dispatch and Gazette and Observer are referred to above.

The Sonntagsgast was established in 1881 by Frank Weiss & Co. It was sold to the Herald Company in 1886, was purchased by the Tageblatt-Zuschaner Company in 1889, and is now issued from the latter office, under the name of the Tageblatt-Sonntagsgast, with Mr. Weiss in editorial charge.

The Arbiter-Zeitung (independent, with strong Socialistic notions) was started by Samuel Weiss in August, 1891. In 1892 he was succeeded by Charles Backofen. M. Ph. Jahn took charge in the spring of 1893. He died early in 1895, since when the paper has been conducted by Samuel Weiss.

The People, organ of the Populist party, was founded by a co-operative company on October 1, 1892. It has been edited from the first by Samuel Weiss, aided by a corps of contributors.

DEFUNCT PAPERS.

The Erie Chronicle was started by Samuel Perley, in 1840, as a rival Whig organ to the Gazette. Mr. Perley moved the office to Girard.

In 1846 a second rival of the Gazette made its appearance under the title of the Commercial Advertiser, with J. P. Cochran as editor. In 1850 the paper passed into the hands of A. H. Caughey, who, at the end of a year and a half sold it to J. B. Johnson. The latter changed the name to the Constitution, which became the advocate of the "railroad men" as against the "rippers" during the eventful era of the railroad war. A party of "rippers" entered the office in 1855, "pied" the type and threw the press into the street. The paper was resuscitated by R. Lyle White, who kept it up for a short time. He issued a daily bulletin for some months in 1858.

The first outspoken abolition paper in the city was the True American, started by Compton & Moore in 1853. It was published for a time by James Perley and Henry Catlin. The latter finally became sole editor and proprietor. The paper died in 1861 or '62.

The Express, started in 1857 by E. C. Goodrich, as a rival Democratic paper to the Observer, was merged into the True American in a few months.

The daily Republican was printed some two or three years, commencing about 1867. During its brief life it had several editors and publishers, none of whom made a financial success of the enterprise.

The Argus was brought into existence mainly through the labors of S. Todd Perley. As a basis for the enterprise, he effected a consolidation of the offices of the Union City Times and the Corry Republican, the material of which was moved to Erie on the 1st of May, 1875. A daily and a weekly paper were issued for some months, but failed to secure a living patronage.

R. Lyle White, published the Daily Bulletin for a few months about 1874.

The Lake City Daily, a penny paper, was printed by Woods, Constable & Co., three young graduates of the high school in 1878, and lasted about a year. It was ultimately merged in the Herald.

The first German paper in Erie was the Unsere World (Our World), founded by Carl

N. W. Russell

Benson in 1851. The name was changed to the Freie Press (Free Press) in 1860. The paper went down in 1868.

The Weekly Leuchtturm (Light-House) was established in 1860 by Bactzel & Atkinson. It was purchased about 1873 by Merhoff & Wallenhorst. Wallenhorst soon retired, and H. Merhoff assumed sole control. In April, 1875, Otto Luedicke became a partner with Merhoff, and assumed editorial charge. The Daily Leuchtturm was started in June, 1875. Mr. Luedicke withdrew in 1879, and was succeeded by Merhoff, Boyer & Rastatter. Merhoff and Rastatter sold out, and John F. Boyer became sole proprietor in 1880. October 1, 1882, Mr. Luedicke resumed control under a lease from Mr. Boyer. The paper finally gave up the ghost.

The Star of Liberty, a monthly publication, established April 1, 1882, by H. R. Storrs, as an advocate of liberal views on the liquor question, ended its career with the death of the proprietor, about 1885.

The Journal de Noticias (General News) enjoyed the distinction for several years of being the only paper in the Portuguese language in the United States. It was established on the 27th of October, 1877, by A. M. & John M. Vincent. The office was removed to the West.

The Erie Sunday Globe was started by R. R. Cornell, as an independent paper. After a spasmodic career, it was wound up for good in January, 1895, Mr. Cornell locating in the South.

The Morning Record was born on August 22, 1895, and departed this life on September 2 ensuing. A. S. Porter was editor and publisher.

PRESS ORGANIZATIONS.

The Northwestern Editorial Association, organized in Erie about 1865, was composed of newspaper men in Warren, Erie, Crawford, Mercer, Venango, Butler and several other counties. It had two or three annual meetings, and then quietly expired. A meeting to resuscitate it, or rather to start a new association, was held in Erie, in January, 1895. This resulted in the establishment of the Northwestern Pennsylvania Press Association, which seems to have a prosperous career before it. Their annual meeting in Erie on July 12, 1895, was one of the most pleasant gatherings ever known in the city.

The Erie Press Club, composed of newspaper men and business men in harmony with their efforts to build up the city, was started in 1887, and had a brilliant career for several years. Through its influence the Pennsylvania Editorial Association came to Erie on June 26, 1888, and remained three days. The visit of the Association and the events connected with it are remembered as among the most interesting and important features in the progress of the city. The Club went out of existence about 1891. During its brief life it probably did as much toward the growth and reputation of Erie as any organization ever started within its limits.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE ERIE-BEAVER CANAL AND THE SEVERAL RAILROADS.

AS early as 1762 a suggestion was made to unite the waters of Lake Erie with the Delaware river. The Legislature in 1823 passed an act for the appointment of Commissioners to explore a route for connecting Lake Erie with French creek by canal and slack-water. A convention of delegates from forty-six counties, Giles Sanford representing Erie, met at Harrisburg in August, 1825, and passed resolutions in favor of a canal from the Susquehanna to the Allegheny, and from the Allegheny to Lake Erie. The State embarked in the enterprise soon after, going heavily in debt for the purpose, and by October, 1834, the first boat from the east reached Pittsburg.

LAKE TERMINUS OF THE CANAL.

In the meantime a furious agitation sprung up in the Northwest over the question whether the extension of the canal from Pittsburg to Lake Erie should be by way of the Allegheny river and French creek, or down the Ohio and up the Beaver and Shenango rivers. The first was known as the "Eastern" and the latter as the "Western" route. The Western route having been adopted by the advice of the engineers in charge, another controversy arose in the county over the lake terminus of the canal, some wanting it to be at Erie and others at the mouth of Elk creek. Erie was finally selected, through the labors of Elijah Babbitt, who was a member of the Legislature at the time. In 1832, through the efforts of John H. Walker, the State ceded the third section of 2,000 acres of land west of Erie to the borough, for the purpose of building a canal basin at the harbor, reserving 100 acres for a county almshouse. Work on the enterprise progressed at irregular spots and intervals until 1842, when the State refused to appropriate any more money. At Erie ground was broken for the canal on the 4th of July, 1838, amid great festivities. To Capt. Daniel Dobbins was awarded the honor of throwing up the first shovelful of earth. Up to 1843 the State had expended more than $4,000,000, and it was calculated that but $211,000 more were needed to make the canal ready for use.

ITS COMPLETION.

At the session of 1842-43, the Legislature passed an act incorporating the Erie Canal Company, and ceding to it all the work that had been done at such immense cost, on condition that the corporation would finish and operate the improvement. This company was organized with Rufus S. Reed as president, and C. M. Reed as treasurer. The first boats to reach Erie were the Queen of the West, a packet boat, crowded with passengers, and the R. S. Reed, loaded with Mercer county coal, both coming in on the same day, the 5th of December, 1844. The canal entered the city limits of Erie near the recently destroyed car works, and followed the ravine of Lee's run to the bay, which it joined near the foot of Sasfras street. A commodious basin for the protection of the boats was built in the bay, at the outlet, which still remains, being the enclosed part of the harbor on both sides of the public dock. The canal was of moderate capacity, the average boat only carrying sixty-five tons.

ABANDONMENT OF THE CANAL.

A good business was done for thirty years after its completion, mainly in coal, iron ore and merchandise. Up to 1853, when the Lake Shore R. R. was opened to Toledo, the canal also carried large numbers of emigrants, who came to Erie by steamer from Buffalo, and took this route to the Ohio valley. A number of packet boats for conveying passengers ran on the canal, and it was the grand avenue of trade and travel for the western counties. W. W. Reed was superintendent in 1860, and continued in that capacity until the canal was abandoned.

The canal continued to flourish until the completion of the Erie and Pittsburg R. R., which soon proved to be a formidable competitor. An enlargement was proposed, but never undertaken. The capitalists who had faith in its enlargement offered Gen. Reed, who controlled most of the stock, a handsome sum for the canal, but, in the midst of their negotiations, were notified that he had disposed of it to the railroad management. The latter operated it in an unsatisfactory manner to the boatmen until 1871, when the fall of the Elk creek aqueduct gave them an excuse for abandoning the work. Since then the locks and bridges have been taken to pieces, and the channel filled almost everywhere in the county.

FIRST RAILROADS.

The earliest public movement in regard to the construction of a railroad along the lake shore was through a convention held in Fredonia, N. Y., in 1831. Its object was to arrange for building a road from Buffalo to the State line, with the understanding that it was to connect with one in Pennsylvania. The delegates from Erie were C. M. Reed, P. S. V. Hamot and Thomas H. Sill.

The Erie and North East R. R. Company, the first railroad organization in the county, was incorporated April 12, 1842. Books for subscriptions were opened on the 19th of October, 1846, most of the stock being taken in Erie. The active men in forwarding the project were Charles M. Reed, John A. Tracy and John H. Walker. The surveys of the road were completed in the spring of 1849, under the direction of Milton Courtright, who had been one of the engineers in locating the canal. Contracts for the construction of the road were let on the 26th of July of the same year, and the grading was commenced soon after. The road extended from Erie to the State line, at or near Northville.

ERIE TO BUFFALO.

Previous to this, a company had been formed to build a railroad from Dunkirk to the State line, under the auspices of the New York and Erie R. R. Company. A second road was projected by the New York Central Company from Buffalo, by way of Fredonia, to the State line. Both routes were surveyed, the right of way obtained, and some work done. A contract was entered into by the Erie and North East Company for a connection with the Dunkirk and State line road, which would have given a uniform six-foot gauge, and made Erie the practical terminus of the New York and Erie R. R. Shortly afterward, another arrangement was made with the Buffalo, Fredonia and State line road for the laying of an additional track of the New York gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches. In course of time, a compromise was effected between the two New York corporations, by which they violated their contract with the Erie and North East Company, and agreed to build but one road between Buffalo and the State line of the Ohio gauge of four feet ten inches. The object of this was to force the Erie and North East Company to adopt the same gauge, and compel the break, which had to occur at some point, to be made within the limits of New York. This did not have the effect they anticipated, and the Erie & North East R. R. was completed with a six-foot track. Work on the road went on slowly, and the first passenger train did not come into Erie until the 19th of January, 1852.

ERIE TO CLEVELAND.

The Franklin Canal Company was incorporated on the 27th of April, 1844, to repair the Franklin division of the canal. On the 9th of April, 1849, a supplement to the charter was secured authorizing the company to build a railroad on the route of the canal between Meadville and Franklin, and to extend it northward to Lake Erie, and southward to Pittsburg. This charter was so construed as to permit the building of a railroad from Erie to the Ohio State line, and one was accordingly constructed, largely through the efforts of Judge John Galbraith and Alfred Kelley. At the State line it connected with a road that had been completed to Cleveland, under the laws of the State of Ohio. The first train ran from Erie to Ashtabula on the morning of the 29d of November, 1852. As the Pennsylvania law stood at that time, all roads entering Erie from the east were to be six feet or four feet eight and one-half gauge, and all from the west four feet ten. The gauge of the Franklin Canal Company's road was therefore different from that of the Erie & North East road, necessitating a break at Erie.

THE ROADS CONSOLIDATED.

The change of gauge at Erie and at the State line proved to be a serious inconvenience to the railroad companies, and on the 17th of November, 1853, a contract was entered into between the Buffalo and State Line and the Erie and North East Companies, by which the latter were to alter their track to four feet ten inches, making a uniform gauge from Buffalo to Cleveland. By this time, two-thirds of the stock of the E. and N. E. R. R. had passed into the hands of Buffalo and State Line parties, who had entered into a contract to run the improvement as one road. The change of gauge was commenced on the 7th of December, 1853, but was not completed till February 1, 1854, when the first train under the new arrangement arrived at Erie from the East.

THE FAMOUS RAILROAD WAR.

This scheme created the utmost indignation among the people of Erie county, who saw in it the defeat of their hope of having Erie made the lake terminus of the New York and Erie R. R., and a purpose to make the city nothing more than a way station. At 10 o'clock in the forenoon of the 7th day of December, 1853, an immense assemblage of the citizens of Erie gathered at the depot, tore down the bridges over State and French streets, and took up the track across every street east of Sassafras. Near Harbor Creek Station, on the same day, the track was torn up in three places. In the latter township, on the 28th of December, while the railroad men were relaying the track, a fracas took place, in which a pistol was fired by a train conductor, and two citizens of the township slightly wounded. The excitement that ensued was the most intense ever known in the county. Only a few citizens of Erie sided with the railroad companies, and they were treated as common enemies.

The railroad question obliterated party lines to a great extent, and in each of the years 1854, 1855 and 1858, for the first time in a long period, one of the two legislative Representatives elected from the county was a Democrat. The agitation among the people was followed by an appeal to the Courts, and the interposition of both State and United States officials was required on several occasions. During the two months in which the populace prevented the track from being changed, passengers and freight were transferred between Harbor Creek and Erie by stages and wagons, causing a delay that subjected our city, county and people to innumerable curses from the eastern and western patrons of the railroad. A second series of outbreaks occurred in Erie and Harbor Creek in 1855, when the bridges were again destroyed and the track torn up.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS AND FURTHER CONSOLIDATIONS.

The Supreme Court decided that the road constructed by the Franklin Canal Company was not a legal building under the charter, and the charter itself was repealed in 1854. Meanwhile, the stock had been mostly purchased by the Cleveland, Painesville and Ashtabula Company, owners of the connecting road from the Ohio State line westward. A new charter was granted by the Legislature in 1855 or 1856, on condition that the company, known as the Cleveland and Erie, should subscribe $500,000 to the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., extend its track to the harbor of Erie, and retain three citizens of Pennsylvania perpetually in its Board of Directors.

The charter of the Erie and North East Company was repealed in 1855, but restored in April, 1856, conditioned upon the expenditure of $400,000 toward the building of a road from Pittsburg to Erie. A few years afterward the Erie and North East and the Buffalo and State Line R. R. were consolidated under the title of the Buffalo and Erie R. R.

Some time in the early sixties the consolidation of the Cleveland and Erie R. R. was effected with the Cleveland and Toledo, and at a still later date this organization was consolidated with the Michigan Southern, making one management from Erie to Chicago, which became known as the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Company. Into this organization the Buffalo & Erie was merged in 1869. The control of the Lake Shore R. R. is in the hands of the rich Vanderbilt family, with Chauncey M. Depew as their legal and business representative.

THE LAKE SHORE R. R.

The track of the road is ostensibly four feet, ten inches, but has been gradually narrowed to four feet, nine inches, which is the universal gauge of the United States, with few exceptions. In building the road the greatest difficulties experienced were at the gullies of the lake shore streams. These were originally crossed by wooden viaducts, which have been replaced by arches or iron bridges.

The first depot at Erie was a clumsy looking brick structure, built in 1851. It was replaced by the Union depot in 1864, the expense of constructing which was borne equally by the two Lake Shore organizations then existing. The Philadelphia and Erie Company pays interest for its use on one-third of the cost and one-third of the current expense of keeping it up, less a small rental from the Erie and Pittsburg Company. Ira W. Hart was the first ticket agent, commencing in 1852, and

Wm. S. Brown the first freight agent, appointed in 1853. John Sutter became connected with the road September 16, 1855, being probably the oldest employe in continuous service at Erie.

The western roundhouse was built in 1862, and the eastern in 1863.

DISTANCES BY LAKE SHORE R. R.

The following are the distances by this route from Erie to the places named:

This road, while one of the best managed and constructed in the Union, has, strange to say, had two or three of the worst disasters ever known in railroad history. One of these was at Ashtabula, on Friday, December 29, 1876, at 7:30 P. M., when seventy-two persons were killed, and the other at Angola, N. Y., when the loss was smaller, but scarcely less appalling in its general features. In both cases citizens of Erie were among the dead or injured.

FASTEST LONG DISTANCE TIME EVER MADE.

The Lake Shore R. R. claims the record of having made the fastest time for a long distance of any in the world. A train of three Wagner cars, drawn by a single engine, left Chicago at 3:30 A. M. (Central time), on the 24th of October, 1895, and reached Buffalo at 11:30:43. The distance is 510.1 miles, and the time was 481 minutes and 7 seconds, an average speed, inclusive of stops and changing of engines, of 65.7 miles an hour. The greatest run was made between Erie and Buffalo, a distance of 86 miles, which was made in 70 minutes and 16 seconds. In two instances between Erie and Buffalo the train attained a speed of 96 miles an hour. The engine which secured this remarkable result was No. 564, handled by Engineer William Tunkey. The object of the fast run was to ascertain at what rate a train could be taken over the road with safety for general through passenger business. Different engines were used on each of the divisions, and the run for the divisions were: Chicago to Elkhart, 87.4 miles, in 85 minutes 26 seconds; Elkhart to Toledo, 133.4 miles, in 124 minutes 35 seconds; Toledo to Cleveland, 107.8 miles, in 106 minutes 6 seconds; Cleveland to Erie, 95.5 miles, in 85 minutes 32 seconds; Erie to Buffalo, 83 miles, in 70 minutes 16 seconds.

The train arrived in New York City, over the Central road, at 10: 15 (Eastern time) in the evening of the day it left Chicago, having made the distance of 980 miles in 17 hours and 45 minutes.

PHILADELPHIA AND ERIE RAILROAD.

A railroad was projected from Erie to Philadelphia as long ago as 1830, upon nearly the same route that was ultimately adopted. In 1833 a railroad was commenced at Sunbury by Stephen Girard and others, intended to connect Erie with Philadelphia by way of Pottsville. A few miles of it were built eastward, and then the work stopped on account of financial depression.

In 1837 a bill passed the Legislature incorporating the Sunbury and Erie R. R. Company. An organization was regularly effected, the stock to secure the charter being taken by the United States Bank, and engineers were employed to survey a route in 1838 and 1839. Nothing further was done for some years. In 1854 the project was simultaneously revived in Philadelphia, in Erie and in the Legislature. The city of Philadelphia subscribed $1,000,000 toward the construction of the road, the county of Erie $200,000 and the city of Erie $300,000, in addition to 150 water lots for dock accommodations. The Cleveland and Erie Company were required to subscribe $500,000 to the road, as a condition of securing a new charter. About this time the State exchanged a portion of her canals for $3,500,000 of Sunbury and Erie bonds, thus placing the company on a substantial footing. By December, 1854, the road was in running order from Sunbury to Williamsport, where a connection was made with the Northern Central R. R. to Elmira. The division of the road from Erie to Warren was begun in August, 1856, and completed in December, 1859, the Middle division remaining unfinished. In the spring of 1861, the name of the corporation was changed to the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. Company. The war coming on in that year alarmed the stockholders, and the road was leased, in 1862, to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for a term of 999 years. Work was vigorously prosecuted by the lessees, and in October, 1864, the first passenger train came through to Erie from Philadelphia with a large party of excursionists.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

The road is 287 6-10 miles in length, operated in three divisions, as follows: Eastern—Sunbury to Renovo, 92 4-10 miles; Middle—Renovo to Kane, 100 7-10 miles; Western—Kane to Erie, 94 5-10. At Sunbury, connection is made with the Southern division of the Northern Central R. R., under the same management, which gives a direct route to Harrisburg, Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and New York. The distance from Erie to Harrisburg is 347 miles; to Baltimore, 425; to Washington, 468, to Philadelphia, 453, and to New York, 543. Below are the distances along the road itself, measuring from the foot of State street in Erie:

SURVEYS AND HEIGHTS ABOVE TIDE-WATER.

In surveying the road, considerable difficulty was experienced in finding a suitable route to reach the level of the lake from the high lands on the south. The course finally adopted was by way of Four-Mile creek, necessitating a long curve to round the Second ridge, which compels over seven miles of railroad to make the distance of four and a half miles by common road from Erie to Belle Valley. The grade between Jackson's and Erie is at one place eighty-three feet to the mile.

The following figures give the height of the road above tide-water at the points named:

STATIONS.	FEET.
Erie, foot of State street	573
Summit, at Jackson's	1,229
Union City	1,270
Corry	1,431

Sheffield	1,337
Kane	2,130
Wilcox	1,527
Ridgway	1,393
St. Mary's Summit	1,696

The first general Superintendent of the road was Joseph D. Potts, who took charge at its opening in 1864. The superintendents of the western division have been: Samuel A. Black, appointed in July, 1859; William A. Baldwin, February 7, 1862; John W. Reynolds, May 1, 1868. The general offices were at Erie until 1874, when they were removed to Williamsport.

The company occupied a frame building at the foot of State street, in Erie, as a passenger and freight depot, until the completion of the Union depot, to which the passenger traffic was at once transferred. The freight business continued at the former point until the erection of the new freight building on Parade street in 1880.

The shops of the road are at Erie, Kane, Renovo and Sunbury.

ERIE AND PITTSBURG R. R.

The charter for the Erie and Pittsburg Company, was obtained in 1856, by parties interested in the Erie and North East Company. The new charter of the latter company provided that it should invest $400,000 in the construction of a road in the direction of Pittsburg. With this sum and the money of the stockholders, the Erie and Pittsburg road was graded from near Miles Grove to Jamestown, Mercer county, and the track laid to Albion. In 1864, the road was continued to New Castle, where the Erie and Pittsburg R. R. proper terminates. At that place connection is made with the New Castle and Beaver Valley R. R., which connects in turn with the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago at Homewood, and with a road down the Beaver valley, making direct connection in both cases with the "smoky city."

The company own extensive docks at Erie for the handling of coal and iron ore, built in 1863, and since then largely extended. The round-house in Erie was erected in 1865, and the shops bought of McCarter & Scoville in 1866.

The distances by this route are as follows:

	MILES.
Erie to a little west of Miles Grove (Lake Shore road)	16.5

The superintendents of the road have been R. N. Brown, J. L. Grant, W. S. Brown, J. J. Lawrence, F. N. Finney, John M. Kimball and H. W. Byers. W. L. Scott, of Erie, was president of the corporation many years.

The road was operated as a feeder to the Lake Shore until the 24th of March, 1870, when it was leased to the Pennsylvania R. R. Company for a term of 999 years. On the first of March, 1871, the management was transferred to the Pennsylvania Company, a separate corporation from the Pennsylvania R. R. Company, organized to operate the Western lines leased or owned by the latter.

From Erie to a short distance west of Miles Grove, the E. & P. uses the Lake Shore track, with the exception of two and one-half miles between the city and the dock junction. The company own the connecting road along the bay front of Erie, from the Pittsburg dock to the foot of State street. It was built about 1870.

The headquarters of the road were in Erie until 1881, when they were removed to Youngstown, Ohio, and subsequently to the Junction, a short distance below New Castle.

The following figures show the elevation in feet above tide-water of various points on the road: Summit, near Conneautville, 1,141; Greenville, 984; Sharon, 853; New Castle,

H. & W.

802. In crossing the dividing ridge south of Conneautville, the summit is approached from the north for two or three miles by a grade of fifty-two feet to the mile.

Mr. J. A. Wood held the position of master mechanic of the road, with headquarters at Erie, for some twenty years.

WESTERN NEW YORK AND PENNSYLVANIA.

A railroad, known as the Oil Creek R. R., was completed between Corry and Miller Farm in 1862. In 1865, a majority of its capital stock was purchased by Dean Richmond, representing the Lake Shore and New York Central Companies, and by Thomas A. Scott, representing the Pennsylvania Company, and placed in the hands of Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, as trustee for the three corporations. The road was extended to Petroleum Centre in 1866, where it connected with the Farmers' road to Oil City. Not long afterward, the Allegheny Valley R. R. was completed to Oil City, from Pittsburg, making a continuous line from the latter city. The failure of the wells on Oil creek robbed the road of its prosperity, and it was sold out upon mortgage, and purchased by the Allegheny Valley R. R. management.

The Cross-Cut R. R. was built from Corry to Brocton in 1867, to secure a lake outlet for the Oil Creek R. R., and a connection with the Lake Shore R. R., independent of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R.

All the above roads were consolidated under one management, as the Buffalo, Corry and Pittsburg, and have since become a part of the Western New York and Pennsylvania system, which embraces over six hundred miles of track within the two States.

NEW YORK, PENNSYLVANIA AND OHIO (NYP-ANO) R. R.

The Atlantic and Great Western R. R. was completed to Corry in June, 1861, and extended westward through the southern portion of the county in 1862. It was intended and is still operated as the western extension of the Erie Railway (now the New York, Lake Erie and Western), with which it connects at Salamanca, N. Y. The track was originally six feet wide, but the gauge was changed about 1881 to the general standard of the country. The above name was adopted about 1882. In March, 1883, the road was leased to the New York, Lake Erie and Western Company for ninety-nine years.

UNION AND TITUSVILLE R. R.

This road extended from Titusville to Union City, where it connected with the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. It was originated in 1865, and completed in February, 1871. It was operated by the Pennsylvania R. R. Company for some years, and finally abandoned about 1892 or 1893.

NEW YORK, CHICAGO AND ST. LOUIS R. R. (THE NICKEL PLATE).

The New York, Chicago and St. Louis R. R. Company was organized in 1880 to build a railroad from Buffalo to Chicago by way of Dunkirk, Erie, Cleveland, Fostoria and Fort Wayne. The grading of the road commenced in June, 1881, and the first through passenger train reached Erie from the West in the afternoon of August 31, 1882. The train returned from Buffalo on the 1st of September. Regular passenger trains commenced running on Monday, October 23, 1882.

In the winter of 1882-83, a majority of the stock of the road was purchased in Erie by William H. Vanderbilt and others in the interest of the Lake Shore R. R., and it has since been run in harmony with that line, although a separate organization and an apparent competition are kept up.

The principal office of the company is at Cleveland. The main shops are at Chicago. Division shops are located at Fort Wayne, Ind., and Bellevue and Conneaut, Ohio. The divisions for engine service are: Buffalo to Conneaut; Conneaut to Bellevue; Bellevue to Fort Wayne; Fort Wayne to Chicago.

Instead of the culverts used by the L. S. and M. S. R. R., this route crosses the gullies of the lake shore streams by iron viaducts, some of which are of unusual height and length.

The distances by the Nickel Plate R. R. are as follows: Buffalo to Erie, 87.48 miles; to Conneaut, 115.51 miles; to Cleveland, 183.79 miles; to Bellevue, 247.86 miles; to Fort Wayne, 370.63 miles; to Chicago, 524.74 miles.

PITTSBURG, SHENANGO AND LAKE ERIE R. R.

This, the latest road entering Erie, was opened for business in the spring of 1892. The track was laid down on Twelfth street in November, 1891. The depot, at Twelfth and Sassafras streets, was built in the spring of 1892, and the first passenger train reached Erie in June of the same year. The road extends from Erie to Butler, following, in the main, the route of the old canal, and trains enter Pittsburg from Butler over the track of the Pittsburg and Western R. R. The distance from Erie to Pittsburg by this road is 152½ miles. At Cranesville, in this county, the road branches, one track coming to Erie and the other extending to the lake at Conneaut, O., a distance of 14 4-10 miles from the first-mentioned point. The first is used for the passenger and general freight business, and the second for the coal and iron ore traffic. Arrangements have been made with the Grand Trunk R. R. of Canada by which powerful boats are run between Conneaut and Port Dover, summer and winter, carrying cars loaded with coal and general merchandise. These boats were first put in operation in August, 1895.

DISTANCE TABLE.

Below are the distances by this road to the most important points between Erie and Pittsburg:

PROJECTED RAILROADS.

Books were opened in 1836 for subscriptions to build a railroad, twenty-three miles long, from Erie to the State line, three miles east of Wattsburg, where it was designed to connect with a branch of the Erie railway. The scheme was to make Erie the terminus of the latter thoroughfare. When the Erie and North East R. R. was built, the project was abandoned.

The Erie City R. R. Company was chartered, in 1853, to build a road from Erie to some point on the State line in North East, Greenfield or Venango Townships, as a connection of the Erie Railway. Its organization was maintained until the Atlantic and Great Western R. R. was completed, when the projectors concluded that further effort to induce the Erie Railway to come to the harbor of Erie would be useless.

The Erie Southern was designed to give Erie a connection with the N. Y., P. & O. R. R. road at Cambridge, and the Oil Creek R. R. at Titusville, opening up a new route, by way of McKean and Edinboro, for the coal and oil traffic. The project was much talked about in 1873, considerable subscriptions were obtained, and the city voted the incorporation a block of water-lots, besides the right of way on Liberty street. A small amount of digging and grading was done in the southwestern part of the city, when the enterprise was given up.

Another railroad was projected from Erie to Mill Village via Waterford, the purpose being also to secure a connection with the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio. Surveys made by Col. Irvin Camp, in 1882-83, developed the fact that the length of the proposed road would be but nineteen miles from the depot at Erie to the one at Mill Village.

Of late the scheme for building a road from Erie to the "Nypano" at Cambridge has been much discussed, and it is safe to predict that this line, or one connecting with the latter system at Mill Village, will be built before many years.

CHAPTER XXIV.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, SEMINARIES, ETC.

IN providing a frame of government for the Colony of Pennsylvania, William Penn declared that wisdom and morality "must be carefully propagated by a virtuous education of the youth," and that the Governor and Councils should "erect and order public schools." The wise example of the founder was followed by the heroes of the Revolution, in framing the Constitution of 1776, with a requirement that "a school or schools shall be established in each county." The Constitution of 1790 went still further by declaring that the Legislature might provide for the establishment of schools throughout the State "in such manner that the poor may be taught gratis."

Notwithstanding these noble sentiments, little progress toward the schooling of the masses was effected until a comparatively recent period. Generous endowments were made by the State to colleges and academies, but the idea of "common schools," open alike to rich and poor, and supported at the public expense by a system of equal taxation, was slow in winning the approval of property owners. "Pay schools," in which the children were trained for a moderate compensation, were common, however, almost every district having one or more, according to its population. The primary schools in Erie county, up to 1834, were all of this character.

A PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM URGED BY THE EARLY GOVERNORS.

In 1821 Governor Heister, in his message to the Legislature, declared it to be "an imperative duty to introduce and support a liberal system of education, connected with some general religious instruction." Governor Shultze's message to the Legislature of 1827 contained this passage: "Among the injunctions of the Constitution, there is none more interesting than that which enjoins it as a duty on the Legislature to provide for the education of the poor throughout the Commonwealth." In 1828 the same executive stated in his annual message that he could not forbear from "again calling attention to the subject of public education. To devise means for the establishment of a fund and the adoption of a plan by which the blessings of the more necessary branches of education should be conferred on every family within our borders would be every way worthy the Legislature of Pennsylvania."

The first practical step in the direction of a common school system for Pennsylvania was taken when George Wolf, of Northampton county, was elected Governor in 1829. The question of public schools entered largely into the canvass preceding his election, and the Democratic leaders were generally pledged to some sort of a measure for the purpose. In a speech delivered during the campaign, James Buchanan said: "If ever the passion of envy could be excused in a man ambitious of true glory, he might almost be justified in envying the fame of that favored individual, whoever he may be, whom Providence intends to make the instrument in establishing common schools throughout the Commonwealth." Gov. Wolf's inaugural address took strong ground in favor of the education of the masses, and the Legislature of 1830, in accordance with his recommendation, set apart a sum of money to be placed at interest and used at some future period in establishing a common school system. The Governor continued to urge the free school idea until the passage of the act of 1834-5. The original law made it optional with each township, ward and borough to adopt the system.

EFFORTS OF THADDEUS STEVENS AND OTHERS.

Strange as it may seem, there was violent opposition to the measure in some parts of the State. The persons interested in colleges, academies and pay schools objected to it through fear of a loss to their revenues; the wealthy and the snobbish disliked it because they did not want their children to mix with the "vulgar herd;" the penurious dreaded an increase of taxation; and a hundred objections were urged that seem too absurd now for any reasonable person ever to have believed. At the ensuing session a motion for the repeal of the law was offered by John Strohm, of Lancaster county, and eloquently opposed by Thaddeus Stevens, then a representative from Adams. Mr. Stevens closed his remarks with this thrilling sentence: "If the opponent of education were my most intimate personal and political friend, and the free school candidate my most obnoxious enemy, I should deem it my duty as a patriot, at this moment of our intellectual crisis, to forget all other considerations, and I should place myself unhesitatingly and cordially in the ranks of him whose banner streams in light." The bill was saved, but was improved and made more acceptable during the administration of Gov. Ritner, who succeeded Gov. Wolf.

Probably no one man did more effective service in building up the system than Thomas H. Burrowes, who was Gov. Ritner's Secretary of State, and, as such, official head of the school department. During Ritner's administration the annual State appropriation was increased from $75,000 to $400,000, and the number of schools to 5,000.

The act passed in 1849 made the adoption of the system obligatory throughout the State. The law of 1854, providing for County Superintendents, teachers' examinations, and other important measures, was prepared by Hon. H. L. Dieffenbach of Clinton county, acting head of the School Department, with the assistance of Governor Bigler and Secretary of State Charles A. Black. After that came the normal school act of 1857, making a complete system, and giving to Pennsylvania the conceded pre-eminence of having the best school laws in the Union.

THE ERIE COUNTY SCHOOLS.

For several years after the county was established, the population was too sparse to sustain more than a few schools. These were wholly private, parents paying the teachers a stated sum for each of their children who attended. The first schools of which a record can be found were established in Waterford about 1800; at Manchester, in Fairview township, in 1804; at Erie in 1806; at Union in 1820; and at Phillipsville in 1828. Others were opened at an early date, on Federal Hill, within the present limits of Erie; in Springfield; and in Mill Creek township. The earliest school buildings in Waterford and Erie were erected in 1800 and 1806 respectively, being built by the free contributions of the citizens. By 1812 almost every village and township had one or more "pay" schools. These were increased by degrees so that when the law of 1834 went into force it found every district fairly well supplied with educational facilities. The school buildings were generally built of logs, and were very poorly arranged and ventilated. The "schoolmasters," as they were called, were plain men, who made no pretention to a knowledge of more than the rudimentary branches. They believed in the use of the rod, and applied it with vigor for every small offense. A ready knowledge of "the three R's"—Readin', 'Ritin' and Rithmetic—was all that was supposed to be necessary for the average child.

The first Catholic parochial school was established in connection with St. Mary's Church, in Erie, in 1850, and the second in 1868, in connection with St. Patrick's Church. The Catholic parochial schools of the county in 1895 numbered 2,500 children, of whom 2,055 were in Erie City, 855 in Corry, 70 in Union City and 80 at St. Boniface, in Greene township.

BOOKS IN EARLY USE.

The school books most universally used in the beginning were Webster's and Byerly's Spelling Books, the English Reader and Daboll's Arithmetic. The teacher was expected to be a good penman and to be able to "set the copy" himself. A better class of books came in at a later date, including Cobb's Spelling Book, Goodrich's, Parley's and Mitchell's Geographies, Parley's and Mitchell's Histories, the First, Second and Third Readers, Smith's Grammar, and Davies' Arithmetics. Cobb's Spelling Book was introduced into this section in 1827. The copyright for one-half of the State of Pennsylvania was purchased by Joseph M. Sterrett and Oliver Spafford, who published the work in Erie for many years, realizing a snug profit from the enterprise. Mr. Spafford at one time also published the "English Reader."

Erie county was one of the foremost in taking advantage of the common school law. The act required that the Directors of each county should meet annually in convention with the County Commissioners and determine the amount of school tax to be raised. The first convention for this purpose was held in the court house soon after the passage of the law, and was attended by representatives from every district in the county. A levy of $2,000 was voted unanimously, and the people were requested to decide by vote whether an additional sum should be raised in the several districts. An extra tax of $1,000 was voted in Erie, the active spirits in having it done being E. Babbitt, George Kellogg, Dr. William Johns and William Kelly. In a few years the law was changed so as to leave the amount of tax to be designated by the Directors of the several districts, in which shape it still remains.

SPELLING SCHOOLS.

The spelling school was a once popular institution, in both town and country. As usually conducted, the pupils of the district school would assemble on some winter evening and choose two of the best spellers for leaders, who, in turn, would select from six to a dozen others on each side. These would range themselves in standing rows on opposite sides of the building, and the teacher or some other competent person would give out the words to be spelled from a book that had been agreed upon. The pupil who missed a word had to take his seat immediately, and the exercise continued until but one of the contestants remained upon the floor, who became the hero of the occasion. Sometimes half a dozen spelling matches would occur in an evening. Two or more schools would often meet in rivalry, and the event would be the talk of the neighborhood for a month or so. In many districts, the spelling school was the regular winter amusement, old and young attending, and all looking forward to the evening with interest.

NORMAL SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES AND SEMINARIES.

While the State was slow in adopting the common school system, the liberality she displayed in founding colleges and academies proves that it was wholly through doubts of its policy, and not because good educational facilities were not appreciated. Provision was made at an early day for an academy in each county, and generous appropriations were made to colleges and universities. The Waterford and Erie Academies were incorporated in 1811 and 1817 respectively, the buildings for both being completed in 1822. A bountiful donation of lands was given by the State for the support of each institution. Both are still in operation.

The Erie Female Seminary was incorporated in 1838 and went into operation soon after, receiving an annual appropriation of $300 from the Legislature for several years. It kept up till about 1866, but never had any buildings of its own. The last location of the seminary was in the Hamot House, on the bank of the bay, at the foot of State street.

Academies were established at West Springfield in 1853, at East Springfield in 1856, at Girard in 1859, and at North Springfield in 1866, which were conducted for some years with a certain degree of success. All have become merged into the common school system.

The Normal School at Edinboro is the only State educational institution in the county. It was founded as an Academy in 1857, and reorganized as a State Normal School in 1861. This school has been quite prosperous and has the promise of a long and useful career.

The Lake Shore Seminary was established at North East in 1870 under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Liberal contributions were secured and a fine building was erected. The institution became involved, and the property was bought in at Sheriff's sale by the principal creditor. The latter, in 1881, sold the building to the Redemptorist Fathers, who re-dedicated it as St. Mary's College. It is conducted as a preparatory school for young men intending to enter the Catholic priesthood. The buildings have recently been much enlarged and improved.

St. Benedict's Academy of the Catholic Church, is on East Ninth street, in Erie, adjoining St. Mary's Church. The institution has extensive buildings, with a boarding place attached.

Villa Marie Academy, the latest Catholic educational institution, is located in Erie, near the western city limits. It was dedicated May 9, 1892, and is managed by the Sisters of St. Joseph as an institution for the higher education of young ladies. The grounds, which occupy a whole square, were donated by the lamented Father Thomas A. Casey, who also furnished the means for the erection of the building.

Besides the above, there are St. Thomas' Academy at Corry and St. Teresa's Academy at Union City, attached to the Roman Catholic Churches of similar name in those places.

Additional particulars of the above institutions will be found in the sketches of their respective localities.

SCHOOL SYSTEM GENERALLY AND PROPOSED PUBLIC LIBRARY SYSTEM.

The public schools of the county, as of the State at large, are under the control of Directors, who are elected by the people of the several districts at the spring elections, a certain number going out each year. Generally speaking, each city, borough and township is a district by itself. There are three independent districts in the county, however, viz.: Belle Valley, Elk Creek and Franklin, and Lake Pleasant. The State grants every district an annual appropriation, which is apportioned according to the number of pupils. Teachers are employed by the Directors of the district in which they are to serve, but must have passed an examination and received a certificate of competency from the County Superintendent. The latter holds an annual examination in each district, and is expected to visit every school in the county once in each year.

A teacher's institute, or gathering of the teachers in the county, for mutual benefit, is held annually, under the direction of the County Superintendent. The cities of Erie and Corry each have local institutes, which meet at frequent intervals during the year.

Within the last year a movement has been started by Benjamin Whitman, Dr. A. A. Freeman, Prof. Missimer and others for the establishment of free non-sectarian public libraries throughout the State, to be under the control of the school Directors in the several districts, and supported by a general tax upon the public. The act drafted by Mr. Whitman, assisted by the above named gentlemen, passed the Legislature, largely through the labors of Senator McCreary and Representative Gould, and was cordially approved by Gov. Hastings. The law, in the opinion of its friends, will give Pennsylvania the best public library system in America, if not in the world.

COUNTY AND CITY SUPERINTENDENTS.

The first convention for the choice of a County Superintendent was held in Erie in 1854. William H. Armstrong was elected at a salary of $800 per year. The following is a list of the County Superintendents since the adoption of the law creating the office:

William H. Armstrong, Wattsburg, 1854 to 1860.

L. W. Savage, Springfield, 1860 to 1863.

D. P. Ensign, Erie, served six months in 1863, and resigned.

Julius Degmier, Erie, appointed for six months, and then elected to serve until 1866.

L. T. Fisk, Girard, 1866 to 1869.

C. C. Taylor, Elk Creek, 1869 to 1878.

Charles Twining, Union, 1878 to 1884.

James M. Morrison, Girard, 1884 to 1889 (resigned).

Thos. C. Miller, Mill Creek, 1889 to date.

The office of City Superintendent of the schools of Erie was filled from 1867 to 1890 by H. S. Jones. H. C. Missimer, who still fills the position, was elected in 1890.

V. G. Curtis was the Superintendent of the Corry schools for many years. He was succeeded by A. D. Colegrove, who holds the place at present.

Erie and Corry, having city governments, are not subject to the county rules, and have separate Boards and Superintendents.

[For the school history of the several cities, boroughs and townships, see the chapters relating thereto].

CHAPTER XXV.

EVENTS OF SPECIAL NOTE AND MISCELLANEOUS INFORMATION.

IN addition to the events heretofore mentioned, the county has been the scene of numerous occurrences of more than common interest.

A LIVE KING IN ERIE.

One of these was the visit of Louis Philippe, future King of France, accompanied by his brother and a servant. They spent a day or two at Erie, in 1795, with Thomas Rees, sleeping and eating in his tent on the bank of the lake, near the mouth of Mill creek.

LAFAYETTE'S VISIT.

In 1825 the county was honored with a visit from Lafayette, who was making a tour of the country whose independence he had periled his life and fortune to establish. He was accompanied by his son, a companion and a servant, on their way from New Orleans to New York. They reached Waterford, where they were hospitably received, on the evening of the 2d of June, and stayed there over night. A committee from Erie met them at Waterford, and the party left the latter place early on the morning of the 3d, by way of the turnpike. At Federal Hill, they were met by a body of military, who escorted the distinguished guest to the foot of State street, where they were greeted with a national salute and formally presented to the United States naval officers and other prominent citizens. From there a procession marched to the public house of Capt. Daniel Dobbins, at the northeast corner of State and Third streets, where Burgess Wallace welcomed Lafayette in the name of the borough. He was then taken to the residence of Judah Colt (at the corner of French and Fourth streets), who was chairman of the reception committee, and introduced to the ladies. Meanwhile, a public dinner had been in course of preparation, under the supervision of John Dickson, which was the grandest affair of the kind known up to that day in Erie. The tables, which had been erected on a bridge over the ravine on Second street, between State and French, were 170 feet long, elegantly adorned and covered with an awning made of the sails of the British vessels captured by Perry. After the dinner, toasts were offered, among them the following by the hero of the occasion:

"Erie—a name which has a great share in American glory; may this town ever enjoy a proportionate share in American prosperity and happiness."

Lafayette and his party left on the forenoon of June 4th, and were accompanied by numerous citizens to Portland, at the mouth of Chautauqua creek, N. Y., where he took a steamer for Buffalo. During his stay in Erie his stopping place was in the Dobbins House above mentioned, which is still standing. He occupied a large room on the second floor, at the northwest corner of the house.

HORACE GREELEY'S RESIDENCE IN ERIE.

Horace Greeley, the world-famed editor, and the Liberal-Democratic nominee for President in 1872, resided in Erie a short time as a journeyman printer, in the employ of the Gazette. His parents settled in Wayne township in 1826, and in the spring of 1830 Horace, who had remained in New England to finish his apprenticeship, came on foot to visit them, secured employment as above, and stopped in Erie until the summer of 1831. During most or all the period of his stay, he boarded at the house of Judge Sterrett, then proprietor of the Gazette. Even at that youthful age, he was fond of talking politics, and was regarded as an oracle on subjects of that nature. He left Erie for New York in August, 1831, reaching there with only $10 in his purse. His father and mother died in Wayne township. Mr. Greeley's last appearance in Erie was during the campaign of 1872, when he made a speech from one of the east windows of the Union depot. [See Wayne Township for a sketch of the Greeley Family.]

NUMEROUS PRESIDENTIAL VISITORS.

Erie has been visited by no less than eleven gentlemen who either had been, were at the time, or afterwards became President of the United States, viz.: William H. Harrison, 1813; Buchanan in 1840; Van Buren in 1842; John Quincy Adams, in 1843; Taylor and Fillmore in 1849; Lincoln, in 1861; Johnson and Grant, in 1863; Garfield at various periods between 1860 and 1880; and Cleveland in 1891. Stephen A. Douglass, one of the Democratic nominees for President in 1860, made a long speech in the West Park during the campaign of that year.

Harrison came as the commanding general of the western army, in company with Perry, as detailed at length in the account of the battle of Lake Erie. He stopped at the McConkey House, on the northeast corner of French and Third streets.

Buchanan was the leading speaker on the Democratic side at the great assemblage in 1840, when the two rival parties sought to see which could collect the largest crowd, an account of which will be found later on.

Van Buren reached Erie by steamer from the west on the 6th of June, 1842, and was given a public reception.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams also arrived in Erie by steamer, and remained from 7 to 9 o'clock in the evening. He was welcomed by Hon. Thomas H. Sill, on behalf of the citizens. The Wayne Grays and the three fire companies paraded in his honor.

President Taylor was on a journey up the lakes for recreation from the cares of office. He came by way of Waterford, where he was taken sick. On reaching Erie, he was too ill to proceed any further. He remained in the city some ten days, stopping with Dr. W. M. Woods, of the United States Navy, in a dwelling on or near the northwest corner of Eighth and State streets. Vice-President Fillmore came up from Buffalo and met the President, remaining with him until the next day. On departing, the United States steamer Michigan undertook to fire a Vice President's salute, when the gun exploded, killing two men. Finding that his condition unfitted him for proceeding further, the President returned to Washington, where he died in less than a year, and was succeeded by Mr. Fillmore.

Lincoln passed through Erie on his way to Washington to be inaugurated. He made a few remarks from the second story of the old depot. His remains were taken over the Lake Shore road in 1865. A short halt was made in Erie to enable the citizens to pay their respects to his memory.

Erie was favored with a speech by President Johnson in his famous "swing around the circle," in 1865. He was attended by Gen. Grant and Wm. H. Seward, the latter of whom also spoke.

Garfield, being a near neighbor, made frequent trips to Erie, both political and social. He spoke in the court house during the canvass of 1878.

Cleveland was in the city to attend the burial of Wm. L. Scott, on Thursday, September 24, 1891. He and Gov. Pattison rode in the same carriage in the funeral procession.

MOST EXCITING POLITICAL CONTEST EVER KNOWN.

The Presidential campaign of 1840, when Harrison and Van Buren were the opposing candidates, was probably the most bitter and exciting ever experienced in America. The feeling between the two parties was intense, and the meetings everywhere were characterized by a retaliatory spirit that has seldom if ever been exhibited in politics. At a conclave of the Whig magnates, it was agreed to hold a mass meeting in Erie on the 10th of September, the anniversary of Perry's victory. The Democrats, determined not to be excelled, and fearful that the prestige of the day might give their enemies an advantage, resolved to hold a convention at the same time. This decision created the wildest indignation among their antagonists. The excitement ran up to fever heat. Both elements made the utmost exertion to get out their adherents. Runners and bills were sent all over the western counties of the State, as well as through northeastern Ohio and western New York. For several days before the 10th, the roads leading to Erie were crowded with men, women and children, on foot, in wagons and on horseback, many carrying banners and all shouting themselves hoarse for their favorite candidates. On the eventful day, the town was crowded as it never had been before and probably never has been since. It was feared that collisions might occur between the embittered partisans, but the danger was averted by holding the conventions in different sections of the town. The Whig gathering assembled on a vacant lot on Second street between Holland and Mill creek, and the Democratic at the corner of

P. Metcalf

Second and Walnut streets. James Buchanan, afterward President of the United States, was chief speaker for the Democrats, and Francis Granger, of New York, subsequently appointed Postmaster General, presided over and was the leading figure of the Whig convention.

ERIE COUNTY'S ONLY EXECUTED MURDERER.

Though numerous persons have been tried for murder, it is worthy of note that but one execution for that offense has ever taken place in the county. Henry Francisco was convicted before Judge Shippen, on the 8th of November, 1837, of having poisoned his wife, and was sentenced to be hanged. The history of the case is very peculiar. Francisco married a Miss Maria Robinson, who is described by old residents as one of the handsomest girls ever seen in Erie. For reasons not proper to mention, they mutually agreed, three weeks after the wedding, to commit suicide. Each took four ounces of laudanum at the same time. The liquid acted as an emetic upon Francisco, but caused the death of his wife. He was sick for some time, and immediately after his recovery was arrested for murder, on the ground that he had influenced his wife to take the poison. On the 9th day of March, 1838, "Sheriff Andrew Scott pinioned Francisco's arms in his cell, and the procession started with solemn tread for the fatal spot in the jail yard. First came the Deputy Attorney General from Harrisburg, with Dr. Johns, the jail physician, then Sheriff Scott and three deputies, followed by the jury that convicted the culprit. Next came the prisoner, supported by Rev. Dr. Lyon, of the First Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Mr. Glover, of the Episcopal Church. Three guards brought up the rear. These were the only witnesses to the execution.

"Upon reaching the gallows, Francisco was placed beneath the beam and over the drop, and Sheriff Scott proceeded to strap his legs. The condemned man conducted himself with great firmness, betraying no signs of fear for his fate. The prisoner shook hands with his jailers and spiritual advisers, and with the jury. To his waiting executioner, he was profuse in expressions of gratitude for kind and humane treatment. The farewells being over, the Sheriff slipped the noose over his head and pulled down the cap that was to spare the witnesses the horrible sight of his distorted features while undergoing strangulation. All was silent as the grave as the neighboring clock chimed a quarter after two. The drop was to fall at 2:30.

"Rev. Dr. Lyon knelt down and offered an impressive prayer, and when he arose Sheriff Scott, according to the usage of those days, told the poor wretch how many minutes he had to live, and adjured him to make good use of them in petitioning for mercy at the Throne of Grace. In the middle of his passionate prayer the bolt was drawn, the drop fell and Francisco's body plunged down the trap, and after three minutes of violent contortions it hung motionless at the end of the rope.

"In thirty five minutes the body was cut down and inclosed in a neat coffin, which was screwed down in jail, but such was the curiosity to see the remains that those charged with the burial had to unscrew the coffin twice. The body was interred at the corner of Seventh and Myrtle streets, on property long owned by H. S. Jones."

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES, GRANGE, FARMERS' ALLIANCE, STATE POLICE AND HARVEST HOME PICNIC.

The first agricultural society was formed in 1822, and held a fair on the public square of Erie in 1823. The next organization was perfected in 1848 under the title of the Erie County Agricultural Society. Fairs were held on the Academy grounds in 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852; on the Cunningham lot, east of Parade street, in 1853, 1854 and 1855; on the Garrison tract in 1856, 1857 and 1858; and on the Ebersole farm, in East Mill Creek, in 1859 and 1860. The society was chartered as a joint stock association in 1860, with a capital of $5,000. Thirty acres of the Ebersole farm, east of the city, were purchased, a race track laid out, and a small exhibition building erected, but no fair was held after 1860, in consequence of the war.

The Erie County Agricultural Society was formed in 1869 and held fairs annually on the Reed lots, just west of Erie City, until within a few years.

The Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society has held four exhibitions at Erie, on the Reed tract above referred to. The years of its fairs were 1872, 1873, 1877 and 1878. John W. Hammond, of Erie, was president of the society when its last two fairs in this county were held. James Miles, of Girard, was president in 1882-83-84.

An association was formed in 1864 for holding a "Harvest Home" picnic annually, which has been one of the most successful in the county. These picnics are usually held in August, at the Head, and are attended by thousands of farmers, as well as many city people. J. C. Thornton, one of the originators of the idea, has attended every picnic from the beginning. The 30th annual Harvest Home Picnic was held at the Head on Thursday, August 16, 1894.

The order of Patrons of Husbandry, or "Grange," as it is usually known, was introduced into Erie county December 23, 1873, when Corry Grange, No. 55, the first in the county, was instituted. D. C. Kennedy was the first master and H. G. Pratt the first secretary in the county. The order has since spread until it numbers a dozen or more societies and wields large influence.

The first Farmers' Alliance, known as "Erie County," was organized near Hornby, in Greenfield township, May 20, 1889; the second, called Greenfield Alliance, at the Prindle school-house, in the same township, November 25, 1889, and the third (Macedonia) in Venango township, January 11, 1890. Charles Morgan, Jr., of Greenfield, was the active man in starting the organization. From Erie county the association has spread over a number of the States, and is one of the most influential farmers' organizations in the Union.

The organization known as the State Police and Home Guards of Pennsylvania and Ohio, was started in Ashtabula county, Ohio, and Crawford county, Pennsylvania. At the beginning, the societies had no regular legal authority, but in 1872 Hon. E. H. Wilcox secured an act of Assembly which entitled them to incorporation, and gave them specific powers. The object of the organization is to protect the farmers and citizens of villages against outlaws, and more particularly against horse thieves. Numerous camps of the organization exist in this and the adjacent counties of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Geo. C. Gates, of Springfield, was secretary of the society for seven years, and captain for three years.

The Erie Fair Association was organized in January, 1895. A fine racing track for their use has been prepared by Charles M.

Reed, on the Reed farm, located upon the Lake road, some three miles east of the city.

Local fairs have long been held annually at Corry, Edinboro and Wattsburg, under the direction of the societies at those places.

MILITIA AND MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS.

By the act of 1804, every able-bodied man between the ages of eighteen and forty-five was enrolled and compelled to perform two days' military duty each year, or pay a fine. The militia were divided into companies, battalions, regiments and brigades, each of which elected its own officers. Beginning in a proper spirit, the "militia trainings," as they were termed, degenerated into a public farce. Every member was expected to have a gun and bring it along for inspection, but, as the system weakened in popular estimation, the discipline grew more slack, and many carried sticks, canes, brooms, corn stalks, and even light fence rails. The contrast between the flaming uniforms of the officers, and the outlandish appearance of the men was indescribably laughable. For a long time, though, training day was a great event throughout the State, and was looked forward to as a fair or a circus is now. The militia law was repealed at the session of 1847-48, and the old-fashioned trainings went out of vogue. A good many men who are or have been known as generals, majors or colonels, secured their titles under the old militia system.

In addition to the regular militia, volunteer companies have been in existence almost from the earliest settlement. The first of these was Capt. Elisha Marvin's Greenfield company, organized in 1801, with about eighty members. The second was Capt. Thomas Forster's Erie Light Infantry, organized in 1806. This company took part in the war of 1812-13. Other old-time companies were as follows: In 1821, the Erie Greens; in 1824, the Washington Artillery; in the same year, the Erie Guards; in 1831, an artillery company; in 1836, a cavalry company; about 1841, the German Guards and the Washington Guards; in 1842, the Wayne Grays; in 1858, the Franklin Pierce Rifle Company; in 1859, the Wayne Guard, John W. McLane, captain, and the Perry Artillery Company, Gustav Jarecki, captain.

The Wayne Grays and the Wayne Guard are the best known, a number of citizens who are yet living having been members of one or the other of these companies. The Grays tendered their services in the Mexican war, but they were declined, the quota from Pennsylvania being full. The Wayne Guard were at the height of their prosperity at the outbreak of the rebellion, and the company formed the nucleus of all the regiments that left Erie. More than half of the company became officers in the war.

Besides these volunteer organizations, the following are known to have been in existence in the county: At North East, in 1822, the Burgettstown Blues; at Waterford, in 1824, the Invincibles; at Fairview, in 1824, a company, name unknown; at the same place, the Fairview Guards; at Girard, in 1860, the Guards. Most of the volunteer soldiery of the county tendered their services to the government in 1861, when the war for the Union opened. [For an account of the military organizations in Erie since the war for the Union, see chapter XIII., Erie City.]

DISTILLERIES, BREWERIES AND WINE-MAKING.

In the early days of the county the use of whisky was almost universal, and there were few houses in which a supply was not kept constantly on hand. No one thought it wrong to "treat" visitors, or to drink in the presence of his family. Distilleries were as common as gristmills became afterward, and a large share of the grain was converted into liquor. Many farmers made a practice of regularly taking a portion of their grain to the distilleries and having a jug full or a barrel full of whisky made for their household use. The first prohibition society was established at Wattsburg in 1829, and the next year a great temperance wave swept over the county. A large portion of the people signed the pledge, it became unpopular to keep liquor in the house or to have grain made into whisky, and the distilleries rapidly disappeared. To-day there is not one in the county. The manufacture of wine began at North East in 1869, and has since become considerable of an industry at that place and Erie. Beer is a comparatively modern beverage in the county, having been introduced with the later German immigration. There are eight or ten breweries in the county, of which three in Erie are on quite an extensive scale.

TEMPERANCE AND TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

In 1840 there was a temperance society in almost every town and township. Temperance organizations have been in existence ever since, and the Temperance party has run a county ticket annually for many years. The Good Templar society in Erie county was first organized in 1856.

SLAVES AND SLAVERY.

The colored population of the county was larger, proportionately, eighty years ago than now. Most of those who were here in early days, were brought in as slaves, some of the most reputable families having been owners of this kind of property. The emancipation act of the State provided that all negroes over a certain age should remain slaves until their death; all below should become free at the age of twenty-eight. Under its provisions, a large portion of the colored race became entitled to their freedom, but there were a few who continued in slavery till released by the Master of all.

UNUSUAL SPELLS OF WEATHER.

The month of May, 1834, is notable in the weather records of the lake shore country. For three days before the 13th, there were strong cold winds from the west, with snow squalls. On the 13th, the bay and lake were unusually rough. Six inches of snow fell on the 15th. The leaves and blossoms were nearly all killed. No vessel was able to enter the port of Erie for four days. At the end of that time, the steambot "New York," from Buffalo, stopped at the channel pier. A small boat set out from the wharves to board her, and was capsized on the way over. Of eleven persons in the boat but two were saved. Frosts took place as late as June of that year.

Two of the worst storms on record occurred on the 10th and 11th of November, 1835, and on the 15th of the same month, 1842. On the occasion first named, the water was lashed into such fury that a party of fifteen men, who were raising the "Detroit" in Misery bay, dared not venture to return home, and had to remain on the Peninsula from the evening of the 10th to the morning of the 12th without food, fire or shelter. The waves rolled over the sand beach clear up to the foot of Garrison Hill.

In May, 1858, there was a continued period of cold weather. Rain fell nearly every day in the month, and fruits of all kinds were killed by frost. The heaviest late frost recorded by the weather office in Erie occurred May 29, 1884, but milder frosts took place the first week of June, 1878, '79, '86 and '88.

On June 6, 1842, there were snow and ice in various parts of the county, and in July of the same year frost formed over a good portion of Northwestern Pennsylvania. Snow fell in some parts of the State on June 6, 1843. The greatest snow storm on record fell on the afternoon and night of December 29, 1876, the date of the Ashtabula disaster. It was so deep that people in the city doing business, but a few squares from their homes, were exhausted in making their way to their suppers.

In the winter of 1880-81, snow fell about the middle of November, and lasted without interruption till February. During most of that time there was a slight snow-fall daily. A break-up came in February, but it was quickly followed by more snow, which lasted until the 15th of March. Then came the great snow-storm of March 30 and 31. The cold was intense during most of the winter. On the 3d of February the thermometer was 18 deg. below zero at Erie, 20 deg. at McKean, 24 deg. at Edinboro, 28 deg. at Albion, and 30 deg. at Waterford. February 10, 1881, the weather was 20 deg. below zero in Erie at 8 A. M. The lake was frozen over to the Canada shore during a good portion of the winter, and the ice on the bay was over twenty inches thick. The snow and cold prevailed over the country from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic. There were snow and ice in portions of the South where they had never been known before.

The winter of 1882-83 was unusually long and steady. There was scarcely a pleasant day from November 1 to April 1. The ground was found to be frozen in some places in Erie to a depth of three and a half feet.

The night of February 10, 1885, is memorable as one of the coldest periods known in the county. On the morning of the 11th the thermometer registered 17 to 28 below zero at Erie, 25 to 30 at Waterford, 23 at Corry and 32 at Wattsburg.

A long-to-be-remembered cold spell set in the night of February 3, 1895, and lasted until the 8th. During most of this period the thermometer at Erie ranged from 3 to 4 below zero in the day time, and 8 to 10 at night. On the 7th occurred one of the severest blizzards ever experienced. The cold and storm extended over the most of North America, Europe and Northern Asia. Zero weather prevailed as far south as Tennessee, and deep snow fell where it is seldom known. The railroads were blocked for days all over the country, and many persons died from the extreme cold. At Corry and in the southern parts of the county generally, the thermometer, from February 3 to 7, inclusive, ranged from 4 to 28 below zero, averaging, during the five days, 16½. On February 15, the ice in Erie harbor was from 28 to 30 inches thick. On Sunday night, May 12, 1895, a heavy frost fell that injured the grapes and small fruit considerably. The week ensuing, the weather was quite chilly. On the morning of May 15th ice was reported half an inch thick on quiet water in the hill townships. Snow to the depth of two inches fell in some of the southern districts of the county. The cold spell was preceded by several days of unusually warm weather. The extreme heat, followed by cold and frost, prevailed over a large portion of the Union.

On the other hand, several winters have been remarkable for their mildness. A number of instances are mentioned in the article on lake navigation. During the winter of 1881-2, the bay was open most of the season, and there was never more than a light coating of ice on the lake. On the 26th of December, 1865, fires were not needed, and people were glad to throw open their doors and windows for cool air. On the 1st of January, 1876, the day was so pleasant that the people of Girard indulged in a picnic in the woods.

The month of July, 1895, was unseasonably cool, especially during the last week. July 30 and 31 and August 1, fires were quite comfortable, and many persons wore their winter clothing in the evenings. The free band concerts in Central Park, Erie city, had to be postponed on account of the cool weather.

The earliest fall snow storms on record are as follows: October 13, 1844 or '45, remaining until the ensuing April; October 20, 1866, ten inches in depth, which disappeared in some three days; September 22, 1870, lasting the fall and winter through; October 8, 1879 or '80, eight inches, followed by mild weather; October 20, 1895, ten inches in Erie, disappearing in a day or two, and succeeded by a spell of pleasant weather.

THE CHOLERA.

Few persons are aware that the Asiatic cholera—most dreadful of all contagious diseases—at one time threatened the city of Erie. It was in July, 1832, in the days of steamboating. A party of immigrants were being conveyed up the lake from Buffalo, when a Mrs. Hunter, and her daughter developed symptoms of the terrible epidemic. The steamboat stopped at the channel pier and they were landed on the peninsula, where both died—Mrs. Hunter after an illness of thirteen hours, and her daughter a few hours later. The incident created much excitement among the citizens, who instantly adopted measures to prevent the contagion from getting a foothold in the town. Numerous cases of cholera developed during that season on board lake steamboats and in other lake cities.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES.

The first telegraph line in Erie county was put up in 1847. It extended from Buffalo to Cleveland. The only telegraph office in the county for several years was at Erie. The telephone exchange in Erie, the first in the county, was established August 1, 1878.

SHOWS AND CIRCUSES.

The early shows were altogether of the animal order, and the exhibitions generally took place in the barns of the best known hotels. In the beginning they consisted of a lion or tiger, and a monkey or two, and from that developed into large collections. We find a record of an elephant being in Erie in the summer of 1820, and of other animal shows in 1822 and 1823. The price of admission was twenty-five cents for adults and twelve and a half cents for children. This charge continued up to the second or third year of the civil war. In July, 1827, the first circus appeared, and in the same month in 1831, a violent storm blew down the tent of another, which was considered by the pious people as a manifestation of the disapproval of Providence. Within a date comparatively recent, it was looked upon as wicked to attend a circus, and, if religious persons went at all, it was with fear that they were not doing exactly the right thing.

CATTLE DRIVING AND SELLING.

Before the era of railroads, cattle driving was one of the great industries of the county. There was no market for cattle nearer than the eastern counties of the State, and the only way of getting them there was by the common roads. They were collected annually and driven across the mountains in droves of one hundred or more to Berks, Lancaster and other counties convenient to Philadelphia. Two men and a boy, with as many horses, usually managed a drove, and the trip took from two to three months. Sheep, hogs and horses were driven to market in the same way. There were numerous taverns on the route, where rest and sustenance was provided for men and beasts. The business was started by Thomas P. and Isaac Miller, and was also carried on extensively by S. Hutchins, John Marvin and others. It required considerable capital to carry on the business, but, with ordinary luck, it paid well. The heaviest cattle buyer of later years was Wilson Moore, of Waterford.

OLD TIME AND PRESENT CURRENCY.

Located between New York and Ohio, far away from the wealthier portions of the State, Erie county suffered all the evils of the miserable currency which prevailed before greenbacks and National bank notes were introduced. With the exception of a few years, there was no bank of issue in the county, and the only banking institutions were private brokers' offices. The best currency of those times was New York bank notes, and the poorest those of the western banks. Pennsylvania bank notes had only a small circulation in the county, and held a place in popular estimation intermediate between the above. There was a discount on all of these, ranging from one to twenty per cent. It was for the interest of the private bankers to circulate the notes on which there was the largest discount, and, as a consequence, the county was flooded with the bills of banks the locations of which were hardly known. Every business man had to keep a "bank note detector," revised and published monthly or weekly, on hand, and was not sure then that the notes he accepted would not be pronounced worthless by the next mail. There was hardly a week without a bank failure, and nearly every man had bills of broken banks in his possession. To add to the perplexities of the situation, there were innumerable counterfeits which could with difficulty be distinguished from the genuine.

Granting that the bank was good, and that the discount was properly figured, there was no assurance that the bill was what it purported to be. All this was a terrible annoyance and loss to the people, but it was a regular bonanza to the "shaving shops." Even of the uncertain bank notes, there was not enough to do the business of the community. Most of the buying and selling was done on long credit, and occasionally a manufacturing firm, to ease itself along, and relieve the necessities of the public, would issue a mongrel coin, which went by the name of "pewterinum." This condition of affairs lasted until a year or two after the rebellion broke out.

People of this day who have no knowledge of the old bank note currency, can scarcely conceive of the advantage of a uniform system, such as has been given to us by the United States government.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' MONUMENTS.

Erie county enjoys the distinction of having erected the first monument in Pennsylvania to the memory of the soldiers and sailors who lost their lives in the war for the Union. It stands in the center of the public square of Girard, and the entire expense of its erection, about $6,000, was incurred by Dan Rice, the showman. The monument was dedicated on the 1st of November, 1865, in the presence of a vast multitude. Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, and Gov. Tod, of Ohio, were among the eminent men who graced the occasion.

A second monument, one of the handsomest of its kind in the Union, was dedicated in Erie in 1872, and adds to the attractiveness of the Central park of the city. It commemorates the dead sailors as well as soldiers of the county, and owes its existence largely to the persistent labor of three patriotic ladies—Mrs. Isaac Moorhead, Miss Sarah Reed and Miss Helen Bail. The monument cost $10,000 exclusive of $500 paid by the city for the foundation. A monument to the unknown dead of the war for the Union was dedicated in Erie cemetery in 1894.

REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

The pioneers of the county included a fair proportion of Revolutionary soldiers. Among them were Seth Reed, who fought at Bunker Hill and rose to the rank of colonel; Capts.

John Lytle and Robert King, and Privates John Vincent, Thomas Rees, William Miles, Zelottus Lee, Michael Hare, Daniel Stancliff, John McCoy, Stephen Sparrow, Titus Allen, Stephen Oliver, Robert Irwin, and Messrs. Nash, Trask and Burrows.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY MOVEMENT.

The first anti-slavery society in the county (which was also one of the earliest in the State) was formed in 1836. The principal members were Philetus Glass, Dr. Smedley, and Truman Tuttle, of North East; Col. J. M. Moorhead, Mr. Jessup and Samuel Low, of Harbor Creek; William Himrod, Alex. Mehaffey and Aaron Kellogg, of Erie; Giles and Hamlin Russell, of Mill Creek; Stephen C. Lee, of Summit; Rev. T. H. Burroughs, of Concord; and William Gray, of Wayne. Another society was formed in North East about the same time, with Truman Tuttle as President, James Duncan as Vice-president, Dr. Smedley as Secretary, and R. L. Loomis as Treasurer. An anti-abolition meeting was held the same year in Springfield.

The "underground railroad," which was the name generally given to the system by which slaves from the South were run away from their masters, was in full operation in this county from about 1840 to 1860. There were regular stations along the route, where zealous anti-slavery people openly defied the law and gave the runaway slaves food, shelter and money. The chief "station agents," as they were jokingly called in Erie county, were William Gray, Stephen C. Lee, Hamlin Russell and William Himrod. The slaves were secreted until a good chance offered to send them to Canada.

OLDEST MEN AND WOMEN.

Michael Hare, who was buried in Waterford cemetery, attained the remarkable age of 115 years, 8 months and 23 days. He was born in Ireland June 10, 1728, and died at Waterford on the 3d of May, 1843.

Patrick Ward died in Girard township, aged 105 years. When in his 103d year he walked three miles to Girard borough in order to vote.

James Davis lived in Greenfield until he was 100, when he moved to Michigan, where he died, either 103 or 105 years old.

Two men have died in their 100th year.

They were Levi Atkins, of North East, and Elias Palmer, of Conneaut. The latter died in 1878.

John Teel, first, a native of New England, died in Erie early in the century, aged 97 years; Stephen Oliver, in McKean, January 14, 1857, lacking one month of 97; John Cook, in Belle Valley, October 5, 1895, aged 97; James Steadman, in McKean, in 1892, aged 96 years and 6 months; Benjamin Cullom, in the same township, in May, 1883, aged 96; Griffith Hinton, in Venango, on the 15th of March, 1880, aged 96; Andrew Matteson, at or near Corry, on the 26th of March, 1883, aged 95; and Mr. McIntyre, in Springfield, in 1867, at the same age.

The oldest woman was Mrs. Sarah Green, of Fairview, who died about 1855 or '80, at the age of 104 years. Next in the order of age was Mrs. Mary Dobbins, relict of Capt. D. Dobbins, of Erie, who died on the 24th of January, 1879, in her 100th year. Mrs. Mary Shaughnessy died in Erie July 30, 1882, aged 100 years. The fourth oldest was Mrs. William Smith, formerly of Waterford, but later of Beaver Dam. Her death occurred in the latter place on the 6th of August, 1875, in her 99th year.

Mrs. Anna Margaret, relict of Casper Doll, of Fairview, died February 3, 1881, aged 97 years and 10 days; Miss Rosanna Bliss, in Venango township, on the 16th of May, 1895, at the age of 97 years and 10 months; Mrs. Lucy, relict of Asa G. Olds, in Erie, August 13, 1881, lacking a few days of 97; Mrs. Phelps, of Waterford, in August, 1879, aged 95; Mrs. Elias Parmer, of Conneaut, in 1876, aged 94; and Mrs. Johnston Eaton, of Fairview, in 1872, aged 93.

Below are the oldest persons known to the writer to be living in the county on the 1st of September, 1895: Thomas Dillon, Erie, in his 90th year; Mrs. Weed, Greene township, aged 97; Mrs. Eliza Wilson Yost, Greenfield, 94; Mrs. Matthew Gray, Erie, in her 93d year; Mrs. Oliver Dunn, Erie, in her 92d year; James Hampson, North East, aged 92. All of these, except Mr. Dillon, were born in Erie county.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The first time a day for Thanksgiving was set apart in Pennsylvania was on the last Thursday of November, 1819, at the suggestion of Gov. Findlay. The governor's proclamation was generally respected throughout Erie county. The first chief executive to propose a day of national Thanksgiving was President Washington, who fixed Thursday, November 26, 1789, for that purpose.

GREAT FLOODS.

The largest rainfall ever known, within the same period, occurred on August 25, 1873, when the weather office reported that two inches of water fell within two hours' time.

A flood in the fall of 1878 did much damage in the western part of the county.

One of the greatest floods ever known took place at the beginning of February, 1888. It washed away nearly every mill dam in the county and destroyed numerous bridges. The damage amounted to tens of thousands of dollars.

An extraordinary downpour occurred in June, 1892, lasting several days and extending over the whole State. It did much damage in this county, especially along the South Branch of French creek, at Corry, Union and other points.

The biggest flood known in Erie city occurred in the spring of 1893, sweeping bridges and houses off their foundations along Mill creek, and causing damage that cost the city many thousands of dollars to repair.

LIBERTY BELL.

One of the most interesting incidents in the history of the county was the trip of the Liberty Bell in 1893. It reached Erie at 3 A. M. on the 26th of April, on its way from Philadelphia to the World's Fair in Chicago, accompanied by a large delegation of officials of the second named city. An immense concourse gathered at the depot to greet the relic, including thousands of school children. The special train left Erie at noon of the 26th, and proceeded to Chicago by way of Corry, Oil City and Pittsburg. It was received everywhere with touching demonstrations.

GRAPE CULTURE.

One of the main interests of the agricultural portion of the county is the raising of grapes, which are produced in enormous quantities in North East, Harbor Creek and some of the other lake shore townships. An account of the beginning and progress of this important interest will be found in the chapter relating to North East township. From North East and Harbor Creek, the grape culture spread to the lake shore townships of Girard, Fairview, Mill Creek and Springfield, and it will not be many years until the entire lake border of the county will be one vast grape, fruit, berry and vegetable section. When the grape culture developed into a large business, the principal growers of Erie and Chautauqua counties entered into an organization which was known as the Chautauqua and North East Grape Union. This was in 1891. The Union lasted three years, when it was dissolved and a new organization formed at North East, under the title of the Lake Erie Grape Union. It embraces the leading growers of North East and Harbor Creek, but is open to members from all parts of Erie county. The purpose of the Union is to sell and ship grapes and advance the general interests of the grape-growing industry.

Am. A. Galbraith

CHAPTER XXVI.

ERIE COUNTY IN THE WAR FOR THE UNION.

ON the inauguration of Civil War by the attack on Fort Sumter, April 12, 1861, the people of Erie county were practically unanimous in the sentiment that the Union must be preserved at all hazards. Party differences were forgotten, for the time being, and men of all shades of politics vied with each other in acts of patriotism.

The first war meeting in the county was held in Wayne Hall, Erie, on the 26th of April, 1861. It was largely attended, and was presided over by William A. Galbraith. Speeches were made, in addition to Mr. Galbraith's, by George H. Cutler, John H. Walker and George W. DeCamp. Of these gentlemen, Messrs. Galbraith, Cutler and DeCamp had been identified with the Democratic party.

A movement had already been started by Capt. John W. McLane to organize a regiment to serve for three months. Volunteers were flocking to McLane's standard with surprising rapidity, and it was necessary to raise a fund for the support of the families of many of those who had enlisted. The sum of $7,000 for the purpose was subscribed at the meeting, which was increased in a few days to $17,000. Similar meetings were held in almost every town in the county, and volunteer relief funds were subscribed every where. The speakers in most general demand were Messrs. Galbraith and DeCamp.

The Perry Artillery Company, C. F. Mueller captain, and W. F. Leutje, first lieutenant, at once tendered their services to the government and were accepted. The Wayne Guard, of which Jno. W. McLane was captain, generally enlisted, as did those of the Girard Guards, D. W. Hutchinson captain. Many of the members of these companies became officers in the regiments subsequently organized.

THE THREE MONTHS' REGIMENT.

When the war broke out, no person, North or South, believed it would last beyond three months. The first proclamation of President Lincoln called for volunteers for that period, and a large portion of the men who went into the field on both sides did so with the thought that it would be nothing more than a grand picnic at the public expense.

The camp of the three months' regiment was established on a piece of vacant ground in Erie at the southeast corner of Parade and Sixth streets, where volunteers poured in from all parts of the northwest. More offered in a few days than could be accepted, and many were reluctantly compelled to return home. As a sample of the spirit of the time, the borough and township of Waterford sent forward nearly 100 men. Five companies were recruited in Erie alone, but of these fully one-half were from other places. It was considered a privilege to be accepted, and those who failed to pass muster or arrived too late were grievously disappointed. The regiment left Erie for Pittsburg at 2 p. m. on Wednesday, the 1st of May, being accompanied by Mehl's Brass Band. A vast crowd was at the railroad depot to witness its departure. The regiment reached Pittsburg at 9 a. m. the next day, and took up quarters in Camp Wilkins. A number of its members were discharged because the companies to which they were attached exceeded their quota. It received arms and uniforms on the 29th of May, and was carefully drilled every day that it remained in camp. For some reason, the regiment was never called into active service, and it returned to Erie on Saturday evening, July 20. It was escorted by a delegation of citizens to Central park, where a public supper had been prepared by the ladies of the city. But one member died during the absence of the regiment.

EIGHTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

Meantime, the President had issued a call for 300,000 men for the war, and Col. McLane had made a tender of a regiment for that service. Many of the members of the three months' regiment volunteered to go with the colonel, and they were accordingly dismissed until the 1st of August to await an answer to his proffer. On the 24th of July Col. McLane received an order authorizing him to recruit a new regiment. Those of the first regiment who had re-enlisted were recalled, and recruiting began actively throughout the Northwestern counties. A camp was established on the old fair grounds, about two miles east of the city, on the Buffalo road, which was used for the same purpose by the regiments afterward organized.

An immense meeting was held in Farrar Hall, on the 24th of August, to assist in raising men for the regiment. It was addressed by William A. Galbraith, James C. Marshall, George W. DeCamp, Col. McLane, Miles W. Caughey and Capt. John Graham. Meetings of a like character followed throughout the county. The principal speakers besides those named were Alfred King, Strong Vincent, William S. Lane, Morrow B. Lowry and Dan Rice.

The regiment of Col. McLane, on being reported full, was ordered to the front, and left for Harrisburg on the 16th of September. Its departure was attended by the same vast outpouring and marked by the same pathetic incidents as before, and none who were eye-witnesses will ever forget the scenes of the day. A flag was presented to it on the part of the State December 21, and it became officially known as the Eighty-third Regiment.

OTHER ORGANIZATIONS.

While these measures were in progress Capts. Gregg and Bell, of the United States army, opened a recruiting office in the city for the regular cavalry, and enlisted a considerable number of young men. Recruiting was going on at the same time with great vigor for the navy. Some sixty persons from Erie went to New York to serve under the command of Lieut. T. H. Stevens, formerly of the Michigan. Up to September 7, Capt. Carter, of the United States steamer "Michigan," had enlisted 700 seamen, who were forwarded in squads to the seaboard.

By September, the Ladies' Aid Society had been organized in Erie to furnish relief to the sick and wounded soldiers in the field, with branches in most of the towns in the county. It was maintained during the entire war, and did invaluable service. Through its labors boxes of delicacies, hospital supplies, medicines and other comforts for the sick were forwarded to the front almost daily.

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH REGIMENT.

Before the departure of the Eighty-third Regiment, M. Schlaudecker, of Erie, major of the three months' regiment, commenced recruiting for another. Enlistments went on with such alacrity that the regiment left for the front on Tuesday, the 25th of February, 1862, with every company full. At Harrisburg it was presented by Gov. Curtin with a stand of colors, and took rank as the One Hundred and Eleventh Regiment. The regiment was accompanied by Zimmerman's Brass Band.

A meeting was held in Erie on the 12th of April to provide for the relief of those who might be wounded in the battles that were daily expected in Virginia. Considerable money was raised, and committees were appointed to furnish attendants for those who might need their services. By this date, the country was having war in earnest. Squads of rebel prisoners were taken through on the Lake Shore R. R. every few days.

It might be supposed that war matters absorbed the whole of the public attention, but this was only the case in a general sense. All lines of trade and manufacture were carried on with unabated energy during the entire conflict, and a course of public lectures was maintained in the city each winter, comprising some of the most noted orators of the day.

The news of the battles around Richmond, in which the Eighty-third suffered terribly and Col. McLane was killed, reached Erie in the later part of June, and caused great mourning. Emblems of sorrow for the dead were placed on many buildings, and hospital stores were hastily sent forward for the wounded.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH REGIMENT.

Early in July the President called for 300,000 more troops, and of this number it was announced that Erie county's proportion was five companies of 100 men each. A meeting to encourage enlistments was held in Wayne Hall, at which the County Commissioners were asked to appropriate $100,000 toward equipping a new regiment. This was succeeded by others, both in Erie and in the country districts. The martial spirit had been much cooled by the disasters in Virginia, and it began to be necessary to offer extra inducements to volunteers. Erie city offered a bounty of $50 to each recruit and the various townships hastened to imitate its example. Another call for 300,000 men decided the County Commissioners to appropriate $25,000 to pay an additional bounty of the same amount. In August, for the third time, the fair grounds were turned into a military camp, and the organization of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Regiment began. Recruits came forward rapidly, and the regiment left for the seat of war on the 11th of September, 1862.

At the same time that enlistments were in progress for the last-named regiment, volunteers were being gathered for other organizations. The navy was receiving numerous accessions, mainly from Erie. Capts. Lennon, Miles and Roberts were each raising a cavalry company. On September 25, Capt. Lennon's company left with full ranks, and by the 4th of October, Roberts' and Miles' companies were both in camp at Pittsburg. A cavalry company had previously been raised at Union by Capt. Geo. H. Russell, which went into camp at Philadelphia, and became a part of the Twelfth Cavalry Regiment.

THE FIRST DRAFT.

Notwithstanding the large number of volunteers, the quota of Erie county, under the various calls of the President, was still short, and a draft seemed inevitable. The papers were full of articles urging the people, for the credit of the county, to avoid the draft, and meetings were constantly being held to induce volunteering. Many persons were badly scared over the probability of being forced into the service, and a few quietly took up their abode in Canada. As the chance of a draft became more certain, insurance companies were formed for the protection of the members. Those who joined these organizations paid a sum varying from $20 to $50, which was placed in a common fund, to procure substitutes for such of their number as might be drawn from the wheel of fate. While preparations for the draft were in progress, recruiting for both the army and the navy went on with great energy.

Toward the latter part of September, the State authorities became alarmed for the safety of Harrisburg, and a hasty call was issued for minutemen to assist in the defense of the capital. Six companies, including some of the leading business men, left Erie for Harrisburg, in response to the Governor's appeal, but, happily, were not needed to take part in any fighting. They returned in the beginning of October.

Meanwhile, an enrollment of the militia had been made, preliminary to the draft, under the direction of I. B. Gara, who had been appointed a commissioner for that purpose. These proceedings, as well as the subsequent measures in connection with the subject, were carried on under the State militia law. W. P. Gilson was appointed a deputy marshal to prevent the escape of persons liable to conscription into Canada. The officers to manage the draft were B. B. Vincent, commissioner, and Charles Brandes, surgeon.

Volunteers were accepted up to the day of drafting.

The draft was held in the grand jury room of the court house on the 16th of October, 1862, 1,055 names being drawn for the whole county, the owners of which were to serve for nine months. A blindfolded man drew the slips from the wheel, which were read as they came out to the crowd in attendance. There were many funny incidents, and some that were very sad indeed. North East and Springfield were the only districts in the county that escaped the draft, their quotas being full. In filling the wheel, all persons were exempted above the age of forty-five years; also, all ministers, school teachers and school directors.

After the draft, the main business for some weeks was hunting up substitutes. The price of these ranged from $50 to $250, though the average was in the neighborhood of $150. The act released parties from military service on payment of $300, and those who were able to raise the money generally availed themselves of the privilege. A good many persons who had concluded that the war was to be a long and bloody one, put substitutes into the service for a term of three years. Swindlers were plenty, who hired out as substitutes, got their money in advance and then left for parts unknown. Some 300 persons were exempted for physical disability, about 250 failed to report, and, altogether, it is doubtful whether 500 of the drafted men ever went into the army. The first lot of conscripts, fifty-one in number, left for camp at Pittsburg in the latter part of October, some 300 were forwarded on the 10th of November, and the balance went on at intervals between that and the end of the year. Andrew Scott was appointed a Provost Marshal to hunt up the delinquents, but hardly found enough to pay for the trouble. The Councils of Erie voted $45,000 for the relief of the families of conscripts from the city, and the Ladies' Aid Society supplied each family with a Thanksgiving dinner. A majority of the conscripts reached home by the ensuing August. Few saw any fighting, and the number of deaths was meager.

MONEY MATTERS AND POLITICS.

By the fall of 1862, prices had gone up twenty-five to forty per cent., with a steady tendency to advance. The national tax law was in full operation, and county, city and township levies were largely increased to provide money for bounties. Gold and silver had disappeared from circulation, and national treasury notes, or greenbacks, as they came to be known, were slowly finding their way into use; but the principal medium of exchange still consisted of the notes of uncertain State banks, county and city scrip and government fractional currency or "shin plasters." Even of the latter there were not enough for public convenience, and business men resorted to checks and due bills for fractional parts of a dollar. To meet the demand for small change, the city issued scrip in sums of five, ten, twenty, twenty-five and fifty cents, which proved of much convenience for the time being.

While this was the state of affairs financially, political feeling grew daily more intense. The term "Copperhead," as applied to the Democrats, came into use about the beginning of 1863, and the latter, to retort upon the Republicans, styled them Black-snakes, Revolutionists, Radicals and other names more forcible than polite. The Republicans taunted the Democrats with being opposed to the war, and the latter answered by saying that the Republicans aimed at the destruction of the people's liberty. Looking at the subject now, the embittered partisanship of the day seems supremely foolish and incomprehensible. There were true patriots on both sides, and both parties doubtless contained men who were more anxious for the triumph of selfish ends than for the good of the country. The mass of the people were anxious for the preservation of the Union, though they held different views about the way of doing it.

THE REBELS ON PENNSYLVANIA SOIL.

The news of the rebel invasion of Pennsylvania in June, 1863, caused a wonderful commotion throughout the county. The Governor made an urgent appeal for militia to defend the State, and instant measures were taken in response. A vast meeting was held in Erie on the evening of June 15, at which earnest speeches were made by Messrs. Lowry, Sill, Galbraith, Walker, Marvin, McCreary and others, pointing out the duty of the people to drive the enemy from the soil of Pennsylvania. About 400 citizens enlisted for the State defense, but, on reaching Pittsburg, they were ordered home, the victory of Meade at Gettysburg having rendered their immediate service unnecessary. Generous contributions of hospital stores were sent to the wounded Erie county soldiers by the efforts of the Ladies' Aid Society. The fall of Vicksburg and Meade's triumph were celebrated in Erie with great rejoicing.

By reference to the newspapers of the day, we find that in the summer of 1863, Capt. Mueller was in Erie recruiting another battery. Large numbers of young men were shipping in the navy. The citizens were making extraordinary exertions to avert another draft. Insurance companies against the draft were formed by the score, and hundreds of persons were putting in claims for exemption to the enrolling officers. Regiments were passing through the city as often as two or three a week, on their way home to fill up their ranks. Not a few liable to military service were slipping off to Canada, and an occasional instance was reported of young men maiming themselves to secure exemption. The only portion of the male population who felt really comfortable were the deformed, the crippled and the over-aged.

SECOND DRAFT.

Early in the year 1863 Congress passed an act taking the matter of conscription out of the hands of the States, rendering all persons liable between the ages of twenty and forty-five, except such as were exempt from physical causes, or other special reasons, and making each Congressional district a military district, under the supervision of a provost marshal, an enrolling commissioner, and an examining surgeon, to be appointed by the President. To escape military duty when called upon, it was made necessary to prove exemption, furnish a substitute, or pay $300. Lieut. Col. H. S. Campbell, late of the Eighty-third Regiment, was named as marshal; Jerome Powell, of Elk county, as commissioner; and Dr. John Macklin, of Jefferson county, as surgeon, to act for this Congressional district. Headquarters were established at Waterford, and a new enrollment was made during the months of May and June. In the prosecution of their duties, the enrolling officers met with some hostility among the laborers and mechanics of the city, but nothing occurred of a serious nature. The government was now enlisting negroes into the army, and bodies of these troops passed through Erie frequently.

The second draft in numerical order, and the first under the United States law, occurred at Waterford under the supervision of the officers above named on Monday and Tuesday the 24th and 25th of August. The wheel stood on a platform in front of the provost marshal's office, and the names were drawn by a blind man. An audience of a thousand or more surrounded the officers, one of whom took each slip as it came out of the wheel and read it aloud, so that all present could hear. The crowd was good natured throughout the proceedings, but many a man who assumed indifference when his name was drawn was at heart sick and sore. The saddest features of the case did not appear to the public; they were only known to the parents, the wives, the children and the sweethearts of the conscripts. It is impossible now to state the number who were drafted, but as the county was announced to be nearly 1,400 short of its quota a week or so before, it is probable that it did not fall much below that figure. The price for substitutes ran up to $300, with the supply quite equal to the demand. On the 26th of September, it was stated in the newspapers that eighty-three of the conscripts had furnished substitutes, 245 had paid commutation, 706 had been exempted and 127 had been forwarded to camp at Pittsburg.

A CALL FOR MORE MEN.

In October, 1863, appeared a call from President Lincoln for 300,000 more men. Gov. Curtin announced Pennsylvania's quota to be 38,268, which he asked to be made up by volunteering. A general bounty of $402 was offered to veterans who should re-enlist, and $100 less to new recruits. To this sum the county added $300, and most of the districts $50 to $100 more.

During a portion of the season, the United States steamer "Michigan" was guarding Johnson's Island, in the upper part of the lake, where about two thousand rebel prisoners were confined, whom rumor accused of a design to escape. In the month of November reports became current of a proposed rebel invasion from Canada, Erie being named as the landing place. This was the most startling news, in a local sense, that had yet arisen out of the war, and the citizens were correspondingly agitated. While the excitement was at its height, 600 troops arrived from Pittsburg with a battery, under the command of Maj. Gen. Brooks. The latter directed intrenchments to be thrown up on the blockhouse bluff, and called upon the citizens to lend him their assistance. Something like one thousand obeyed his summons, with picks and shovels, on the first day, but the workers dwindled woefully in number on the second day. The rumor proved to be false, the work was abandoned, and the troops left for the South in a few days, with the exception of the battery.

The encouragement given by the large bounties did much to promote volunteering. Erie county's quota of the new call was 673, which it was determined by the public should be made up without a draft. To the joy of all, when the day for the draft arrived, Erie county escaped, her proportion having been raised.

RECRUITING ACTIVE.

On the 14th of January, 1864, the members of the One Hundred and Eleventh Regiment came home to recruit their ranks. They were given a grand reception at the depot, and treated by the ladies to a sumptuous repast. The regiment went into camp on the fair grounds, and remained until February 25, when they left for the seat of war with ranks nearly full. A good many members of the Eighty-third Regiment, whose term had expired, also came home in January, and were received with the cordiality their bravery entitled them to. Seventy-five more arrived on the 4th of March.

Among the features at the beginning of 1864, it is to be noted that two recruiting officers for the regular army were busy at work in the city. The national currency had supplanted all other paper circulation, and, being issued in vast amounts, had inflated prices to twice and thrice their normal standard. A remarkable speculation had commenced in real estate. Sixty persons had recently enlisted from Erie in the navy, and hosts of others were thinking of doing the same in preference to entering the army. Several squads of negro soldiers passed through Erie from Waterford, where they had been accepted to apply on the quota of the county. Five or six criminals were released from prison by the Court at the May session on condition that they must join the army. It was a common practice of the day for the Courts to permit prisoners indicted for minor offenses to go without sentence if they volunteered to fight for the Union.

FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND MORE.

The call of the President, in July, 1864, for 500,000 more men, was succeeded by the usual periodical endeavor to avoid the draft, which had become the all-exciting topic of discussion. At a meeting in Erie, $20,000 were subscribed to offer extra inducements to volunteers, besides the United States, county and district bounties. The quota of the county was stated to be 1,289, and of this, the city's proportion was about one hundred and fifty. Provost Marshal Campbell, in pursuance of instruction, gave notice that negroes would be taken as substitutes. This hint was eagerly accepted, and Asa Battles, John W. Halderman and Richard M. Broas were deputed to go to the Southwest and pick up recruits to apply on the quota of Erie county. Meanwhile Ensign Bone had opened an office in the city, where he was shipping men by the hundreds for the navy. About a thousand entered the service through that channel, receiving an average bounty of $400. The price of substitutes had increased to $550, $600 and $700.

President Lincoln was re-elected in November, 1864, after a contest which has never been surpassed in the hatred it engendered, and the vigor with which it was fought on both sides. Every speaker who could be mustered was forced upon the stump, and there was scarcely a cross-roads that did not have its mass meetings, pole raisings and political clubs. The great processions of the two parties in Erie during that campaign were the events of a life-time to many of the participants. Notwithstanding the heated canvass, the election passed off without a disturbance, and the defeated party acquiesced in the result with the calmness of a martyr.

THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND MORE CALLED FOR AND ANOTHER DRAFT.

The call for 300,000 more men in January, 1865, led the Councils of Erie to increase their offer of a bounty to $150, which was ultimately increased to $400. A draft took place at Ridgway, where the Provost Marshal's office had been moved from Waterford, on the 6th of March, in which 2,010 names were drawn from Erie county. The only district that did not have to contribute was Girard borough. The names of the conscripts were telegraphed to Erie and read to the anxious thousands in waiting, from a window of the Daily Dispatch office, in Wright's block, at the northeast corner of State and Fifth streets. Occasionally a sound of forced laughter would be heard as some excitable person's name was announced, but the general bearing of the crowd was solemn and painful. Hundreds of women were in the crowd, and their distress upon learning of the conscription of some father, husband or brother was most pitiful. The people were at last face to face with war's sternest and cruellest realities. The Legislature had passed an act authorizing any district to pay a bounty of $400, and large sums were now offered for volunteers and substitutes. The price of the latter at one period rose to $1,500, but got down finally to an average of between $800 and $900. Of the drafted men, a good portion entered the service and were mostly assigned to guard duty in the forts at and near Washington. The majority of them were back by the last of June.

CLOSE OF THE WAR.

On Sunday, April 9, came the glad news of the surrender of Lee, at Appomattox, which was everywhere hailed as the virtual end of the war. The demonstration in Erie over the event was the most joyful and impressive in the city's history. Cannons were fired, bells were rung, flags were thrown in the breeze, and the whole population shouted themselves hoarse for the Union and its gallant soldiers. The illumination in the evening made the streets almost as bright as the noonday sun.

The universal gladness was quickly changed to profound sorrow by the assassination of President Lincoln on that dreadful Friday, the 12th of April. Emblems of mourning instantly took the place of the tokens of victory, and every warehouse, shop and business establishment was closed on Saturday. The special train bearing the martyred President's remains to Springfield passed through the city on the 27th of April. Thousands of people gathered at the depot to pay their last tribute of respect to the honored dead.

EFFECT OF INFLATED CURRENCY.

During the war the government issued large amounts of paper money, which were generally understood to be irredeemable except in case of the preservation of the Union. Starting at par, or nearly so, this currency depreciated until at one time it was worth, in gold, only forty cents on the dollar. The following table of retail prices, compiled from the Erie papers, shows how the cost of living advanced in consequence of the depreciated currency:

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE ERIE COUNTY REGIMENTS.

THE THREE MONTHS' REGIMENT.

This regiment was recruited under a call issued on the 21st of April, 1861, by Capt. John W. McLane, who had served in the Mexican war, and at the breaking out of the rebellion was in command of the Wayne Guard at Erie. Twelve hundred men responded to the call in four days, of whom ten companies of seventy-seven men each were accepted. The regiment was mainly recruited from Erie and Crawford counties. It went into camp on a piece of vacant ground in Erie city, on the east side of Parade street, near the intersection of Sixth, which was duly christened Camp Wayne. Field officers were elected on the 27th of April. The regiment proceeded by rail to Pittsburg on Wednesday, May 1, and camped along the Allegheny river a short distance above the city. Being the first organized regiment that had reached the city, it was received with much curiosity and enthusiasm, and the people vied with each other in deeds of kindness to both officers and men. After six weeks spent in idleness at Camp Wilkins, as its first quarters were known, the regiment was moved to Hulton Station, twelve miles further up the Allegheny, where a general rendezvous had been established for the troops of Western Pennsylvania, under the name of Camp Wright. Here the men received muskets and were carefully drilled, but labored under much disadvantage in target practice for want of suitable ammunition. The term of enlistment of the regiment expired without its having been mustered into the United States service. It returned to Erie on the 20th of July.

EIGHTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

On the return of the three months' regiment Col. McLane immediately announced his purpose of raising another regiment for three years. Authority for this purpose was received on the 24th of July, 1861, and in less than five weeks the full complement of 1,000 men had enlisted, mainly from the counties of Erie, Crawford, Warren and Forest. Of these, nearly 300 had been members of the three months' regiment. The rendezvous was on the old fair grounds east of Erie, and the regiment was mustered into the United States service on the 8th of September. It left for Washington on the 10th of September, accompanied by Mehl's Band, where it was assigned to the Third brigade of Porter's division, under command of Gen. Butterfield. The regiment soon attained to a high reputation for drill and soldierly appearance. On one occasion Gen. McClellan said to Col. McLane: "I congratulate you upon having one of the very best regiments in the army." Gen. Butterfield also congratulated and commended the regiment in a general order.

The regiment remained in camp in front of Washington until the 8th of March, 1862, when orders were received for the whole army to move. It took part in the reconnaissance toward Big Bethel and the siege of Yorktown, and was prominently engaged in the battles of Hanover Court House, Gaines' Mill, Malvern Hill and most of the desperate encounters along and in the vicinity of the Chickahominy. At Gaines' Mill on the 27th of June Col. McLane was killed. On the 11th of August Mehl's Band, which had been with the regiment to that date, was discharged by general order, and returned to Erie.

When the army moved north the Eighty-third accompanied it, and participated in Pope's campaign, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, and, in fact, nearly every battle that was fought down to the closing scene at Appomattox. Col. Vincent, who had succeeded Col. McLane, and who was at the time in command of the brigade, fell, mortally wounded, at Gettysburg on the 2d of July, 1863. He had been appointed a Brigadier General, but the news of his promotion did not reach the regiment until after his death. After Gettysburg the regiment, which had been reduced by losses in battle and sickness to but 200 of its original members, was enlarged to the extent of some 400 drafted men and substitutes, and it received accessions from time to time sufficient to swell its total roll to about 2,600.

It was mustered out of the service at Washington on the 28th of June, 1865, and formally disbanded on the 4th of July at Harrisburg. The members of the regiment returned to their homes in small bodies, but their welcome was none the less warm and cheering. In the official history of Pennsylvania volunteers, published by the Commonwealth, it is stated that the Eighty-third Regiment was engaged in twenty-five battles, "more by two than any other Pennsylvania Infantry regiment."

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH REGIMENT.

While the Eighty-third regiment was organizing, application was made to the Secretary of War by Matthias Schlaudecker, of Erie, who had served as Major of the three months' regiment, for authority to recruit a new infantry regiment for the three years' service. His request was granted on the 2d of September, 1861, a rendezvous was at once established at the old fair ground, and on the 24th of January, 1862, the ranks being full, a regimental organization was effected. The regiment left for Harrisburg on the 25th, by way of Cleveland and Pittsburg, reaching the State capital on the 27th. There it was furnished with colors, arms and equipments, and on the 1st of March proceeded to Baltimore.

Its first serious engagement was on the 9th of August, at Cedar Mountain, where it lost nineteen killed, sixty-one wounded and thirteen missing. From that time to the 24th of September, 1863, when the regiment was transferred to Tennessee, it was constantly connected with the Army of the Potomac, and participated in nearly all of the battles in Virginia and Maryland, including Antietam, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. While stationed at Acquia Creek it was one of fifteen regiments specially commended by General Hooker in his general order of March 8. Col. Schlaudecker was honorably discharged in November, 1862, and the other field officers were duly promoted.

The regiment joined Rosecrans' army at Murfreesboro on the 6th of October, 1863, and took a conspicuous part in the movement upon Lookout Mountain. In December, most of its members enlisted for a second term, and were given a furlough to come home, arriving at Erie the 14th of January, 1864. On returning to the scene of war in the Southwest, the regiment took part in the march upon Atlanta, being one of the first to enter that city. During the severe fighting before the capture of Atlanta, Col. Cobham was shot, and died on the field of battle. The regiment performed provost duty in Atlanta some two months, when it joined the main body of the army in Sherman's famous "march to the sea." At Goldsboro, N. C., the One Hundred and Ninth and One Hundred and Eleventh regiments, which had served side by side since 1862, were consolidated, with 885 members, retaining the latter title. It was mustered out of service at Washington on the 19th of July, 1865, and the Northwestern Pennsylvania portion of the regiment reached Erie on the 27th of the same month, where, after a grand reception, the gallant veterans quietly separated for their respective homes. ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH REGIMENT.

A fourth regiment, which received the title of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth, was recruited during the summer and fall of 1862, having its rendezvous at the same camp which had been used by the Eighty-third and One Hundred and Eleventh regiments. The date of its organization, September 5, 1862, was one of the most critical in the history of the war. The regiment was accordingly hurried forward without arms and with little training in military duty. Leaving Erie on the 11th of September, it reached Chambersburg by way of Buffalo and Elmira within thirty-six hours, was there furnished with arms, and in two days more was within sound of the enemy's guns at Antietam. About noon on the 17th the regiment joined the extreme right of the Union line, and rendered good service in preventing a flank movement of the enemy. After the battle it was one of the detail to bury the dead, some of whom had lain upon the field of battle four days. The exposure to which the regiment had been thus suddenly subjected told with serious effect upon many of the men, so that between 200 and 300 were disqualified for duty within a month after it was ordered to the front. Quite a number died or were permanently disabled. The regiment was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, of the Second Corps.

On the 13th of December the One Hundred and Forty-fifth took part in the terrible charge at Fredericksburg, under the lead of Gen. Hancock. The division to which it belonged was composed of 5,000 men, 2,000 of whom fell in that single charge. Of the 556 members of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth who crossed the river, 226 were either killed or wounded. At Chancellorsville a detail of 150 men from the One Hundred and Forty-fifth was ordered to the relief of the skirmish line, and, after some hard fighting, failing to receive the command to retire, were mostly captured. The regiment entered the battle of Gettysburg 200 strong, and lost upward of eighty in killed and wounded. Returning to Virginia, it participated in nearly all of the marches and engagements of the Union army until the winter of 1863 brought the campaign to a close.

The renewal of operations in May, 1864, found the regiment recruited almost to its original strength. From this date the history of the Army of Virginia, with its never-ceasing marches and well-nigh daily battles, is equally the history of the regiment. In the charge in front of Petersburg, the regiment had about fifty killed and wounded, and some ninety fell into the hands of the enemy. The remainder of the men were almost constantly under fire during the balance of the season. In the spring campaign of 1865 the regiment did good service with Sheridan.

It was mustered out of the service on the 31st of May, and returned to Erie on the 5th of June, where it was welcomed with the honors it so richly deserved.

John B. C. Lucas having resigned from Congress November 7, Samuel Smith, of Mill Creek, Erie county, was chosen in his place.

The opposing parties were distinguished as Democratic-Republican and Federal Republican. This continued to be the case until 1820, when the anti-Masonic excitement came up. Erie county was strongly Democratic-Republican, and all of the candidates elected up to 1830 were nominated by that party, except an occasional Independent. The Democratic-Republicans held a convention in the county every year from 1805 to 1830. The name Democratic—without the annex—is first found in the Erie Observer in 1831.

THE "BUCKSHOT" WAR.

1838—The Anti-Masons again nominated Joseph Ritner for Governor; the Democrats placed in nomination David R. Porter, of Huntingdon county. The vote of the county was: For Ritner, 2,747; for Porter, 1,565—Ritner's majority, 1,182. In the State the result was as follows: David R. Porter, Democrat, 127,821; Joseph Ritner, Anti-Mason, 122,325.

The organization of the Legislature, in December following this election, caused the troubles which have been named in derision the "Buckshot war." Their history may be briefly given as follows: When the Return Judges of Philadelphia county met in convention, a motion was made to throw out the votes of the Northern Liberties, on account of alleged frauds. By accepting the votes, the Anti-Masonic candidates for Congress, State Senator and Assembly were elected; their rejection gave the seats to the Democratic candidates. The Democrats had a majority of the Judges, and the returns were not accepted. The Anti-Masonic Judges bolted and made out other returns, including the vote of the Northern Liberties, which were sent to Thomas H. Burrowes, Anti-Masonic Secretary of State, at Harrisburg. When the Legislature assembled, each set of candidates appeared for admission, and in the House the two parties were so nearly balanced that the acceptance or rejection of the Philadelphians involved the control of the body. Meantime, much excitement prevailed throughout the State, and serious disturbances were threatened. On the day of meeting, Harrisburg was full of angry men, but if we can rely on the Anti-Masonic papers of the time, the Democrats were largely in the ascendent. The vote for Speaker was taken, when the Democrats supported William Hopkins, and the Anti-Masons Thomas S. Cunningham, each party having separate tellers. Both claimed to be elected, and for some time occupied seats on the platform, side by side. Under such circumstances no business could be transacted, and affairs were brought to a dead-lock. The Senate, which contained a majority of Anti-Masons, recognized the Cunningham House. Excitement increased throughout the State, and the Democrats, resolved not to be defeated in their programme, threatened to maintain Mr. Hopkins' right to the Speakership by force. The Governor called out the militia of the adjoining counties, but when they reached Harrisburg it was found that the Democrats were in the majority among the troops, so that the Anti-Masons could not depend upon their support. He then wrote to President Van Buren for aid, who plumply refused.* After an agitation of several weeks, four Anti-Masonic Senators receded from their original position, voted to recognize the Hopkins House, and terminated the trouble. The Anti-Masons throughout the State were fierce in their denunciations of the recreant Senators, but soon subsided into acquiescence, and thus ended one of the most memorable, as it was also one of the most disgraceful, incidents in Pennsylvania history. Amid all the excitement no blood was spilled. From this date, the Anti-Masonic party of Pennsylvania rapidly declined, and in a few years sunk out of existence.

The Anti-Masons again nominated David Dick for Congress. John Galbraith, who had removed to Erie county, was the Democratic candidate. In the county, Dick received 2,614 votes, and Galbraith, 1,610. Dick's vote in the district was 5,918; Galbraith's 6,198. The district comprised Erie, Crawford, Venango and Warren counties, the three latter giving Democratic majorities.

The county tickets, with the vote for each candidate, were as follows:

Anti-Masonic—Assembly, Samuel Hutchins, Waterford, 2,581; William M. Watts, Erie, 2,368; Commissioner, William E. McNair, Mill Creek, 2,591; Auditor, Alexander W. Brewster, Erie, 2,601.

Democratic—Assembly, Ebenezer D. Gunnison, Erie, 1,646; Myron Hutchinson, Girard, 1,580; Commissioner, J. P. Grant, Wayne, 1,522; Auditor, Samuel T. Axtell, Union, 1,524.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS ADOPTED—PROTHONOTARY AND REGISTER AND RECORDER FIRST ELECTED.

A vote was taken on the adoption of the proposed amendments to the Constitution, with the following result in the State: For the amendments, 113,981; against, 112,759. Erie county gave a majority of 1,721 against the amendments.

Previous to this, negroes had voted in the State. The revised Constitution excluded them from suffrage. In the convention the delegates from Erie county were divided, Mr. Sill voting for negro suffrage, and Mr. Pollock against. The Anti-Masons had a slight majority in the body.

The revised Constitution provided for the election of Prothonotary and Register and Recorder, instead of their appointment by the Governor as before. The same instrument also changed the manner of selecting Justices of the Peace from appointment by the Governor to election by the people. The choice of the latter officers was not made until the spring election in 1840, the old incumbents retaining their position until the first Monday of May in that year.

RISE OF KNOW-NOTHINGISM — THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW ADOPTED—THE RAILROAD WAR.

1854—The Know-Nothing party (the foundation principle of which was opposition to foreigners in office, and particularly to members of the Catholic church), had risen into sudden importance, and swallowed up a large portion of the Whig organization, together with some Democrats. The Whigs and Know-Nothings nominated James Pollock, of Northumberland, for Governor. The Democrats re-nominated William Bigler for Governor, and Henry S. Mott, of Pike, for Canal Commissioner. The Whig candidate for the latter office was George Darsie, of Allegheny, the Know-Nothings making no nomination. The Democratic candidate for Supreme Judge was Jeremiah S. Black; the Whig, Daniel M. Smyser, of Montgomery; the Know-Nothing, Thomas H. Baird, of Washington. Erie county gave Pollock 3,637 votes; Bigler, 2,526; Darsie, 1,885; Mott, 3,364; Black, 2,389; Smyser, 1,494; Baird, 1,694.

The vote of the State was as follows: Pollock, 204,008; Bigler, 167,001; Darsie, 83,331; Mott, 274,074; Black, 167,010; Smyser, 83,571; Baird, 120,516.

Mr. Darsie, the Whig candidate for Canal Commissioner, was of foreign birth, and the Know-Nothings threw their votes for Mr. Mott. The original Native Americans had separate candidates in the field for Governor and Canal Commissioner, but they received only a trifling support.

A ballot was taken at this election to decide whether or not the Maine Liquor Law should be adopted in this State, and resulted in 158,342 votes for to 163,510 against. Erie county cast 2,767 for the law, and 1,501 against it.

Gen. John Dick was re-elected to Congress without opposition.

The memorable "railroad war" in our county was in full vigor this year and weakened party obligations to a considerable extent. The following were the tickets with their votes:

Whig—Assembly, G. J. Ball, Erie, 2,889; Wareham Warner, Venango, 2,766; Prothonotary, Alfred King, Erie, 3,391; Register, David McAllister, Erie, 2,525; Treasurer, M. Phelps, Edinboro, 3,043; Commissioner, Flavel Boyd, Waterford, 1,619; Coroner, David Burton, Erie, 1,583; Auditor, George W. Brecht, Mill Creek, 1,643; Director of Poor, Thomas McKee, Mill Creek, 1,432.

LOCAL ISSUES SUPERSEDE PARTY.

1855—A portion of the Whigs and Know-Nothings nominated Thomas Nicholson, of Beaver, for Canal Commissioner. The Democratic candidate for the same office was Arnold Plumer, of Franklin. The Republicans, by which name the old Abolitionists and Free-Soilers had christened themselves, nominated Passmore Williamson, of Philadelphia, whose resistance to the Fugitive Slave Law had got him into prison, and caused him to be looked upon as a martyr. The original Native Americans supported Kimber Cleaver. The dissatisfied Know-Nothings nominated Peter Martin, of Lancaster, and the old-fashioned Whigs supported Joseph Henderson, of Washington. Erie county gave Plumer, 1,608 votes; Nicholson, 2,113; Williamson, 471; and Cleaver, fifteen. The vote of the State was as follows: Plumer, 161,280; Nicholson, 150,359; Williamson, 7,063; Cleaver, 4,041; Martin, 571; Henderson, 2,270.

The "railroad war" continued to excite the people of this county and district, and party lines were not drawn in the choice of local officers. The candidates were voted for with reference to that issue entirely. For State Senate, Darwin A. Finney and Charles B. Power, both of Crawford county, were the candidates. The vote was as follows:

	FINNEY.	POWER.

The Democratic National candidates were James Buchanan, Pennsylvania, for President, and John C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, for Vice-President. Vincent Phelps, Crawford, was the Elector for this district. The Republican party ran John C. Fremont, of California, for President, and William L. Dayton, of New Jersey, for Vice President. The American party supported Millard Fillmore of New York, for President, and A. J. Donelson, of Tennessee, for Vice President. A fusion of the two latter elements was formed, and an electoral ticket nominated, with the understanding that the votes for each candidate for President and Vice-President should be counted separately. James Skinner, of Erie, was the district nominee for Elector. A portion of Mr. Fillmore's friends would not unite, and ran a separate electoral ticket, with James Webster, of Fairview, as the candidate for this district.

THE "EIGHT BY SEVEN COMMISSION."

A long and exciting dispute occurred over the electoral votes of Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina, which were claimed by both of the leading parties. In Oregon, the Governor gave a certificate to one Democratic Elector, on the ground that one of the Republican Electors was ineligible. After a prolonged agitation, the matter was submitted to an Electoral Commission, consisting of five of the United States Supreme Judges and ten members of Congress, who decided by eight to seven in each case that the entire Electoral vote of the State named should go to the Republicans. This decision gave Hayes and Wheeler the offices of President and Vice President by a majority of one Elector. Politically, the Commission stood eight Republicans to seven Democrats.

The Republican nominee for Congress was Lewis F. Watson, of Warren; the Democratic, William L. Scott, of Erie; the Greenback, C. C. Camp, of Venango; and the Prohibition, Samuel Axtell, of Venango. Below is the vote of the district:

ANOTHER REPUBLICAN SWEEP.

1894—This was one of the most extraordinary "tidal-wave" years ever known, the Republicans sweeping every Northern State in which elections were held, and even carrying several Southern States. The Democratic majority of 147 in the U. S. House of Representatives was changed to 140 in favor of the Republicans. Only two Democrats were elected to Congress from Pennsylvania. Erie city, for the first time in years at an important election, gave a majority for the Republican State ticket. The vote was as follows on Governor, varying but a trifle on the other State candidates. In the State at large—Republican, 574,801; Democratic, 333,404; Prohibition, 23,433; Populist, 19,464; Socialist-Labor, 1,733. Hastings' plurality, 241,397, being the largest ever received by any nominee for Governor in Pennsylvania. Erie city—Republican 4,027, Democratic 3,063, Prohibition thirty-six, Populist 310, Socialist-Labor thirteen. Erie city and county combined—Republican 9,707, Democratic 5,197, Prohibition 507, Populist 1,049, Socialist-Labor fifteen. John S. Rilling, Democratic nominee for Lieut.-Governor, a resident of Erie city, ran 813 votes ahead of the party candidate for Governor in the city and 388 in the entire county. The majority against him in the State was also the smallest of any on the Democratic ticket.

State Candidates.—Governor—Daniel H. Hastings, Centre county, Republican; Wm. M. Singerly, Philadelphia, Democrat; Chas. L. Hawley, Prohibition; Jerome T. Ailman, Juniata county, Populist; Thos. H. Grundy, Socialist-Labor.

Lieut.-Governor—Walter Lyon, Allegheny county, Republican; John S. Rilling, Erie, Democrat; Homer L. Castle, Prohibition; Jerome B. Aitken, Washington county, Populist; Frederick Long, Socialist-Labor.

Auditor General—Amos H. Mylin, Lancaster county, Republican; David F. Magee, Lancaster county, Democrat; Charles Palmer, Prohibition; W. M. Deisher, Berks county, Populist and Socialist-Labor; Joseph B. Allen, Socialist-Labor.

Secretary of Internal Affairs—James W. Latta, Philadelphia, Republican; W. W. Greenland, Clarion county, Democrat; Le-Roy Gleason, Prohibition; A. J. Louch, Erie county, Populist; Wm. B. King, Socialist-Labor.

Congressman-at-Large—Galusha A. Grow, Susquehanna county, Republican; George F. Huff, Westmoreland county, Republican; Henry Meyer, Allegheny county, Democrat; Thomas Collins, Center county, Democrat; E. K. Kane, Populist; L. G. Jordan, Populist; V. A. Lotier, Montour county, Populist; B. F. Greenman, Bradford county, Populist; Ernest Kreft, Socialist-Labor; Gottfried Metzler, Socialist-Labor.

Galusha A. Grow received 242,308 pluralities for Congressman-at-large over Meyer, the highest Democratic candidate, being the largest ever received by any person in the State.

SIBLEY AND GRISWOLD.

Congressional.—The candidates were Matthew Griswold, of Erie county, Republican; Joseph C. Sibley, of Venango county, endorsed by the Democratic, Populist and Independent Republican organizations, and W. T. Everson, of Erie county, Prohibition. The vote of the district was as follows:

Crawford county.....	6,500	6,390	410
Total.....	15,729	13,265	740

For Assembly the city gave E. P. Gould, Republican, 3,813 votes; Nicholas Leuschen, Democrat, 3,002; Charles Heydrick, Populist, 510, and S. S. Caughey, Prohibition, 52.

THE REPUBLICANS STILL VICTORIOUS.

1895—This was emphatically a Republican year, that party carrying, in addition to the usually Republican States of Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, the doubtful states of New York and Ohio, and the Democratic strongholds of New Jersey, Maryland and Kentucky, in most cases by unexpectedly large majorities. The territory of Utah voted to become a State, and elected the Republican ticket. Below is a list of the candidates in Pennsylvania and Erie county:

State.

State Treasurer—Benj. J. Haywood, Mercer, Republican; Benj. F. Meyers, Dauphin, Democrat; Geo. W. Dawson, Beaver, Populist; Wm. H. Berry, Prohibition. Mr. Haywood's plurality over Mr. Meyers, the next highest candidate, was 174,264, being the largest ever given in a quiet campaign.

Judges of the Superior Court (a position created by the Legislature of 1895; seven to be elected; each voter to cast a ballot for six only)—Republican—James A. Beaver, Center; Edward N. Willard, Lackawanna; John J. Wickham, Beaver; Chas. E. Rice, Luzerne; Howard J. Reeder, Northampton; Geo. B. Orlady, Huntingdon. Democratic—Herman Yerkes, Bucks; James S. This county cast 5,645 votes for the Republican candidate for State Treasurer, 2,357 for the Democratic, 449 for the Populist and 418 for the Prohibition. Judge Noyes ran 700 votes ahead of the next highest candidate on the judicial ticket.

The city of Erie, which for years, was reliably Democratic on general issues, gave Haywood a majority of 1,080.

CHAPTER I.

CONNEAUT TOWNSHIP—ALBION BOROUGH.

CONNEAUT TOWNSHIP is one of the original subdivisions of Erie county. It is the extreme southwestern township of the county, and contains 27,582 acres. The population was 631 in 1810; 1,324, in 1830; 1,746, in 1840; 1,942, in 1850; 2,118, in 1860; 1,538, in 1870; 1,546, in 1880; and 1,380, in 1890. The decrease between 1860 and 1870 was due to the incorporation of Albion as a borough in 1861. The township is bounded on the north by Springfield and Girard, on the east by Elk Creek, on the west by Ashtabula county, Ohio, and on the south by Beaver and Spring townships, Crawford county. Its greatest length is about eight and three-fourths miles from east to west, and its greatest width six and one-fourth from north to south.

Conneaut contains five postoffices, viz.: Pennside, Keepville, Tracy, Cherry Hill and Wannetta (Albion station, on the E. & P. R. R.). The township is divided, for election purposes, into the East and West districts.

The township received its name from Conneaut creek, its principal stream. The word Conneaut is of Indian origin, signifying "snow place," from the fact that the snow used to lie longer upon the ice of Conneaut lake, Crawford county, than anywhere else the country round.

The original line of Conneaut extended westward parallel with the southern line of Girard township to Ohio, taking in Conneaut creek and more than a mile of country north of that stream. This threw the whole burden of building and maintaining bridges upon Conneaut, and about 1825 she ceded the territory north of the creek to Springfield, in consideration of the latter township paying one half of that item of expense. Springfield made a considerable gain of land, and Conneaut relieved herself from burdensome taxation.

EARLIEST SETTLERS.

The first settler within the bounds of the township was Jonathan Spaulding, who reached there from New York in the year 1795. Two years after the Population Company sent Col. Dunning McNair on as agent, who established his headquarters at what became known as Lexington, and with a corps of assistants surveyed the country, laid out roads, and made preparations for disposing of the property. In 1798, Abiather Crane and his brother Elihu, from Connecticut, located near Col. McNair, but neither remained long, the former moving to Mill Creek in 1800, and the latter to Elk Creek in the spring of 1800. Abiather first went into Conneaut as a surveyor in 1797, but did not locate there until the ensuing year. The arrival of other pioneers was as follows: In 1800, Matthew Harrington, from Vermont; George Grifley and Andrew Cole, from Onondaga county, N. Y., and Stephen Randall and his son Sheffield, from Rensselaer county, N. Y.; in 1801, Robert McKee, from Cumberland county, Pa.; in 1802, Henry Ball, from Fredericksburg, Va., Patrick Kennedy, his son Royal, and William Payne, from Connecticut; in 1803, Marsena Keep and son Marsena, from Montgomery county, N. Y.; in 1804, Joel Bradish and brothers, from New York; in 1806, Lyman Jackson, from Otsego county, N. Y.; in 1810, Michael Jackson, son of Lyman, who remained but a few months, returned to New York and came back five years later.

The following persons settled in the township at a later date: In 1815, George Stuntz, from Barclay county, Va., and his son, E. W. Stuntz; in 1816, Medad Pomeroy, from Massachusetts, with his sons, Nathaniel, Uriah, John, Lyman, James, George and Horace, and three daughters, together with James W. and G. Spicer, from New York; in 1817, Benjamin Sawdey and Isaac Pomeroy from Massachusetts, in 1818, David Sawdey, from Massachusetts, Abijah Barnes, from Cayuga county, N. Y., and Samuel Bradish; in 1819, Noah Kidder and son Francis, Edward DeWolf and Daniel Rossiter, from New York, and Samuel Sawday (father of David and Benjamin), with his sons John, Job and Daniel, from New Bedford, Mass.; in 1820, Rodolphus Loomis, from Chautauqua county, N. Y.; about 1824 or 1825, Harrison Parks; in 1829, Jonas Lewis; in 1831, Thomas Bowman, wife and family (including Ralph), from Oneida county, N. Y.; in 1832, William Cornell and John Curtis; in 1833, Chester Morley and Andrew and Silas Morrison; in 1834, Christopher Cross, Edward Dorrance and Hiram Griffiths; in 1837, Andrew Swap, Daniel Waters and Joseph Tubbs; in 1838, Isaiah and Johnson Pelton; in 1839, Marcus A. Bumpus.

Among those who went in about the commencement of the century, were Bartholomew Forbes, Howard, John, Nathan, David and Charles Salisbury, Thomas Sprague, James Paul, James Whittington, Thomas Alexander, John Stuntz, Giles Badger, Ichabod Baker and Jacob Walker. A large portion of the settlers whose former homes are not given were from New York, principally from the central counties. Henry Ball was a captain in the war of 1812, and several of the others served against the British as privates. Jonathan Spaulding's sons, David, John and George, were born in the township, the first in 1802, the second in 1806, and the last in 1816. William Harrington, the oldest son of Matthew, was born in 1805. William Paul went into Elk Creek with Mr. Colton in 1797; returned to Connecticut, and came back about 1816. Noah Kidder and son went to Springfield in 1817, but moved to Conneaut two years after. Medad Pomeroy settled on Conneaut creek, about a mile north of Albion, where he owned several hundred acres, extending into Elk Creek township.

The first male child was Henry Wood, born about 1798. The first female children were Ruth, daughter of Elihu Crane and wife, and Eliza, daughter of Abiather Crane and wife, who were born in the same house near Lexington, on the same day, April 20, 1799. Ruth Crane married Isaac Pomeroy, and became the mother of two sons—Alden and Jerome—and seven daughters. The first recorded death was that of Mrs. Thomas Alexander, who expired in 1801. The oldest ladies who ever lived in the township were Mrs. Thomas Bowman, who died in the fall of 1862, aged nearly 92 years, and Mrs. Elias Palmer, who died in 1876, at the age of 94. Elias Palmer was the oldest man. His death occurred in 1878, at which time he was 98 years of age.

STREAMS AND BRIDGES.

The chief stream of the township is Conneaut creek, which rises below Conneautville, in Crawford county, flows in a general northerly course to the Springfield line, then turns abruptly westward, and continues into Ohio. After changing its course, it forms the boundary line between Conneaut and Springfield, the former lying on the south and the latter on the north. In Ohio it continues westward nine miles to Kingsville, then makes another sudden bend to the east, and comes back eight miles to Conneaut, where it turns again to the north, and, after a further course of about a mile, empties into the lake a mile and a half from the boundary of Pennsylvania, forming Conneaut harbor. It is the most crooked of the lake shore streams, the length from head to mouth by its windings being from seventy to seventy-five miles, while the distance by an air line is not more than twenty-five miles. The valley of the creek forms the route of the Erie and Pittsburg R. R. through Conneaut township, and was utilized for the same purpose in laying out the old canal from Albion southward, the bed of which is now occupied in the main by the Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie R. R. The length of Conneaut creek through the township is fully twelve miles.

The West branch of Conneaut creek rises in Crawford county, near the Ohio line, runs in a general northeasterly direction through the south part of the township, and unites near Keepville, after a course of between nine and ten miles. The East branch heads in Crawford county, below the Elk Creek line, runs past Wellsburg and Cranesville, and enters Conneaut township a mile or so northeast of Albion. It has a length of not far from ten miles. At Wellsburg it is joined by Frazier's run, and at Albion by Jackson's run. The latter takes its rise on the Conneaut and Elk Creek line, near Crawford county, flows north, then northeast, and is from four to six miles long. After receiving Jackson's run, the East branch continues about half a mile further before merging with the main stream. Marsh run heads in the west, flows eastward and empties into the Conneaut about a mile from

David B. McCreary.

Albion depot, having a length of four or five miles.

The dividing ridge between the waters of the lake and the Allegheny turns to the south in Fairview township, and follows nearly the line of Conneaut creek into Crawford county.

The frequent streams and their unusual crookedness are a source of heavy expense to the tax-payers, the number of bridges and the cost of keeping them up being greater than in any other township of the county. Not to name those on the branches, there are, on Conneaut creek alone, the Law, Griffith, Porter, Perry and Salsbury bridges, along the Springfield line; and the Pomeroy, Kennedy, Harrington, Silverthorn, Keepville and Spaulding within the township proper. These include the public bridges only. All of the township bridges, with the exception of the Kennedy, which is of iron, are built of timber.

LANDS AND LAND LITIGATION.

The valley of Conneaut creek from Crawford county to Springfield varies in width from a third of a mile to a mile, and consists of a sandy loam, which is very fertile, producing everything that can be raised along the lake shore. West of Lexington, along the Conneaut and Springfield line, there are occasional small spots of bottom land, but generally speaking the hills run almost to the water's edge. A large tract of country, in the southwest, near the Ohio and Crawford county line, was in forest until a comparatively recent date, when large companies went in and cut off most of the timber. Fruits of nearly all kinds are grown readily. The price of land varies greatly, being as low as fifteen dollars an acre in some localities and as high as fifty dollars in others.

John B. Wallace, of Philadelphia, located in Meadville at an early day, as attorney for the Holland Land Company. In that capacity he took up tracts in various places, among them being one of 10,000 acres in the western part of Conneaut township. This property was sold on an execution against Mr. Wallace in 1825, and purchased by or in behalf of Stephen Girard, of Philadelphia. It was Mr. Girard's design to make extensive improvements by erecting mills, opening roads, etc., but while his agent was arranging to carry out his plans, news came in January, 1882, of the millionaire's death. By Mr.

Girard's will, the Conneaut lands, with a large quantity of others, were left in trust to the city of Philadelphia as a perpetual fund for the maintenance of a college for orphans. After the death of Mr. Wallace, in 1853, his heirs claimed that the Conneaut lands had been wrongfully sold, because the title was in Mrs. Wallace instead of her husband. Suit was brought in the name of the Wallace heirs to recover the property and a verdict was rendered against the Girard estate.

The Moravian grant embraced between 400 and 500 acres in the northwestern corner of Conneaut, extending over from Springfield, where the most of the "Hospitality tract" lay.

PREHISTORIC REMAINS.

On the John Pomeroy place, upon the second flat of Conneaut creek, are the traces of an ancient circle, such as exist in Girard, Springfield, Harbor Creek, Fairview, Wayne and other townships of the county. It incloses about three-fourths of an acre. The embankment, when the country was cleared up, was about three feet high by six feet thick at the base, with large trees growing upon it. One of these, a mammoth oak, when cut down, indicated by its rings an age of five hundred years. Beneath the tree the skeleton of a human being was taken up which showed that giants lived in those remote ages. The bones measured eleven feet from head to foot, the jawbone easily covered that of a man who weighed over 200 pounds, and the lower bone of the leg, being compared with that of a person who was six feet four inches in height, was found to be nearly a foot longer. Another circle of a similar character existed on the Taylor farm—later owned by J. L. Strong. On the Pomeroy place is also a peculiar mound, about 100 feet long, fifty wide and twenty-five high. It stands on the south side of a small stream, upon flat land, and is wholly detached from the adjacent bluff.

THE OLD CANAL, THE RAILROADS AND MAIN COMMON ROADS.

The Pennsylvania-Erie canal, one of the things of the past, entered Conneaut from Elk Creek at a point between Cranesville and Albion, and continued south by nearly the same route as the P., S. & L. E. R. R. The once noted Eleven-Mile Level, the longest on its line, reached from near Lockport, through Albion, to Spring Corners, Crawford county. North of Albion, the canal crossed the East branch by a culvert forty-one feet high, with a span of between thirty and forty feet, which still stands and is used as a roadway.

The Erie and Pittsburg R. R. runs through the whole width of the township, from Girard township on the north to Crawford county on the south. The ridge between Crooked and Conneaut creeks is overcome by a deep excavation that is usually known as Sawdy's Cut. After that the road follows the valley of the latter stream through the township to its head in Crawford county. The stations are Lexington, Albion Depot and Pennside.

The Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie R. R. crosses the township from north to south, branching at Cranesville, from which one line extends to Erie and the other to Conneaut Harbor. Its stations are Pennside, Keepville and Albion. There is also a station at Cranesville, just on the line between Conneaut and Elk Creek townships.

The main common roads are the Lexington, from the latter place to Girard, opened about 1797; the State road across the north part of the township, from Elk Creek to Ohio; the Meadville road, from Lexington into Crawford county; the Albion and Cranesville road; the Albion and Wellsburg road; the road from Albion due west to Conneaut Center; the Albion and Keepville; "Porky street," from Cherry Hill south; and the Creek road from Pomeroy's bridge to Crawford county.

MILLS, SCHOOLS AND GRAVEYARDS.

The mills and factories are: The Walnut Shade cheese factory, on the State road, three miles from Cherry Hill; Kennedy's brick yard and tile factory, near the Kennedy bridge, and a large sawmill at Pennside.

No record is to be had of the earliest schools in the township. A school was held in a cabin on the farm of Nathaniel Pomeroy, about one and a half miles northwest from Albion about 1822. About 1823, a log school house was built in that neighborhood. A school was held at an early date near the site of Thornton's gristmill, in Albion borough. The building burned down about 1824.

There is an old graveyard at Saulsbury's bridge, where a number of the early settlers are buried, and others at Keepville and near Kennedy's bridge. Most of the burials take place at East Springfield.

PRINCIPAL SETTLEMENTS.

Albion Depot (Wannetta P. O.) is on the Erie and Pittsburg R. R., twenty-six miles from Erie city, and about a mile west from Albion borough. It embraces, besides the depot building, a grocery and twelve or fifteen houses, most of which are occupied by employes of the railroad.

Keepville consists of a postoffice, store, church building, school house, and several residences, at the intersection of two roads, near Conneaut creek, two and a half miles southwest of Albion borough. It was named after Marsena Keep, Sr., who settled there in 1808. Keepville Wesleyan congregation was organized in 1854, Rev. John L. Moore being the first pastor. The church building was erected the same year, at a cost of $1,500.

A Methodist Episcopal Church, school house, two stores, blacksmith shop and twenty to thirty houses constitute the village of Cherry Hill, on the State road, about half a mile south of the Springfield line, and five miles west of Albion. Porter's grist and sawmill, on Conneaut creek, in Springfield township, are a little north of the village. The church was organized with about fifteen members, by Rev. J. W. Wilson, in 1858, and the building was erected the same year at a cost of $1,250.

When Col. McNair established his agency for the Population Company, in 1797, he laid out a town plat of 1,600 acres, at the big bend of Conneaut creek, near the present Springfield line, to which he gave the title of Lexington. Roads were laid out, and, being the center of the company's operations in the west, Lexington in time became a village of no little pretension. At one period it had a store, schoolhouse, hotel, distillery, and several residences. A postoffice was established in 1823, with David Sawdey as postmaster. The town went down and the postoffice was abandoned. All that exists to preserve the memory of the place is a small railroad station on the Erie and Pittsburg R. R.

Pennside, on both of the railroads, just north of the Crawford county line, consists of a station house, sawmill, two stores, a Methodist Episcopal church building, a schoolhouse, blacksmith shop and some twenty houses. The town was started by John Avery

Tracy, about ten years ago. The church was built about 1890 and the congregation is attached to Albion circuit.

Tracy, once a bustling little place, named after the gentleman above referred to, has lost its former glory. It consists now of nothing but a schoolhouse, grocery and a few houses.

Following is a list of the citizens of Conneaut township who have been elected to Legislative and county offices: Assembly—David Sawdey, 1888; Humphrey A. Hills, 1853-54. Commissioner—Abiather Crane, 1803 to 1805; John Salsbury, 1825 to 1828; David Sawdey, 1841 to 1844; Humphrey A. Hills, 1847 to 1850; Garner Palmer, 1862 to 1865, and 1869 to 1872; Geo. C. Mills, elected in 1877 and 1880. Jury Commissioner, H. B. Brewster, elected in 1885. Mercantile Appraiser, Liberty Salsbury, 1872; S. D. Sawdey, appointed for 1892. County Auditor, W. J. Brockway, 1875 to 1878; S. D. Sawdey, elected in 1893. Hon. George H. Cutler lived in Conneaut township for a time, and taught school in Albion. He moved from there to Girard, and served the county as State Senator from 1873 to 1876, being President of the Senate one term. D. A. Sawdey, Esq., the well-known Erie attorney, is a native of the township.

BOROUGH OF ALBION.

[SEE CONNEAUT.]

Albion borough occupies an elevated site at the junction of Jackson's run with the East branch, near the Elk Creek line, a mile east of Albion depot, and twenty-five miles southwest of Erie by the Shenango R. R. The first settlers at Albion were Thomas Alexander, Patrick Kennedy, William Paine, Ichabod Baker and Lyman Jackson. Michael Jackson, son of Lyman, who built the first sawmill, did not become a permanent resident until 1815. William Sherman settled at Albion in 1827, coming from Herkimer county, N. Y. Thomas Thornton came from England at an early age, and settled in Albion about 1857. Of other old residents, E. W. Stuntz settled in 1815, coming from Kingsville, Ohio; Dr. J. S. Skeels, in 1848, from Spring, Crawford county; Dr. P. D. Flower, in 1855, from Harbor Creek; Dr. L. D. Davenport, in 1850, from Ellington Center,

N. Y., and Jeduthan Wells, in 1857, from Wellsburg.

Amos King built the first gristmill and Lyman Jackson taught the first school. The town was long known as Jackson's Cross Roads, and the postoffice name has been successively Jacksonville, Juliet and Albion. It is one mile from Albion to Cranesville and Wellsburg (the three places forming the points of an equilateral triangle), six to East Springfield, eight to Girard, six to Spring and nine to Conneautville. The canal passed through the place, and to the business that grew out of it Albion owed most of its growth. The Denio fork and handle factory was located at Albion until its destruction by fire in 1873, which resulted in the removal of the business to Miles Grove.

Albion was incorporated as a borough in 1861, taking in a section of Conneaut township exactly a mile square. It then contained 443 inhabitants. The population in 1870 was 452, 433 in 1880, and 366 in 1890. The first borough officers were elected in March, 1861, Perry Kidder being chosen Burgess. Albion is an important station of the P., S. & L. E. R. R., which passes through the borough.

CHURCHES.

The religious denominations are Methodist Episcopal, Disciple, Catholic and Congregational. The First Methodist Episcopal church in this vicinity stood about three-fourths of a mile west of Albion, and was built more than sixty years ago. It was occupied until about 1855, when the society was disbanded and the building removed. At Albion a society had been formed previous to the dismemberment of the above class. It held services in the academy until about 1855, when the present church was built. It cost $2,000 and was dedicated by the famous Calvin Kingsley. The congregation decided, in November, 1894, to enlarge and improve the building.

Catholic services have been held at Albion for a long period. Forty years ago the society was an old one. The membership includes about twenty-five families. The charge has generally been supplied by priests from Cross- ingville and Conneautville. The congregation has no building.

A Disciple congregation was organized in the spring of 1880 by Rev. Clarence J. Cushman. The class is small, but has a frame church edifice partially finished.

A Congregational society was formed January 23, 1893, and has taken steps toward the erection of a building.

SCHOOLS, SECRET SOCIETIES, ETC.

The borough contains a good two-story school building, a Masonic Hall and an Odd Fellows' Hall.

The school building was erected in 1865 at a cost, inclusive of furniture and apparatus, of $7,000. Previous to that the borough schools were held in the academy, built in 1838.

Albion Lodge, No. 376, I. O. O. F., was instituted September 14, 1849, with eight charter members. A fire in 1851 destroyed its hall, charter and books. A second hall was erected, which also burned down on the night of February 10, 1884, together with one store. The hall was rebuilt about 1885.

Western Star Lodge, No. 304, F. & A. M., was chartered December 1, 1856. It owns the second floor of the building, built in 1874, in which the meetings are held.

Albion Lodge, No. 88, Ancient Order of United Workmen, was instituted March 10, 1875, with about twenty members.

Albion Union, No. 101, Equitable Aid, was chartered with thirty-one members May 27, 1880.

Mystic Circle, of the Protected Home Circle, was started in 1894.

Conneaut Grange commenced holding meetings in Albion in the spring of 1893.

Camp 67 of the State Police was organized in 1893.

MILLS, NEWSPAPERS, HOTEL, ETC.

The water-power, once quite good, has become unreliable since the clearing up of the country. The flouring-mill was built in 1828 by Amos King and was purchased by Joshua Thornton. It was destroyed by fire July 15, 1889, and rebuilt in the summer of 1890. The woolen-mill was erected by W. H. Gray in 1840, burned in 1876 and rebuilt in 1880 by Thomas Thornton. Michael Jackson built a rake factory in 1846. It was overhauled and much extended by George Van Riper & Co., and burned down in the fall of 1894. An oat factory was built by Henry Salisbury and Reuben McLallen in 1859. It burned down on the 1st of March, 1868, was rebuilt by Frank Wells the same year, and again fell a victim to the flames. The creamery, hoop and lumber-mill and a sawmill were started in 1895.

The Eric County Enterprise was started June 15, 1877, but failed in 1880 for want of support. Its publishers were J. W. Britton and F. J. Dumars.

The Albion Blizzard, a weekly newspaper, was established by two of the young business men of Albion borough—E. C. Palmer and E. F. Davenport—May 25, 1882. It is still in operation, under the vigorous management of Mr. Davenport.

The Sherman House was built in 1828 by Benjamin Nois. It passed into the hands of William Sherman some time after, who continued as its proprietor about fifty years. The house has long been managed by his son, Mott Sherman.

Albion has furnished the following public officials: Assembly, Orlando Logan, 1875-6; Clerk to the Directors of the Poor, J. A. Robison, appointed January 1, 1888; Clerk to the County Commissioners, J. A. Robison, appointed January 1, 1890.

The borough has a cemetery for general burial purposes, but it is hardly what would be expected of the community. Steps were taken in September, 1895, to secure a cemetery that will be more in accord with the times.

CHAPTER II.

AMITY TOWNSHIP.

AMITY TOWNSHIP was created in 1825, being wholly taken from Union. It had a population of 385 in 1830, 560 in 1840, 739 in 1850, 1,016 in 1860, 924 in 1870, 1,033 in 1880 and 912 in 1890, of whom all were whites and few if any of foreign birth. The township lines are straight on all sides. Its length from east to west is about six and three-quarter miles, and breadth from north to south about four and one-fourth miles. The township is bounded on the north by Venango, on the east by Wayne, on the south by Union, and on the west by Le Boeuf and Waterford. Its post-offices are Hatch Hollow, Arbuckle (Milltown) and Teller. The township has no settlements of any size, the only places that can be called villages being Milltown and Hatch Hollow. There is no railroad within the township, and the nearest station is at Union City. The main portion of Amity was embraced within the Tenth Donation District.

STREAMS AND BRIDGES.

The chief stream of Amity township is French creek, of which all the others within its limits are tributaries. The East and West branches unite on the north line, just outside of the borough limits of Wattsburg, and the joint stream flows across the township in a south-westerly course into Waterford, leaving a triangular strip of territory on the upper side known to the inhabitants as "Canada." Its total length within the township is nearly seven miles. The most important tributaries on the north side are the Outlet of Lake Pleasant, Jones' creek and Henry brook; and on the south side the Hubbell Alder run, the Hatch Hollow Alder run, Deerlick run and Duncombe run. The Outlet of Lake Pleasant rises in the lake of that name, in the southwest corner of Venango, has a length of about three miles, and empties into French creek on the Stow farm. Jones' creek heads near the south line of Venango, and falls into the chief stream on the Ashtou place, having a course of about four miles. Henry brook also takes its rise in Venango, is about two miles long, and joins French creek on the Northrop farm. The Hubbell Alder run begins with two branches, close to the Wayne township line, and ends near Wattsburg, after a course of some five miles. On the Maynard farm it receives Lowe brook, a small stream which rises in the northeast. The Hatch Hollow Alder run heads in Union township, and becomes a part of French creek on the Baldwin place, close to the mouth of the outlet of Lake Pleasant. It has a length of about six miles. Duncombe run takes its rise on the McCullough place and falls into French creek on the farm formerly owned by Eli Duncombe. The head of Deer Lick run is on the north edge of Union, and its length is not far from four miles. It unites with the main stream on the old Phillips farm.

The only bridge over French creek proper within the township, is the iron one at Baldwin's flats, which has a span of 100 feet and cost $2,340. An iron bridge, with eighty feet span, crosses one stem of the East branch near Wattsburg, and another, the West branch, making three iron bridges in all.

MILLS AND ROADS.

The mills and factories are as follows: On the Hatch Hollow Alder run a sawmill; on the outlet of Lake Pleasant, at Milltown, a sawmill and shingle-mill, a gristmill, two saw mills and a wagon shop; on the McAllister road a sawmill and shingle-mill. There is a creamery at Milltown, started in 1888 or '89, and another at Hatch Hollow, built in 1893.

The first sawmill in Amity was put up above Milltown, on the stream which runs through the Hatch place, and empties into the Outlet of Lake Pleasant. The second mill was erected by Capt. James Donaldson on the Outlet at Milltown in 1822 or 1823. It was a grist and sawmill combined. The dam of this mill remained till some five or six years ago.

The main roads are the Waterford and Wattsburg, along the south side of French creek; the Lake Pleasant and Wattsburg, which is merged into the former on Baldwin's flats; the Union and Wattsburg; the Beaver Dam and Wattsburg; the Cory and Wattsburg; the Lake Pleasant and Union; and the Lake Pleasant, Hatch Hollow and Union. The Erie and Lake Pleasant road terminates at the Stow bridge on French creek, and is designated above that as the Lake Pleasant and Wattsburg.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

Of the early schools mention may be made of a log schoolhouse that was built about the year 1825, and stood probably one-half of the distance between the residence of J. Chaffee and the borough of Wattsburg. Some years later, a school house was built at Hatch Hollow, which was replaced by the present building. There was a log schoolhouse on Baldwin's flats, near Alder run, in 1835, which burned down. Both the original and its successor were built by private contributions. The second building was also destroyed by fire, and the present house is the third one on the site.

The M. E. Church at Hatch Hollow was built and dedicated in 1859, the congregation having been organized about twenty-five years before.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Amity is in general a hilly township, but there are some splendid flats along French creek, the Outlet of Lake Pleasant, the Hatch Hollow Alder run and Deer Lick run. The valley of French creek ranges from half a mile to two and a half miles in width, reaching its greatest extent at the Outlet of Lake Pleasant. The township as a whole is more suited for grazing than anything else. Great quantities of butter are made, and the raising of cattle is an important industry. It is doubtful whether as much wheat is reaped as the people consume, but oats, corn and potatoes are produced in excess of home needs. Apples thrive vigorously, but other fruits do not succeed as well. Valley lands are held as high as fifty dollars an acre, but some swampy spots are not valued at more than twenty dollars. On the hills, the price of land ranges from twenty dollars to thirty dollars. Perhaps one-third of the township is still covered with timber.

Milltown is a place of about thirty buildings, and nearly a hundred people, situated on the Outlet, about a mile and a half below Lake Pleasant, and fourteen and a half from Erie. It got its name from the number of mills located there. Its postoffice title is Arbuckle.

Hatch Hollow, on the Union and Wattsburg road, derived its name from the numerous Hatch family in the neighborhood. It is the postoffice of the south part of the township. Besides the church, creamery, etc., it numbers probably fifteen houses.

The cemetery at Hatch Hollow embraces about three acres. It has been in existence some twenty-five years. There is a burying ground of about an acre on the T. Ashton farm, and a number of family graveyards are kept up in various parts of the township.

Amity has had two members of Assembly, viz.: William Sanborn, elected in 1846 and 1847, and Warren Chaffee, elected in 1886; and one County Auditor, Francis F. Stow, elected in 1867.

THE PIONEERS.

The first lands taken up in Amity township were by William Miles, the founder of Wattsburg, who located 1,200 acres on the outlet of Lake Pleasant, in 1796; but made his home in Concord. About the same time John Fagan cleared up a piece of land near Hatch Hollow, and a man named McGahan went in the same year. Fagan remained until 1807, when he changed to Mill Creek. Hazen Sheppard and wife located in the township in 1812; John Carron is said to have been the first permanent settler, but the year he went in is unknown. In 1816, Benjamin Hinkston settled in Greere township from Vermont, but changed to Amity in 1818. In 1819, Charles Capron moved in from New Hampshire, and was joined the same year by Seth Shepardson and Timothy Reed. Capron's father and mother accompanied him. James McCullough and Capt. James Donaldson became residents of the township in 1820, the latter locating near Lake Pleasant. Capt. Donaldson was from Cumberland county. Other settlers went in as follows: In 1829, Jabez G. Hubbell, of Otsego county, N. Y., with his wife and sons, Hiram and David, Royal D. Mason and Jacob Rouse; in 1830, the Duncombes, Pliny Maynard and Elias Patterson; in 1831, William B. Maynard, son of Pliny; in 1833, George W. Baldwin; in 1847, John Allen, from Otsego county, N. Y.

CHAPTER III.

CONCORD TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF ELGIN.

PREVIOUS to 1821, all of Erie county from the eastern boundary of Union and Amity to the Warren county line was known as Brokenstraw township.

In that year, the name was changed from Brokenstraw to Concord. This continued until 1826, when the township was divided, the northern portion receiving the name of Wayne and the southern retaining the old title. The three names, Union, Amity and Concord were suggested by William Miles. As constituted in 1826, Concord contains 25,590 acres, but its size has been reduced to 19,781 by the taking off of a slice for Corry borough in 1863, of another in 1866, when that place was incorporated as a city, and of a third by the creation of Elgin borough, in 1876.

Concord is the extreme southeastern township of the county. It is bounded on the north by Wayne and Corry; on the east by Warren county; on the south by Crawford county; and on the west by Union township. The only settlement in the township that can lay any claim to be styled a village, since Elgin was made a borough, is the small collection of buildings at Lovell's Station, which is also the sole postoffice. The population of Concord was eighty-three in 1820, 225 in 1830, 652 in 1840, 882 in 1850, 1,255 in 1860, 1,112 in 1870, 1,171 in 1880 and 991 in 1890. Most of the mail for the township is handled through the postoffice at Corry, which city is also the principal trading point.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The county officers from Concord have been as follows: County Commissioner, Simeon Stewart, elected in 1849; William R. Wade in 1884 and 1887. County Auditors, David Nash, 1858; Wm. H. Belknap, 1860. Mercantile Appraiser for 1895, T. W. Pope. Clerk to the Directors of the Poor, F. E. Wade, appointed January 1, 1890. Mr. Stewart was the Commissioner under whose supervision the present courthouse at Erie was planned and erected. While the township has been treated so sparingly in the bestowal of official honors, it has evened the matter up, in a certain sense, by turning out more lawyers, doctors and editors than any other in the county. Hon. M. M. Estee, Republican candidate for Governor of California in 1894, was a native of the township.

EARLIEST SETTLEMENTS.

The pioneers of Concord township were William Miles and his brother-in-law, William Cook, who came from the Susquehanna valley with their families in June, 1795. They first located just north of the Crawford county line, but changed to a short distance south of the line, in Sparta township. Mr. Miles moved to Union in 1800, and Mr. Cook the year after. No other permanent settlements were made until 1800, when James and Robert McCray, natives of Ireland, took up homes for themselves in the township, and Joseph Hall, a Virginian, who had gone to Beaver Dam in 1797, moved over to the present site of Elgin borough. From that date no evidence exists of any additions to the colony until 1822 or 1823, about which time a brisk emigration set in from New York. Among the first of this class of settlers was Elder Jeduthan Gray, a Baptist minister, with a family of grown-up children. Deacon Graves went in at the same time or shortly after, and was followed between 1825 and 1835, by Ezekiel Lewis, Jesse and Heman Heath, Simeon Stewart, William Bugbee, Abner Lilly, John B. Chase, James Crowell, Russell Darrow, Hiram Cook, Paul Hammond, Stephen Hollis, Buckingham Beebe, Elijah Pond, Oliver D. Pier and others. G. J. Stranahan settled in Concord in 1836, having formerly resided in Herkimer county, New York. His sons, John D. and P. G. Stranahan, moved to LeBœuf, the former in 1849 and the latter in 1850, from which place P. G. changed to Union in 1859.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Concord is in general a hilly township, but contains little waste land. Bordering French creek, there is a good valley, ranging from eighty rods to half a mile in width, south of Corry, and spreading out to one and two miles between that city and Union. The soil of the valley is much better than that of the high ground, but the farmers are more troubled by the frosts. Corn and oats are produced in all parts of the township, and most of the farmers raise their own wheat. The great industry, however, is dairying, for which the country is better calculated than for grain. All kinds of fruits are raised, except peaches. The value of land varies from fifteen dollars to $100 per acre, according to its situation and quality. The loftiest elevation is on the Darius Walton place, where a view is afforded into two States and four counties, viz.: Erie, Crawford and Warren, Pa., and Chautauqua, N. Y.

PRINCIPAL STREAMS.

The chief stream is the South branch of French creek, which rises in the southeast, runs to the western edge of Corry, then turns abruptly to the west, flows in a westerly direction across the northern part of the township into Union, and joins the main stream a few rods below the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. bridge in LeBœuf. It has a course of fully twelve miles in the township, and a total length of about twenty-five miles. Its valley forms the route of no less than three railroads, the W. N. Y. and Pa., the P. and E. and the N. Y., P. and O. The tributaries of the South branch in Concord township are Scotch run, Slaughter run, Spencer run, Baskin run, Spring brook, Lilly run and Beaver Dam run. Scotch run rises on the Aiken place, and unites on the Covell place, having a length of over two miles. Spring brook is made by a number of large springs on the line of Concord and Wayne, and falls into the South branch on the Palmer place, after a course of perhaps a mile. The State Fish Hatchery, west of Corry, is at the source of this stream. The head of Lilly run is on the Hammond place, and it terminates near Elgin, having a course of four miles. Beaver Dam run takes its rise in the south part of Amity, flows through the southwestern corner of Wayne, and combines with the South branch near Elgin borough, through which it passes. Its length is not far from five miles. Slaughter, Spencer and Baskin runs all come in from Wayne, between Elgin and Corry. In addition to these streams, the township is the starting place of several tributaries of Spring creek and Oil creek, which rise on the highlands and flow to the east and south. The headwaters of Oil creek, French creek and Spring creek are all within a few rods of each other, near the summit of the W. N. Y. and Pa. R. R., in the southeast.

The township has no bridges of importance.

A flood in June, 1892, did much damage in Concord, especially along the valley of the South branch.

RAILROADS, COMMON ROADS, ETC.

The N. Y., P. and O. and the P. and E. R. R. run through the northern section of the township from Corry to the Union line, following the valley of the South branch. From Corry to Lovell's, the tracks run side by side, but at the latter place they diverge somewhat and continue at a short distance apart to Union. Below Union they separate entirely, the N. Y., P. and O. running to the west, and the P. and E. to the lake at Erie. The old Oil Creek R.

Wm. H. Reef

R., now the W. N. Y. and Pa., follows the upper channel of the South branch from Corry to the summit, crossing the township into Crawford county.

The railroad stations are Concord, on the N. Y., P. and O., and Lovell's, on the P. and E.

Of the common roads, the main ones are the Meadville and Columbus—the first opened in the township—the Union and Corry, which passes through Elgin, the Elgin and Sparta, the Corry and Spring Creek, and the Corry and Titusville.

Lovell's Station, on the N. Y. P. and O. and P. and E. roads, is three miles west of Corry, and thirty-four east of Erie. A water mill was started at this point by James Crowell at an early date, which ran down; a machine shop, a sawmill and a planing-mill were also built and destroyed by fire. The sawmill of D. J. Crowell, built in 1879, has been abandoned. The only business establishment at the station now is a creamery.

Concord Station, on the "Nypano" road, is the site of Calfish Bros.' sawmill.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The church buildings are the Wesleyan and the Methodist Episcopal. The Wesleyan was built about a mile south of Lovell's Station, about 1840. The class was organized several years before by Rev. John Broadhead.

The Methodist Episcopal building was dedicated in July, 1879. It stands near the F. S. Heath place.

A graveyard is attached to the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and the Stewart burial place is on the Bowers farm. Most of the interments take place in the cemeteries at Corry.

About 1823, a log schoolhouse, the first in the township, stood on the site of the present Cook School-building.

The township is without a gristmill since the incorporation of Elgin borough. A creamery has been in operation for fifteen or twenty years near the Crawford line. The one at Lovell's station is of recent origin. Several wells have been put down for oil, but the fluid has never been discovered in a profitable quantity.

BOROUGH OF ELGIN.

[SEE CONCORD.]

Elgin borough was incorporated in the winter of 1876, with territory about a mile square taken out of the western part of Concord township. A grist and sawmill were established by Joseph Hall, on Beaver Dam Run, at an early day, and as the settlement grew it became known as Halltown. A grocery was started about 1856, but the village did not amount to much until the opening of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., when its name was changed to Concord Station. The title was again altered when it was made a borough, and that of the postoffice was changed about the same time. Elgin had a population of 154 in 1880, and 169 in 1890. Beaver Dam run passes through the town, and the south branch of French creek cuts through one corner. Elgin has the advantage of two railroads, the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio and the Philadelphia and Erie.

The borough possesses a neat cemetery. Elgin gets considerable of its trade from western Wayne and Concord. It is thirty-two miles east of Erie, five east of Union, and five west of Corry, by railroad in each case.

The borough contains two church buildings, Methodist and Disciple.

The Disciple Church was erected in 1867, largely through the efforts of Mrs. Yost, of Corry. A society of this denomination had been organized a short time before, and attained a membership of about sixty. The congregation give the use of the building to other denominations when not required for their own purposes.

The Methodist congregation was organized in 1854 or '55 in the schoolhouse, one mile south of Elgin. The place of meeting was changed to the Elgin school house in 1858, and afterward to the Disciple Church. The congregation purchased the Presbyterian church building at Beaver Dam, moved it to the borough, and have since used it as their place of worship.

Catholic services are held both in Elgin borough and in Concord township, which are attended by priests from Corry.

CHAPTER IV.

ELK CREEK TOWNSHIP.

ELI COLTON, the first settler in Elk Creek township, moved in from Granby, Conn., early in 1797. During the spring of 1798 or 1799 the settlers were George Haybarger and his brother-in-law, John Deitz, from Maryland, who were followed by their families in the succeeding fall, in charge of Arnestes Deitz, father of John. Mr. Haybarger changed to Mill Creek in 1810, where his descendants remain. In 1800 Elihu Crane took up the tract on which Craneyville stands, where he remained until his death. He was from Connecticut, and settled in Conneaut township in the spring of 1798, from which place he changed to Elk Creek. During 1800, or a little before, numerous parties located in the township, among whom were David Randall, Daniel Akers, Mr. Odell and Mr. Harrington. In 1802 David Sherrod arrived from Susquehanna county. James McCammon, with his sons, James and Robert, came from Ireland early in the century, locating first at Philadelphia and finally in Elk Creek. Other early settlers were Jabez Clark, Charles Scott, Maxon Randall and the Shieldses and Spragues.

Among the later settlers were the following: In 1815 Daniel Winchester, from Stafford county, Connecticut, and Samuel Wells, with his sons, Otis, Obed, Franklin, Samuel and Julius, from St. Albans, Vt.; in 1818, Josiah Steward; in 1824, the Stewarts, Rodgerses and Brookses, from New York; in 1831, Thomas Bowman; in 1832, Levi and William Joslin and Edmund Goodenow, from Oneida county, New York; Sylvester Hubbard, from Tompkins county, New York; Samuel Sherman and family, from Herkimer county, New York; John Warner, from Massachusetts, and Wilson Cole, from Chautauqua county, New York; in 1833, John Stafford, from Oneida county, New York, and William Vorce, from Chautauqua county, in the same State; in 1834, Orange and Perley Miller; in 1835, Jeremiah Crowley, a native of Ireland, and Noah Almey; in 1836, David Smith, from Vermont; in 1838, Hiram Irish, from Vermont, and Burr L. Pulling, from Saratoga county, New York. The growth of the township was slow until 1830, but it filled up rapidly from that date to 1840. Samuel Sherman took up a large body of land, which he divided among his boys. In 1840 Harley Sherman, son of Samuel, opened a grocery store at Wellsburg, where he lived until his death. The forefathers of the Shermans came to America from England in 1634, settling in New England, from which section their descendants have spread into every State of the Union.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

The township is one of the original sixteen, and received its title from the stream of Elk creek, several branches of which rise in its northern portion. It originally extended north to a point parallel with the south line of Fairview, and was then nearly square. In 1832 the north part was sliced off in the formation of Girard, leaving a short handle which now constitutes a part of Franklin. When the latter township was created, in 1844, another piece was taken from Elk Creek, reversing the shape of the township and causing it to stand in its present form, which is exactly that of a gothic L.

Elk Creek is bounded on the north by Girard and Franklin, on the east by Franklin and Washington, on the south by Cussewago township, Crawford county and on the west by Conneaut. The population was 288 in 1820, 562 in 1830, 1,645 in 1840, 1,595 in 1850, 1,462 in 1870, 1,564 in 1880 and 1,325 in 1890. The villages are Wellsburg, Craneyville, Pont and Pageville, and the postoffices are Lundy's Lane (Wellsburg), Craneyville, Pont, Little Elk, and Lavery.

The lands of Elk Creek are generally rolling, with a clay soil, except a narrow belt of gravel along the East branch of Conneaut creek and its tributaries. The hill lands, which include about two-thirds of the township, are well watered, being the sources of numerous small streams. Land ranges in value from twenty to forty dollars.

The mills and factories outside of Wellsburg and Cranesville are as follows: A cheese factory at Population Corners, a butter factory each at Pont and Lavery and a sawmill near the "Devil's Backbone."

The P., S. & L. E. R. R. runs through the northwestern portion of the township, having a station at Cranesville.

For election purposes, the township is divided into the North and South Districts.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

The State and county officers have been as follows: County Commissioner, elected in 1866, Stephen J. Godfrey; Richard Powell, elected in 1881. County Superintendent from 1869 to 1878, C. C. Taylor (changed to Waterford). Assembly, elected in 1884-6, Thomas Osborn. Director of the Poor, elected in 1887, Daniel Roberts. Mercantile Appraiser, 1871, Stephen J. Godfrey; 1885, George J. Powell; 1886, O. W. Irish. County Auditor, elected in 1881, George Manton. George W. Colton, Clerk to the Commissioners from 1852 to November, 1863, and Prothonotary from his resignation of the latter office to 1867, was a native of the township, but removed to Erie before he was chosen to the first position. O. H. Irish, once Superintendent of Government Printing at Washington, was also a native of Elk Creek.

COMMON ROADS AND STREAMS.

The main thoroughfares are the road from Albion, through Wellsburg to Edinboro; the old road from Girard, through Cranesville and Wellsburg to Meadville; and the Crane road from Albion through Cranesville and Franklin township to the Edinboro plank road.

Elk Creek township has no large streams, the most important one being the East branch of Conneaut creek, which falls into the latter about half a mile west of Albion. The East branch rises in Crawford county, just across the line. It is joined by Frazier's run at Wellsburg, by Crane run near Cranesville, by Mormon run at Thornton's dam, near Albion, and by Jackson run within the latter borough. Mormon run received its name because used as a place of baptism by that sect, who were once numerous in the vicinity. The West branch of Elk creek, generally known as Little Elk, has its source near the center and runs north into Girard, where it connects with the main stream a little below "The Devil's Backbone." In the southeast are the headwaters of the Cussewago, which pursues a southerly course and joins French creek near Meadville. The water-power was very fine in the early days, on account of the steady flow of water and the heavy fall in the streams.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The church buildings are at Wellsburg, Cranesville, Pont and Pageville, except the Elk Creek Baptist, near the Franklin line, and the Little Brick or Randall United Brethren, about a mile north of Cranesville. The latter congregation was organized about 1858. A society, known as the Union, which has been in existence many years, meets in a school house in the south part of the township. The Elk Creek Baptist Church was erected in 1867 or '68. It is located at the intersection of the Population and Crane roads, the former here forming the boundary between Franklin and Elk Creek townships. The society was organized in 1866.

There is a considerable Catholic population in the portion of the township bordering on Crawford county, who worship at the church in Cussewago. They are mainly of Irish nativity or descent.

Probably the first school in the township was taught by Maxon Randall, in his log cabin a mile north of Cranesville, about 1815. One and a half miles south of Wellsburg stood a log schoolhouse in which Miss Becky Reese taught about 1817. Immediately south of Wellsburg a Mr. Higgins taught about 1820. The Sawdey schoolhouse, in the northwest corner of the township, was built about 1828, but has been slightly changed in location. A log structure, used as a schoolhouse stood at Cranesville in the early days on the site afterward used as the postoffice.

There is an independent school district composed of portions of Elk Creek and Franklin townships.

THE VILLAGE OF WELLSBURG.

Wellsburg, in the narrow valley of the East branch of Conneaut creek, is situated at the crossing of the Girard and Meadville by the Albion and Edinboro road. Samuel Wells, after whom it was named, settled at this point with his five sons in 1815, and at an early day his son Franklin built a gristmill and several sawmills. Samuel drilled a salt well about a mile south of Wellsburg, on the Clark farm, and for a considerable period the neighborhood was supplied by him with a home-made article. This continued until the opening of the canal, when cheaper salt was furnished from Onondaga, N. Y., which caused the abandonment of the well. The village was laid out by Otis Wells. Wellsburg is twenty-five miles from Erie, nine miles south of Girard, one each from Cranesville and Albion, and two miles from Albion Station. It contains a hotel, a good school building, two flouring mills and a furniture factory. The place was of a good deal of business and importance some years ago, but has been injured by the lack of railroad facilities. Its postoffice name is Lundy's Lane. The office was established in 1852, when Gen. Scott was running for President, and named in honor of one of his battles during the last war with Great Britain.

The Free Will Baptist congregation was organized May 5, 1839. Its Sabbath-school has been in continuous operation over forty years. The denomination has a good building, with tower and bell.

The Universalist congregation was organized in June, 1838, and held meetings for a while in the academy. Their building was erected in 1855, and improved in 1871.

A mission of the Episcopal Church is sustained, under the direction of St. Paul's Church of Erie.

A Methodist Episcopal society was organized at Wellsburg in early times. About 1835, it erected a frame meeting house on the summit of the hill between Wellsburg and Cranesville. This building became old and unfit for services. In 1875, or shortly before, the society divided, a portion going to Cranesville and a portion to Wellsburg; the latter held services for a short time in the school-house; then the Pleasant Valley Church building, several miles south of Wellsburg, was removed to the latter village, and is now used as the house of worship. Pleasant Valley society was organized in 1833. Its church edifice was erected in 1854.

The Wellsburg Cemetery, an inclosure of about ten acres, on a knoll in the north part of the village, is the principal burying ground of the township. The Shermans have a family burial place of about two acres.

CRANESVILLE, PAGEVILLE, PONT AND LAVERY.

Cranesville was founded by Fowler Crane, son of Elihu Crane, the first settler on the site, who laid out the village, and put up a hotel, store and ashery. It lies in the valley of the East branch of Conneaut creek, a mile north of Wellsburg, and a mile northeast of Albion, at the crossing of the Crane road by the Girard and Meadville road, and almost on the Conneaut line. The old Erie canal passed through the village, and it is an important station of the P., S. and L. E. R. R. The culvert between Albion and Cranesville, by which the canal crossed the East branch—an excellent pile of masonry—is now used for a township roadway.

The M. E. Church building was erected in 1874. About the same time the old church that stood on the hill between Cranesville and Wellsburg was removed to Springfield. Cranesville society was detached from Wellsburg at or nearly the same date.

Four miles southeast of Wellsburg, at the forks of the Crossingville road, is the once famous place of Pageville, the scene, a number of years ago, of quite extensive manufacturing operations. Being on the edge of a vast forest of ash and oak, E. Page selected it as the site of his oar factory, which shipped goods to all parts of America and Europe. On its suspension the place declined, and it is now not much more than a recollection.

The Baptist congregation at Pageville was organized in 1839, and put up its building in 1875, services in the meantime being held in the schoolhouse.

There is also a Methodist Episcopal congregation which has been in existence many years.

Pont is quite a settlement near the Crawford county line, having, in addition to other structures, a United Brethren Church and a butter factory. The church was built in 1894.

Lavery consists of a butter factory, schoolhouse, store and a few houses.

CHAPTER V.

FAIRVIEW TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF FAIRVIEW.

AS far as any evidence can be obtained, the first settlement in Fairview township was made in 1797, by Francis Scott. Nearly a year before (on the 25th of July, 1796) a company of ten men was formed at Harrisburg, for the purpose of improving and populating the country near and adjoining Lake Erie. Among the number were Thomas Forster, Richard Swan and Wm. Kelso. Each member of the company contributed £200 ($1,000), as common stock, for the use of the organization, and the money was agreed to be used in the purchase of inlots and outlots in the town and county of Erie, and for settling such lands as might be bought. The association was styled the Harrisburg and Presque Isle Company. Forster, Swan and Kelso were all natives of Paxtang, in what is now Dauphin county. Kelso was the father of John Kelso, the ancestor of the family by that name in this county. At the public sale of town lots in Erie, Waterford and elsewhere, held at Carlisle on the 8d and 4th of August, 1796, the company purchased numerous tracts. Among other property secured was a large piece of land in Fairview township, where Col. Forster, as agent of the association, built the first gristmill in Erie county in 1798, and the second sawmill in 1797, at the mouth of Walnut creek.

Capt. Swan moved his family to Erie county in 1802, and settled on Walnut creek near the lake. He rented the company's mills, and managed them until his death in 1808. His widow bought a farm about one and a half miles from the mills. In 1817 her son Richard built the first frame house in Fairview township. When Col. Forster and Capt. Swan first arrived at the point where the mills were built, they were standing on a high bluff overlooking the lake, and the former exclaimed, "This is the fairest view I have seen yet." The expression pleased them, and they named the place Fairview. A log tavern was built in 1797, of peeled hemlock logs, which Capt. Swan also rented.

Among those who reached the township in 1797 were John and George Nicholson, John Kelso, Patrick Vance, Alexander, Patrick and John McKee, William Sturgeon, Jeremiah Sturgeon and William Haggerty. The Nicholsons were born in Ireland, but emigrated to Lancaster county, where they remained a short time before coming to the lake shore. Mr. McKee remained in Fairview a few years, and then changed to Mill Creek. Gen. Kelso moved to Mill Creek in 1800, and from there in 1804 to Erie. In 1798, the colony was enlarged by the arrival of John Dempsey, of Dauphin county; and in 1800, by that of Thomas Kennedy, James Moorhead and Thomas McCreary. The latter was from Lancaster county, his brothers having come north at the same time and settled in Mill Creek. The settlers during 1802 were S. F. Gdtnr, of Franklin county, William and James Arbuckle, of Maryland, and Joseph M. Kratz, a Frenchman, who afterward removed to Erie. About 1801, Jacob Ebersole, of Lancaster county, moved in, followed in 1805 by James Ryan, of Dauphin county. Rev. Johnston Eaton arrived for a permanent residence in 1806. Among other early settlers were John Caughey and Samuel McCreary, of Lancaster county. Mr. Caughey moved to Washington county in 1812, but came back in 1822. Moses Barnett, from Dauphin county, went in about 1816; Arthur Oney, from Otsego county, New York, in 1820; John Silverthorn, son of James, who located in Girard about 1801, in the same year; David Russell about 1822; Samuel P. Allen, from New England, and Daniel Bear, from Lancaster county, in 1823; and Andrew Sturgeon in 1830. The first colonists, with the exception of Messrs. Ebersole and Gdtnr, were of Protestant Irish stock, but at a subsequent date many Pennsylvania Dutch moved in, followed still later by numerous foreign Germans. Of the Pennsylvania Dutch, Daniel Waidler, from Lancaster county, made his settlement in 1834.

In 1805 occurred the first death of a grown white person in the township, being that of John Gordon.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Fairview is one of the original townships of the county. Its size was largely reduced by the formation of Girard township in 1832. The old west line ran through Girard to a point near Miles Grove, parallel with the boundary between Elk Creek and Conneaut. The south line ran parallel with the one between Elk Creek and Girard, from Springfield on the west to McKean on the east, embracing what is now the northern portion of Franklin. Fairview is bounded on the north by Lake Erie, on the east by Mill Creek and McKean, on the south by Franklin and on the west by Girard. Its greatest length is eight miles, with a breadth in the widest part of about six and a half miles. The population was 536 in 1820, 1,529 in 1830, 1,480 in 1840, 1,760 in 1850, 2,131 in 1860, 2,157 in 1870, 1,482 in 1880 and 1,295 in 1890. The post-offices are Swanville and Avonia, and most of the trading is done in Fairview borough.

Excepting the abrupt gullies along Walnut and Elk creeks and their tributary streams, there is hardly an acre of worthless land in the township. The lake shore plain attains a width of about two miles and a half. Its soil is of a sandy nature along the lake, merging into a gravelly formation further back, and producing every kind of grain, fruit and vegetable that can be cultivated in this section. The back lands are usually clay and loam, varied by patches of gravel. Wheat prospers in every part of the township. Potatoes are cultivated in large quantities. Lands range in value from thirty to seventy-five dollars on the lake shore plain, and from fifteen to thirty-five dollars in the back districts.

STREAMS.

The chief streams of Fairview are Walnut creek and Elk creek, both of which have been described in the general sketch. Walnut creek enters the township from Mill Creek, and, taking a northwesterly course, empties into the lake at Manchester. Elk creek comes in from McKean, flows across the southern portion into Girard and unites with the lake a little northwest of Miles Grove. The deepest part of the Walnut creek gorge is in the vicinity of the Lake Shore R. R. culvert, where the banks are over a hundred feet high. A short distance above and almost on the site of the Nickel Plate bridge, was the Walnut creek aqueduct, once the wonder of this region, built to carry the water of the canal across the gully. It was constructed of timber and was 104 feet high by about 800 feet long. The railroad culvert and embankment cover a space of about 600 feet, with width enough for three tracks. Bear run is the principal tributary of Walnut creek within the township. It heads on the J. Rusterholtz place, in the extreme eastern corner of Fairview, near the edge of Mill creek, and falls into the main stream a short distance south of Weigle's gristmill, after a course of about four miles. Brandy run rises near the center, on the farm of J. A. Kline, and after flowing seven or eight miles, joins Elk creek a little south of Girard borough. Falls run, another branch of Elk creek, comes in from Franklin, on the south edge of the township, having a length of some five miles. It received its name from a beautiful cascade, near the Franklin stone quarry, where the water of the creek passes over a ledge fifty feet high. From there to Elk creek its banks are 100 feet in height and almost perpendicular. A considerable stream rises in Franklin township, runs through a corner of McKean, and falls into Elk creek on the Sterrett place. Trout run is an independent stream which rises on the east line near McKean, runs in a northwesterly course through Fairview borough and empties into the lake two miles beyond. Its length is between six and eight miles. Beaver Dam run, a rivulet which tumbles into Walnut creek about eighty rods below Bear's mill, received its name from an extensive embankment built by the beavers which formerly existed on what used to be termed the Barnett farm. Traces of their work were to be seen until recent years.

MILLS AND BRIDGES.

Like most of the townships in the county, Fairview had more mills and factories ten to fifteen years ago than it has now. There was once quite an extensive paper mill north of Avonia, which burned down in 1883. A gristmill, tannery and tile works, all of which were in operation in 1884, have gone down. The present gristmills are Weigle's, on Walnut creek, and Lohrer's and Kernick's, on Trout run. These are all the manufacturing institutions that remain in the township.

The Walnut Creek mills of Mr. Weigle were established at a very early day by S. F. Gudtner. In 1856, the flouring-mill was rebuilt by Alexander Nicholson. After Mr Weigle obtained possession he made extensive improvements. In 1815, Samuel McCreary erected the first woolen-mill in the county at the intersection of the depot and Lake roads. He continued to operate it till 1841. After that the mill had several changes of ownership until it was abandoned. The Lock Haven woolen-mills, on the bank of the lake, were established by the Messrs. Caughey in 1842, who had built a sawmill the year previous. They disposed of the woolen-factory in 1850 and of the saw mill in 1864, after which time they had various owners. The property was destroyed by fire in October, 1878.

The principal bridges are as follows: On Elk creek—The Swalley, Ryan and Brooks (iron). On Walnut creek—Manchester, Lake road (iron), N. Y., C. and St. L. R. R. (iron), Ridge road (iron), Cross roads and Town line, (built jointly by Mill Creek and Fairview townships).

SCHOOL HISTORY.

The first schoolhouse in what is now Fairview township, was erected in 1804, and stood about a mile from the mouth of Walnut creek. The next place in which school was taught, was on land of Jeremiah Sturgeon, within the present limits of the borough of Fairview. School was kept at this place two winters, as early as 1810. William Sturgeon erected a schoolhouse about 1811 or 1812. The next schoolhouse in this neighborhood stood about one mile west of the residence of Thomas Sturgeon. It was erected about the year 1816 or 1817. Later than the above, another, built of logs, stood near the dwelling of Johnston Eaton. There was a schoolhouse in the southeastern part of the township, near the line dividing the townships of Mill Creek and Fairview, at an early day.

COMMON ROADS, RAILROADS AND CANAL.

The leading thoroughfares are the Lake and Ridge roads, extending across the whole width of the township from east to west—the former at an average distance of three-fourths of a mile, and the latter from one and a half to two miles back from the lake; the Depot road from the borough to the lake; the Fairview and Waterford, running southeast into McKean; and the Girard and Waterford, which intersects the latter at Sterrettania. A route along the beach of the lake was opened between Erie and the mouth of Walnut creek as early as 1797. The Ridge road crosses the Walnut creek gully at Weigle's mill by two quite steep inclines, which were once a source of considerable anxiety to teamsters. The side hill at Walnut creek was cut down for a roadway by Arthur Oney, who received $100 for the job. He also built the first bridge across Walnut creek on the line of the Ridge road.

The Lake Shore R. R. passes through the township from Mill Creek to Girard at a short distance from the lake. The New York, Chicago and St. Louis R. R., "Nickel Plate," crosses the township a little south of the Lake Shore R. R. The Erie and Pittsburg R. R. uses the track of the Lake Shore R. R., and the "Shenango" that of the Nickel Plate through the township. All of these roads have stations at Avonia (Fairview station) and Swanville. The old canal traversed the township on nearly the line of the Nickel Plate R. R.

STATE AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

The following is a list of the citizens of the township and borough who have held State and county positions, with the years of their election or appointment: Assembly, Myron H. Silverthorn, 1879-83. Sheriff, Miles W. Caughey, 1846 to 1849; Andrew F. Swan, 1867 to 1870; Joseph W. Swalley (by appointment), 1864. Deputy Sheriff, Joseph W. Swalley, 1861-64. Register and Recorder, Daniel Long, 1872 to 1879. County Treasurer, Joseph W. Swalley (by appointment), March 10, 1870, to December 23, 1870; Jacob Yeagla, 1872 to 1874; William C. Hay, 1878 to 1881. County Commissioners, George Nicholson, 1820-23, also by appointment from August 6, 1828, until the ensuing October election; Isaac Webster, 1844-47; William W. Eaton, 1850-59; Myron H. Silverthorn, 1870-75. Directors of the Poor, Curtis Heidler, 1845-48; M. M. Kelso, 1850-53; Alex. Nicholson, 1857-60; William W. Eaton, 1870-73; F. Willis, 1884-87; Clerk and Treasurer to the Directors of the Poor, D. W. Nason, 1879 to 1890. County Surveyor, Robert P. Holliday, 1863 to 1866, and 1869 to 1872. County Auditor, George Nicholson, 1809, and 1816-19; Daniel Sayre, 1823-26; David H. Chapman, 1827-30; John J. Swan, 1830-33; Moses Barnett, 1841-44; H. H. Bassler, 1858-62; Jos. W. Swalley, 1861-64; Oliver P. Ferguson, 1865-68; Wm. C. Eaton, 1890. Mercantile Appraisers, Johnston Eaton, 1859; James McCreary, 1876. Jury Commissioner, Noah Waidley, 1894-97. Steward of the Alms House, M. H. Silverthorn, January 1, 1892.

CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS.

The following-named churches are located in the township: Salem Church of the Evangelical Association, Christian Church, United Brethren, St. Jacob's Evangelical United, and Evangelical.

Salem Church is the outgrowth of the missionary labors of Rev. J. Siebert, whose labors began in this field in 1833. The house of worship, located in the eastern part of the township, was erected about forty years ago.

St. Jacob's Evangelical United Church is located on the Ridge road about a mile and a half east of the business part of Fairview borough. The congregation was organized in the winter of 1852, and the church was built about the same time. The first pastor was the Rev. Michael Kuchler.

The Evangelical Church southwest of Sterrettania was started in 1884.

The United Brethren Church is upon the road from Franklin Center to Sterrettania, five miles south of Fairview borough. The congregation was organized about 1857, and held meetings for a time in the Van Camp schoolhouse. The church building was dedicated February 22, 1880.

The Christian Church is three miles south of the borough, on the direct road from Girard to McKean Corners. The congregation was organized by Rev. Asal Fish, first pastor, in 1835. The building was erected in 1845.

VILLAGES, ETC.

As before stated, the first settlement at the mouth of Walnut creek was made by Col. Forster and Mr. Swan, who gave the location the name of Fairview. John M. Kratz started a store in 1802, and a log tavern was kept by Richard Swan, who was followed by James Dunn. The latter was postmaster in 1822. This was the great point of the township, till 1824. The elections and military trainings were held there, and as long as the stages and travel ran down to the mouth of the creek, it was rather a lively little village. The mills fell into the hands of Daniel Lord in 1820, who changed the name of the place to Manchester and erected a paper mill. It burned down and no attempt was ever made to rebuild it. A Presbyterian congregation was organized at Manchester in 1806, and a building erected there in 1810. The place of worship was removed to Swanville in 1832, and afterward to West Mill Creek.

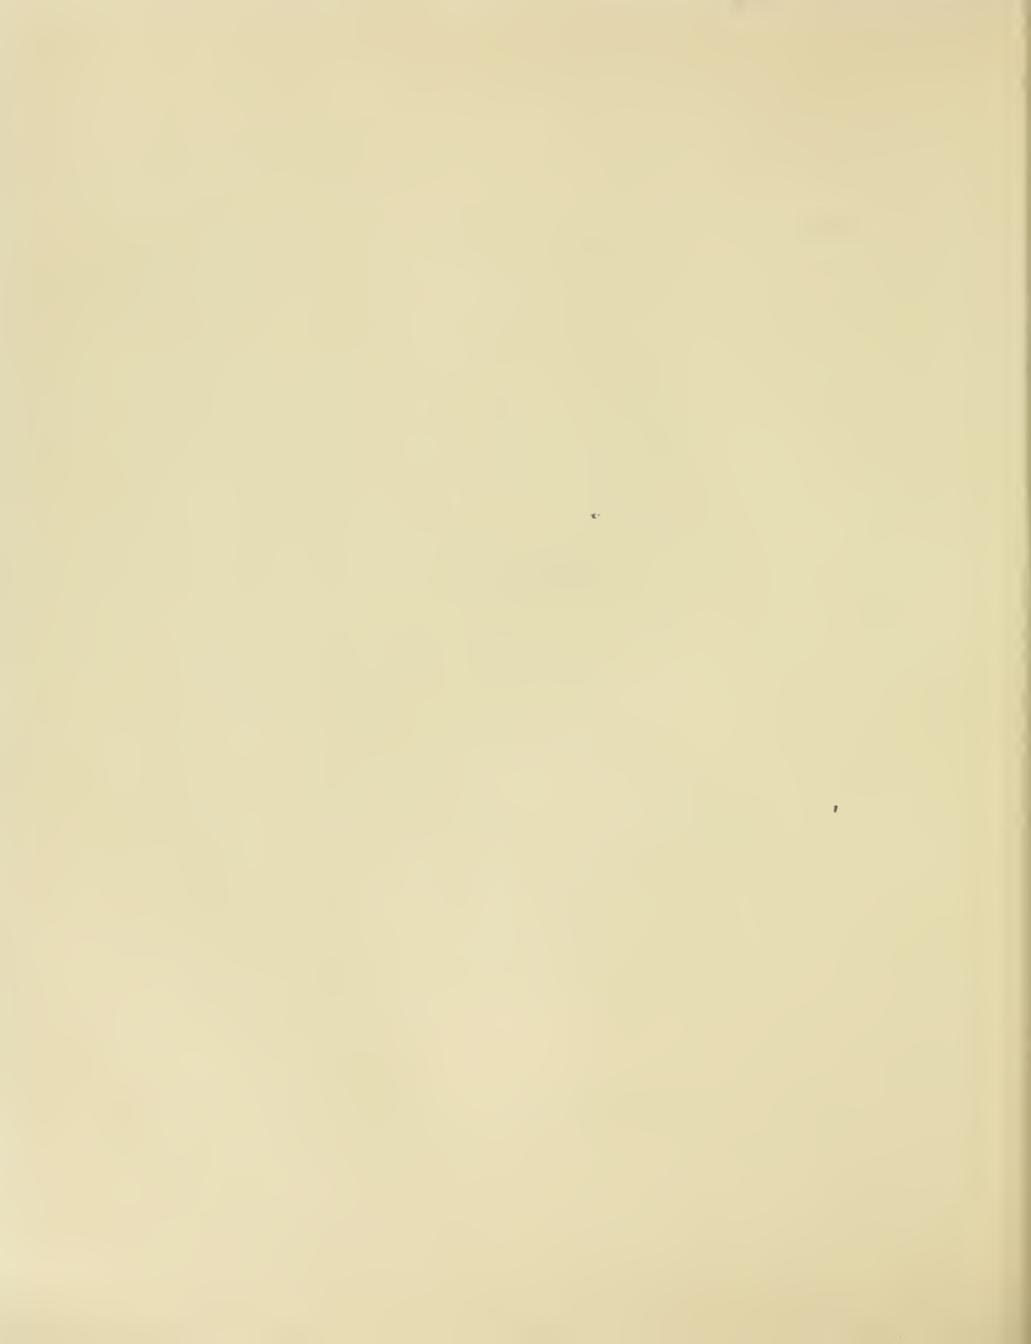

Swanville, on the Ridge road, nine miles west of Erie, and about a third of a mile south of the Lake Shore R. R., received its name through John J. Swan, who built the first house and established the first tavern on the site. Mr. Swan opened his tavern about 1832, and soon after another was started by the Nicholsons. These continued in operation until 1853-54, when the want of business compelled their closure.

The original Westminster Presbyterian Church in Mill Creek township was built at Swanville in 1832, and removed in 1851. This church is interesting from the fact that Rev. Johnston Eaton, the first permanent minister of that denomination in the county, began and closed his career as its pastor. He came on in 1805, remained for a short time, and returned in 1806 to stay permanently. The first service held by Mr. Eaton was in Swan's tavern at the mouth of Walnut creek. He died on the 17th of June, 1847, in the seventy-second year of his age. His wife lived until 1872, when she departed this life at the age of 93.

As previously stated, the first church building was erected in Manchester, then known as Fairview. This was abandoned and a new building put up in 1832, in Swanville, which still retained the name of the Fairview Church. About 1837 the New School element of the congregation seceded and established a church in Fairview borough, and in 1845 they were followed by a number who belonged to the Old School side. This left the main body of worshippers in the church in Swanville living in the western part of Mill Creek. In order to have their place of worship more convenient, they removed the building in 1851 to a point on the Ridge road in Mill Creek township, where it assumed the name of the Westminister Church. The building in Swanville stood where the schoolhouse is now.

Fairview Depot, or Avonia, is the railroad station of Fairview borough, from which it is about half a mile north.

Lock Haven, at the mouth of Trout run, is nothing more than a name. It once had a woolen-factory and sawmill, but the latter fell into ruin and the former burned down.

Mayside, once a popular pleasure resort near the mouth of Walnut creek, was partially burned some years ago, and the hotel is no longer kept up.

QUARRIES, ETC.

Two quarries have been opened in Fairview, one at Manchester and the other on Trout run, just below the depot. From the Manchester quarry, some of the stone were taken for the locks of the canal. Neither of the quarries proved of much value, and they have been abandoned. Most of the stone used in the township and borough came for a long time from Howard's quarry in Franklin.

For an account of the Weiss library, an extract from Mr. Weiss' will, etc., see Mill Creek township.

BOROUGH OF FAIRVIEW.

[SEE FAIRVIEW TOWNSHIP].

The borough of Fairview was incorporated in 1868, covering an area of one mile square, and including a population at that time of some 400. It stands on the first rise of the lake shore plain, twelve miles west of Erie, a mile and a half south of the lake, and half a mile from the railroad station. The Ridge road forms its main street, and Trout run winds through its limits. The churches of Fairview are Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Lutheran and German Evangelical, the first being of brick and the others of frame. Its schools are held in one large two-story building erected in 1866. The first schoolhouse in the village was erected some time prior to 1838. The Monitor house—the only hotel—has not had license for some years. Fairview borough had a population of 480 in 1870, 425 in 1880, and 305 in 1890.

FIRST SETTLEMENTS—CHURCH INCIDENTS, ETC.

The earliest settlers upon the site were the Messrs. Sturgeon, in honor of whom the place was long known as Sturgeonville. The first tavern, a small log building on the bank of Trout run, along the Ridge road, was built and kept by William Sturgeon. This was closed some years when Mr. Sturgeon erected another tavern near by. The Monitor house was erected by S. C. Sturgeon. Following the tavern came a store, a blacksmith shop, etc.

On the death of William Sturgeon, in 1837, he directed that, after the demise of his wife, some fifty acres of land and twenty town lots should go to the Presbyterian Church of Fairview. A congregation was to be organized and a building erected within one year from the time specified in the will, otherwise the property was to be donated to the Presbyterian Board of Publication. In the year of Mr. Sturgeon's death, the General Assembly of the church separated into the New School and Old School. Each side made haste to get up edifices in time to avail itself of Mr. Sturgeon's legacy, and the question as to which it belonged had to be settled by the Courts. After a legal tussle, the Court below decided in favor of the Old School branch, and, on appeal to the Supreme Court, that body affirmed the decision. The union of the denomination in November, 1869, did away with the need of two buildings, and both branches now worship together in harmony. The building at present occupied was built in 1874, and cost $11,000. It occupies the same lot on which both the Old and New School edifices stood during the days of contention. The first Old School church in Fairview was replaced by another, which burned down. The New School building was removed and is now occupied by the Evangelical Association.

METHODIST, LUTHERAN AND EVANGELICAL SOCIETIES.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is the outgrowth of a class formed in the house of Justice Osborne in 1817. The first church edifice was built in 1836 and stood outside of the village. The second building was erected in 1854.

Mt. Nabo Church of the Evangelical Association owes its origin to the missionary labors of Rev. J. Siebert, who began preaching in Erie county in 1833. The church building of the society was formerly occupied by the New School Presbyterians, of whom it was purchased in April, 1872, and moved to its present site.

The Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized in 1856. This congregation and the one at St. Jacob's on the Ridge road were originally one and the same church society, but at the date given above became separate bodies. The Rev. Michael Kuchler became the first pastor. The first house of worship was built in 1857, on the outskirts of the borough, and used until the present one was erected in 1878.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Fairview cemetery, on the northwest edge of the borough, has been in use some twenty-six years. The first body interred was that of Mrs. Milton Sturgeon.

Mrs. Sarah Green died in Fairview at the extreme age of 104 years. The wife of Casper Doll was 97 years and 10 days old at the time of her death.

The manufacturing institutions of the borough are a planing and sawmill, a creamery, a cider and jell mill and several shops.

CHAPTER VI.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP, the youngest in the county, was established in 1844 out of portions of McKean, Washington and Elk Creek, and named after the printer patriot of the Revolution.

J. P. Silverthorn was the main person in working for its creation. Franklin is exactly five miles square. The population was 686 in 1850, 979 in 1860, 994 in 1870, 1,020 in 1880 and 983 in 1890. Franklin is bounded on the north by Fairview and McKean, on the east by McKean and Washington, on the south by Washington and Elk Creek, and on the west by Girard and Elk Creek. The only village is Franklin Center. The postoffices are Franklin Corners (Franklin Center), and Ivarea (Mohawk Mills).

As a rule, the people of Franklin are unusually progressive for a rural district, and the township has improved more, proportionately, within twenty years, than any other in the county. The houses and barns are mostly good, and the citizens are generally free from debt; in fact, it is a saying that the farms of Franklin have fewer "mortgage blankets" upon them than any of the surrounding townships.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The remoteness of Franklin township from the main lines of travel delayed settlements till a later period than in any other portion of the county. A few adventurous parties located on the State road when it was opened, about 1802 or 1803, but they all left in a short time. From that date till 1829, when L. D. Rouse went in from Connecticut, it cannot be learned that any permanent settlement was made, and as late as 1835 the country remained almost an unbroken forest. During 1832, the colonists were William and Levi Francis, from New York; James P. Silverthorn, from Girard township; Henry Howard, from Grafton, Vt.; and Messrs. Goodban and Longley, from England. To these were added, in 1833, Thomas Spence and Thomas McLaughlin, from Ireland; William Vorse, from Chautauqua county, New York; Allen Mead, from Saratoga county, New York; Ezra Milks and his son Amos, from Rennselaer county, New York; Curtis Cole and father, from Unadilla, N. Y.; and Andrew Proudfit, from York county, Pennsylvania. Isaac Fry, from Vermont, and John Tuckey, an Englishman, took up land in 1834; John Loyer, from Eastern Pennsylvania, in 1835; Levi Howard, from Vermont, in 1840; and James B. Robinson, from Pompey, N. Y., in 1844. Levi Silverthorn also went in during 1844, the year the township was created. John Gilbert married Elizabeth Gregory in Waterford on the 22d of January, 1846, and the young couple immediately settled in Franklin. Among other early settlers were Messrs. Webster, Huff, Gibson and Perry, all from Warsaw, N. Y.

THE TOWNSHIP GENERALLY.

The township consists of high rolling land, with few of the ravines and broken ridges which prevail in other summit townships. The soil is a clay loam, varied by a few patches of gravel. Some grain is raised, but the land is best adapted for grazing and stock-raising. But little good timber remains. Land varies in price from ten to thirty dollars an acre.

Being on the top of the hills which have their bases in Washington, McKean, Fairview, Girard and Elk Creek, numerous small streams take their rise in Franklin, and flow into the creeks of those townships. Those in the north are all tributary to Elk creek, and those in the south mainly to the Cussewago, the dividing ground being about a mile and a half south of Franklin Center. Falls run, the largest stream in the township, starts about a mile east of a cranberry marsh southeast of Franklin Center, and empties into Elk creek, in Fairview. Below the cascade at Howard's quarry, the stream winds between steep banks to its junction with Elk creek. The West branch of the Conneauttee heads in the same marsh, and, after a short course within the township, crosses the line into Washington.

The nearest railroad stations are at Girard and Fairview for the north, at Albion and Cranesville, for the west, and at Cambridge for the south and southeast. The chief public thoroughfares are the old State road, extending across the township from Lockport to McLane; the Population road, on the line between Girard, Elk Creek and Franklin; the Crane road, from Cranesville to Edinboro; the Sterrettania road, from that place to Cussewago, Crawford county, and the quarry road, from Franklin Center to Fairview.

MILLS, STORES, CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, ETC.

The mills and factories of Franklin township are as follows: A creamery each at Franklin Center and Silverthorn's Corners; a cheese factory at Population Corners; a saw-mill each on the Crane road (known as the Mohawk Mills), and a mile north of Franklin Center; and a feed-mill in Franklin Center.

There are two stores in Franklin Center, one at Ivarca, and one at Population Corners.

The small and thinly-settled population prevented the township from having any early schools, but it was prompt to take advantage of the State school law after organization. The first schoolhouse in Franklin Center was built about 1840, or perhaps a year or two earlier. It occupied the site of the present schoolhouse.

In Franklin Center is a Union Church, erected in 1868, at a cost of $1,500. It is occupied by the Methodist Episcopal and German Lutheran congregations. The former was organized in 1866, and the latter in 1871.

The Eureka M. E. society, having a church on the Crane road, has been in existence since 1867. The building was put up two years later.

The Catholic population generally attend church in Cussewago, Crawford county.

The main cemetery of the township is at the Dawley schoolhouse, on the line between Franklin and Girard townships. The people in the southeast mostly bury in Edinboro, in the southwest in Cussewago, and in the north in Sterrettania and Fairview.

VILLAGE AND QUARRY.

Franklin Center, or Franklin Corners, as it is called in the postoffice directory, is on the State road, eight miles each from Girard, Fairview and McKean, five from Sterrettania, and seventeen from Erie. The village was founded by Oren G. Wood, who started a store, and induced others to settle around him. John Tuckey, O. G. Wood and John Loyer were the original owners of the land. The village, which is a small but pleasant settlement, is the voting and meeting place of the township. A mail is received daily from Fairview.

Franklin, LeBoeuf, McKean and Waterford enjoy the distinction of being the only townships that possess important quarries of building stone. The Howard quarry, in Franklin, near the Fairview line, has been worked for forty years, and furnished the stone for the courthouse in Erie. This was for a long period the only quarry in the township, but in recent years others have been opened. Oil has been running out of the rocks at Howard's quarry from the earliest settlement, and in former times was gathered to be sold as medicine. Three wells were put down along Falls run, in confidence that a large deposit of the greasy fluid would be found, but only a trifling amount was got, and the projects were abandoned.

CHAPTER VII.

GIRARD TOWNSHIP—BOROUGHES OF GIRARD AND LOCKPORT.

GIRARD TOWNSHIP was carved out of Elk Creek, Fairview and Springfield in 1832, receiving its name from Stephen Girard, the Philadelphia millionaire, who held a large body of land in the adjoining township of Conneaut. The old line between Fairview and Springfield ran through the township parallel with the present line dividing Elk Creek and Conneaut. Girard township is bounded on the north by Lake Erie, on the east by Fairview and Franklin, on the south by Conneaut and Elk Creek and on the west by Springfield. In the widest part it is six and a quarter miles from east to west by seven and three-eighths from north to south. The population was 2,060 in 1840, 2,443 in 1850, 2,453 in 1860, 2,018 in 1870, 2,338 in 1880 and 2,280 in 1890, inclusive of Miles Grove in the latter year, which was credited with 570 inhabitants. The villages are Miles Grove and West Girard, and the postoffices are Miles Grove, Francis, and Fairplain. The township is divided on the line of the "Nickel Plate" R. R. into two election districts—the north one being known as Miles Grove and the south one as Girard.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settlers within the limits of the township were William Silverthorn and his son, Capt. Abraham Silverthorn, who came in 1798 from Fayette county. About 1799 Robert Brown located at the mouth of Elk creek, but in 1804 he moved to Weigleville, and from there to Erie. These parties were followed in 1800 by Robert Porter, Isaac Miller and John Kelley. Mr. Kelley moved to West Mill Creek in 1802. In 1801 Jacob Coffman came from Somerset county and located on the site of Lockport; and about the same time Patrick Ward settled on the Lake road. Mr. Coffman, who was from Somerset county, was accompanied by his four sons. Conrad, one of the boys, went back to Somerset county about 1814, married there and did not return until 1836, when his son J. C. was a young man of 17. William and Samuel McClelland and William Crane, natives of Ireland, took up lands in 1802; John Miller, from Fayette county, the same year; George Kelley, from Mifflin county, in 1803; Joel Bradish and brothers, from Saratoga county, New York, and James Blair, from Fayette county, in 1804; Martin Taylor, from Chautauqua county, New York, in 1813; William Webber, from Genesee county, New York, in 1814; Cornelius Haggerty, in 1815; Samuel Jenner and his son Peach, from Vermont, Justus Osborn and his son Philip, from Fredonia, N. Y., Abner Boder, from Connecticut, and Scott Keith and wife, from Pittsford, Vt., in 1816; Elijah Drury, from Genesee county, New York, in 1817; Ethan Lovelidge and Nathan Sherman, from Oneida county, New York, in 1818; Joseph Long, from Massachusetts, in 1825; Matthew Anderson, from Chenango county, New York, in 1830; George Traut, from Columbia county, New York, in 1831; James Miles, from Union township, and Titus Pettibone, from Wyoming county, New York, in 1832; William Kirkland, in 1833, and Joshua Evans and family from Summit township in 1837. Among other early settlers, the date of whose arrival is not ascertained, were Messrs. Taggart, Pickett, Badger, Martin, Wells, Clark, Laughlin and Wolverton. The last four were the earliest who located on the site of Girard borough, Mr. Wells having owned most of the land embraced within the corporate limits. James, Isaac and Abraham Silverthorn located among the first, and Thomas Miles about 1801. John Ralph kept a tavern at the mouth of Elk creek in 1804.

John R. Ward was the first male child, and a daughter of Robert Brown, who married Geo. A. Eliot, of Erie, the first female child born in the township. The country does not appear to have been cleared up very rapidly, as, according to Mr. Long, there was no road along Elk creek when he reached there in 1825. Girard township claims the honor of having had the second oldest person in the county—Patrick Ward, who died at the age of 105.

For a sketch of William Miles, the pioneer of the Miles family, see Union City.

TOWNSHIP LANDS, ETC.

It is generally agreed that the land between Walnut creek, in Fairview, and Crooked creek, in Springfield, is the best along Lake Erie, and of this choice section Girard township is claimed by its citizens to be the very cream. The lake plain is from three to four miles wide, running back by a succession of steps which give a pleasing variety to the country. Near the lake the soil is sandy, but on the ridge it becomes gravelly. Back of Girard borough the land continues to rise, is much broken, and, except along Elk and Crooked creeks, where there are some fine valley farms, is better adapted to grazing than grain, though this is to be stated with some notable exceptions. The whole township is a splendid fruit, grape and berry country. Land is valued at from $100 to $125 per acre along the Ridge road, from sixty to $100 along the Lake road, and from twenty-five to sixty dollars in the south part of the township.

The main thoroughfares are the Lake road, the Ridge road, the two roads between Miles Grove and the borough, the road through Lockport and Cranesville to Meadville, and the Lexington road into Conneaut township. The Ridge and Lake roads are thickly settled, and the first named is one of the finest in the county, having a row of shade trees on both sides almost the entire distance from Girard to Fairview. The stage company had extensive stables at West Girard, which were burned in January, 1832, with the loss of fifteen horses. After the opening of the railroad in 1852, few persons cared to travel by coach, and the stage line was soon abandoned.

RAILROADS AND CANAL.

The Lake Shore R. R. traverses the township from east to west, crossing Elk creek a short distance west of Miles Grove. The old wooden viaduct over this stream, built for the use of the railroad in 1852, was 115 feet high and 1,400 feet long. It was replaced in 1858 with a culvert and filling. The only station of this road is at Miles Grove, or Girard Station, as it is more generally known to travelers.

The Erie and Pittsburg R. R. intersects the Lake Shore almost a mile west of Miles Grove, running north and south across the township, parallel to and not far from the Springfield line. Aside from Miles Grove, it has but a single station in the township, the one known as Cross's, at the north end of Crooked creek bridge. This station is the depot for the village of East Springfield, from which it is a mile and a half distant.

The New York, Chicago and St. Louis R. R. ("Nickel Plate") passes through the township from east to west, crossing the Elk creek valley by an iron bridge, within sight from Girard borough. Its station is between the borough and Miles Grove, a little east of the latter place.

The Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie R. R. ("Peasley") comes in from the south and connects with the "Nickel Plate" north of Girard borough, through which it passes and which is its station.

The old Erie canal entered Girard on the east from Fairview, along the foot of the first rise, cut through the ridge to Elk creek, crossed that stream by an aqueduct ninety-six feet above the water, and 500 long, and followed the valley of Hall's run southward. Its route; in the main, is followed by the "Peasley" road from the Lake Shore plain southward.

CREEKS, VALLEYS AND NATURAL CURIOSITIES.

The chief stream of Girard is Elk creek, which comes in from Fairview, flows nearly through the center of the township from east to northwest, and empties into the lake about a mile and a quarter beyond Miles Grove, after a length of thirty to thirty-five miles. The Little Elk rises in Elk Creek township, runs north eight or ten miles and unites with the main stream near the Fairview line. Hall's run flows through Lockport and falls in a little south of Girard borough. Brandy run heads in Fairview township; and Spring run empties into Elk creek southwest of Miles Grove. The valley of the chief stream is narrow and precipitous in the eastern portion of the township, but further west and north it widens out with steep bluffs on both sides. At the junction of the Little Elk there is a high peak, resembling part of a Roman profile, with its base at the water's edge, which has received the title of "The Devil's Nose." A short distance south is the natural curiosity, famous over the western portion of the county as "The Devil's Backbone." The Little Elk runs along the base of an almost perpendicular hill for a quarter of a mile, then rounds the bluff and comes back to a point opposite the one which it left, forming a sort of loop. At the narrowest place, the crest or backbone is not more than two feet across, and the height is over 100 feet. The other streams of the township are Crooked creek and several rivulets flowing into the lake in the northeast. Crooked creek rises near Lockport, runs through the southwestern portion of Girard and the northeastern part of Springfield, and empties into Lake Erie about three-fourths of a mile beyond the village of North Springfield. It has a course of some ten miles.

MOUTH OF ELK CREEK.

The mouth of Elk creek figured extensively in the early plans of public improvement, as well as in the Courts of the county and State. When the canal was under discussion, there was a bitter strife as to the adoption of the eastern route by way of Waterford, or the western one by way of Girard. The Legislature, by recommendation of the chief engineer in charge, adopted the western route. Next came a dispute as to whether the terminus of the canal should be at Erie or at the mouth of Elk creek, which was settled in favor of the former. On the third of March, 1837, pending the decision in regard to the terminus, a contract was entered into between James Miles, Thaddeus Stevens, and Charles Ogle, a Congressman from this State, looking to the building of a city at the mouth of the creek. Miles was to dispose of 200 acres of land on both sides of the stream to Stevens and Ogle, in consideration of $5,000, and $95,000 from the sale of lots; Stevens was to work for the adoption of the site as the terminus of the canal; and Ogle was to obtain an appropriation from Congress for the improvement of the harbor. The project failing, Miles sued Stevens and Ogle for the $5,000. The case was carried to the Supreme Court and decided in favor of the defendants. Some curious testimony came out in the course of the trial.

While the country was being cleared, the mouth of Elk creek was considerable of a shipping place for staves and lumber. A warehouse formerly stood on the lake shore for the convenience of trade. Quite a fishery is now maintained at the outlet of the stream.

MILLS AND MOUNDS.

The mills and factories of the township—not naming for the present those of Miles Grove—are as follows: On Elk creek—Nason's gristmill, at the mouth of Spring run; the West Girard grist, saw and cider mills, and a planing-mill, sash and blind factory at the same place. On Spring run, Thornton's woolen-mill and Brown Bros.' hand rake factory and cider-mill. A gristmill is said to have been established on this stream by Mr. Silverthorn, as early as 1799. On Brandy run, Rossiter's tannery; on one of the lake streams, Godfrey's sawmill. The first mill on Elk creek, within Girard township, was built at West Girard in 1814, by Peter Wolverton. It burned down while owned by Mr. Rowley and was rebuilt.

Southwest of Girard borough, the remains of an ancient mound are or were lately to be seen, which was one of a chain of four, extending in a southwesterly direction through East Springfield toward Ohio. These mounds are exactly alike, consisting of round earthwork inclosing a space of about three-fourths of an acre, with apertures at regular intervals. Similar remains are to be found in Conneaut, Harbor Creek, Wayne and Concord townships. On a hill between Girard and Lockport was an Indian burial ground.

In 1882 the bones of a mastodon were plowed up on the farm of W. H. Palmer, some of which were in an excellent state of preservation. The animal was estimated to have been fifteen feet long, exclusive of tusks, and about thirteen feet high.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The churches of the township, outside of Miles Grove, are two Methodist, one United Brethren and one Christian.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Fair Haven, in the southwest part of the township, was organized January 7, 1815, at the house of Mr. Webber, and reorganized in 1860. The building was put up in 1861.

The church of the same denomination at Fairplain, on the Lake road, was organized in 1840 and erected its building in 1841.

The Church of the United Brethren, on the State road, near the Elk Creek township line, was organized in 1870.

The Christian Church building is on the Population road, on the line between Girard and Franklin.

The cemetery at Girard is the common burial place of the township, but a number of small graveyards exist in various sections.

A loghouse stood in the southwestern part of the township, in which school was taught in 1819 or 1820. This building was destroyed by fire and another was erected in the same locality. Many years ago there was a log schoolhouse about three-quarters of a mile south of the village of Lockport. About 1822 school was taught in a frame building on the Ridge road at the foot of Girard Hill. Another was held in a private house, one mile east of Girard about 1823.

MILES GROVE.

The village of Miles Grove, or Girard Station, as it is known to the traveling public, is situated on the Lake Shore R. R., a little over a mile east of the intersection of the Erie and Pittsburg R. R., one and three-quarter miles north of Girard and sixteen by rail west of Erie. Its population was 471 by the census of 1880, and 570 by that of 1890.

The place was named after Judge Miles, who influenced the erection of the depot, the ground for which was given by Austin H. Seeley, who laid out the lots. It grew slowly for some years, but received an impetus by the completion of the Erie and Pittsburg R. R., which caused it to be made a general stopping place for the trains. Another stop was given to it by the location of A. Denio's fork and agricultural works, which furnish employment to about seventy persons. These works—now known as the Otsego Fork Mills—were brought to Miles Grove, part in 1874, and the balance in 1876, the citizens subscribing $4,000 to $5,000 to induce their removal. The industry, or rather a portion of it, was originally established at Albion, at which place a fire destroyed the handle department in 1873, when the entire business was transferred to Miles Grove.

The Novelty Works were started in 1888, being owned respectively by the Novelty Manufacturing Company (limited), and the Keystone Manufacturing Company, and continued until 1892, when the business was removed to Saginaw, Mich. The buildings remain, but are not in use at the time of writing.

The Ideal Foundry was established by Mr. Hanchett in 1890 or '91, and has done a good business.

The village contains an Episcopal, a Presbyterian and a Methodist Church, a fine schoolhouse, a copper tempering works, a hotel—the Lommer House—built by A. M. Osborn, in 1865, and a number of stores and shops. The Lake Shore R. R. has valuable improvements at Miles Grove.

The home of the Miles family, in the valley of Elk creek, near its mouth, about a mile north of west from Miles Grove, is a stately brick mansion. When Judge Miles died, he owned 1,600 acres in one body, extending two miles or more along the lake. He was born in Northumberland county, February 16, 1792, and died March 27, 1868.

The Episcopal church was erected in 1877, mainly by a sum of money left by Mrs. Bell, a daughter of Judge Miles, on a tract of land donated by J. Robert Hall, agent of the latter's estate. The first services of this congregation were held in 1860, but there was no regular rector until 1862.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was built in 1867. It was originally used in part by the Presbyterians. James Sampson donated the land on which the building stands.

The Presbyterian Church was built in the winter of 1855-6, at a cost of $10,000, all but $1,600 of the sum being contributed by Mr. A. Denio. The title to the church property is vested in the trustees of the First Presbyterian congregation of Girard borough, with the condition that at any time the Miles Grove congregation feel able to sustain a separate organization and minister the property is to become their's. For twenty years the pastor of the Girard Church has officiated at Miles Grove, the latter contributing at present about one-third of the sum necessary to his support.

WEST GIRARD.

West Girard is in the valley of Elk creek, after which it was originally named, mostly on the west bank of the stream, about half a mile from the borough of Girard. It was rather an important place in early days, being the site of one of the stage company's stables, and a changing place for their teams. The village then boasted a number of stores, four taverns, two tanneries, an oil mill, distillery, and several smaller establishments, all of which were allowed to run down. It received its worst blow by the building of the canal on the opposite side of the creek, which caused a transfer of the business to the present borough. Its principal establishments now are a grist mill, a planing mill and sash and blind-factory, and a sawmill. The village contains thirty houses, and 135 inhabitants. An iron bridge over Elk creek marks the site of two or three other bridges which have been washed away by the destructive floods of that stream.

BOROUGH OF GIRARD.

[SEE GIRARD TOWNSHIP.]

At the close of the last war with Great Britain, the site of Girard borough was partly included in the farm of John Taylor, whose log house was the only building there. At a later date the land was owned by Daniel Sayre, sr., who purchased from Mr. Taylor. Mr. Sayre sold to Joseph Wells, who erected the first frame building within the borough limits. The original town was on the other side of the creek, now known as West Girard. When the canal was located on the east side of the stream, several parties commenced building on the present site, and it was not long until a town was laid out. The first buildings in the village were near the canal, and the first tavern occupied a site a little west of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1846, the village was incorporated as a borough. Its first officers were: Burgess, Mason Kellogg; Council, John McClure, jr., Leffert Hart, H. McConnell, George H. Cutler; Clerk, L. S. Jones. The census gave Girard a population of 400 in 1850, 616 in 1860, 704 in 1870, 703 in 1880, and 626 in 1890.

Girard occupies a pleasant site along the Ridge road, which constitutes its main street, on high ground overlooking the lake shore plain and the valley of Elk creek, sixteen miles west by public road from Erie, ten east from the Ohio line, two and a half south of the lake and one and three-quarters from the railroad station at Miles Grove, with which it is connected by the old Depot road and Rice avenue. The latter thoroughfare, which was projected by Dan Rice while in the height of his prosperity, was opened in the winter of 1867-68. The old Erie canal passed through the borough by a deep cut. Its route is now mainly occupied by the "Peasley" R. R., of which Girard is an important station.

CHURCHES.

The Methodist Church, which has few superiors in this county, was erected in 1868 at a cost of $30,000. The congregation was organized in 1815, and built its first edifice in 1828.

A Presbyterian Church, to which a graveyard was attached, was erected in 1835, the congregation having been organized May 16th of that year. This building was remodeled in 1893, at a cost of $8,500.

St. John's Catholic congregation was organized about the year 1853, and soon after put up a church building. The congregation was attended by visiting priests for a number of years. A regular pastor was supplied in 1870, who also has charge of the congregation at North East. Rev. Father Briody is the present pastor in charge.

H^m_n J. Rindernrechts

The Universalist society was organized some years previous to 1852, in which year they erected their church building.

St. Luthannis congregation of the Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized in 1866, and purchased the ground and building occupied by the Methodist Episcopal society prior to that date, in 1869.

CEMETERY AND SCHOOLS.

The Girard cemetery is a tract of ten acres, containing many costly monuments. The organization was chartered in March, 1861, and the property was laid out the same year.

The Girard Academy was built by subscription in 1850, and opened in 1851. It had a students' boarding house attached, and for awhile was very successful. The property was transferred to the school board about twenty-five years ago, and has since been occupied by the common schools of the borough. The latter were graded in the winter of 1872-3.

The first school that was held in Girard township was taught in what is now Girard borough in the year 1809. In 1827, the village school was held on the lower floor of a log building that stood a little to the rear of the site of the drug store of Smith & Lowe.

HOTELS AND FACTORIES.

The hotels of Girard borough are the Avenue House, finished in 1879, and the Rhodes House, which has been in operation forty years. Girard has been unfortunate in the matter of hotel buildings, the old Girard House, which occupied the site of the present Avenue House, and the Central House of Joshua Evans, which stood on the east side of the public square, having both been burned. In the days of stage coaching on the Ridge road, the locality was a famous one for taverns, there having been no less than eight, within two miles, in 1835.

The wrench factory was built in 1874 by a corporation under the State laws, with a capital of $8,000, the people of Girard subscribing half the stock. It failed in 1875, and was purchased at sheriff's sale by C. F. Rockwell, W. C. Culbertson, C. F. Webster and R. S. Battles, forming a limited partnership.

Theo. J. Ely's novelty works started in 1892, using the old furniture factory as a basis.

The establishment burned in the summer of 1894, and was rebuilt and enlarged the same year.

PUBLIC SQUARE, MONUMENTS, ETC.

The public square was a gift from Joseph Wells, when the town was laid out. Its chief object of interest is the soldiers' monument, a handsome shaft of marble, designed by the Chicago sculptor, Leonard Volk, inclosed by an iron railing, and dedicated November 1, 1865. It cost $6,000, the whole of which was paid by Dan Rice. The principal speakers at its dedication were Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, Gov. Todd, of Ohio, and Gen. Alfred B. McCalmont, of Franklin. It is claimed that this was the first monument erected to the memory of the Union soldiers.

The Dan Rice property, on the north side of the square, embraced two and a half acres, inclosed on three sides by a heavy brick wall, and ornamented with statuary, walks, arbors, trees, shrubbery and flowers. The mansion was a large frame building. Within the inclosure was a fine conservatory and a brick barn which cost $26,000. The cost of the wall around the grounds was $3,000. Dan Rice's first purchase in Girard was in 1853, when he bought the original premises from Col. John McClure for $18,000. In 1856 he moved there, and from that date continued to add to his purchase until he had possession of the entire square, at a cost of about $60,000. He lost the property through financial embarrassment and it is now owned by Carl Jones, who tore down the old house and built another.

PUBLIC MEN.

Girard borough and township have furnished a goodly proportion of the public men of the county. Among the number have been George H. Cutler, State Senator from 1873 to 1875, Speaker of the Senate, then the second highest office in the Commonwealth, from the close of the session in 1874, and President pro tem. during the session of 1875; W. C. Culbertson, elected to Congress in 1888; Theo. Ryman, member of Assembly in 1848; Leffert Hart in 1849; Henry Teller in 1860 and 1861; George P. Rea in 1868 and 1869; H. A. Traut, from 1883 to 1885; Myron Hutchinson, Associate Judge, from 1841 to 1850; James Miles, from 1851 to 1856; S. E. Woodruff, District Attorney from 1853 to 1856, and United States Register in Bankruptcy for this Congressional District from 1867 to 1879; U. P. Rossiter, elected District Attorney in 1893; George W. Evans, elected Sheriff in 1894; Calvin L. Randall, elected Register and Recorder in 1884 and '87; James C. Marshall, Prothonotary from January 14, 1839, to November 16, 1839, and Samuel Perley from 1851 to 1854; Jeremiah Davis, County Treasurer from December 1, 1856, to December 23, 1858; L. T. Fisk, County Superintendent of Public Schools from 1866 to 1869; Myron Hutchinson, County Commissioner from 1828 to 1830, and James Miles from 1835 to 1838; D. W. Hutchinson, Mercantile Appraiser in 1877, and J. M. Ball in 1894; Wm. Biggers, Jury Commissioner from January 1, 1880, to January 1, 1888; George Platt, County Surveyor many years and present City Engineer of Erie; John Hay, Director of the Poor from 1853 to '57, and Wm. Hopkins from 1890 to 1893; James Miles, County Auditor from 1840 to 1843, and Philip Osborn from 1864 to 1867. Senator and Secretary of the Interior Teller, of Colorado, was a resident of Girard township while a boy. D. W. Hutchinson was Register of the United States Land Office at Bismarck, Dak., during the first Cleveland administration, and Marcus N. Cutler held a clerkship at Harrisburg during a long period. T. C. Wheeler was United States Assistant Assessor for nine years, being appointed under President Lincoln. Mr. Osborn, above named, was Keeper of the Marine Hospital at Erie for several years, ending in 1883. Mr. Marshall moved to Erie in 1844 and Mr. Woodruff about 1872.

NEWSPAPERS AND BANKS.

The first newspaper was the Girard Free Press, started about 1845, by S. D. Carpenter, who took Horace Greeley's advice, went West and became a prominent politician. The Express, its successor, was purchased by T. C. Wheeler and William S. Finch, November 7, 1854, and the name was changed to the Republican. It bore the novel motto, "Independent on all subjects, rabid on none." In 1855 Samuel Perley moved to Girard from Erie, merged the material of his city office with that of the Republican, and conducted a paper for several years. From that date several futile efforts were made to establish a paper until 1867, when the Cosmopolite entered the arena as the successor of the Crisis, which had been founded at Conneautville by T. G. Fields, under the auspices of Dan Rice, to advocate his election to the Presidency. Charles Stow became editor of the Cosmopolite, and gave it a reputation the country over. After a brief suspension, it was bought by Jacob Bender & Bro., in the spring of 1872. In the spring of 1873 Charles Bender went out of the concern, but returned in 1876, and in 1880 purchased the interest of his brother. The office passed into the hands of Murphy & Nichols November 28, 1889, who have conducted the paper since.

The first bank was organized in 1859 by R. S. Battles and C. F. Webster. The firm dissolved in 1876 and Mr. Battles has continued the business. The First National Bank was organized in 1863, and kept up until its charter expired. Mr. Battles was cashier during the whole period of its existence, managing both the National and private banks.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The secret societies are: Lake Erie Lodge, No. 347, F. & A. M., a Harugari lodge, a Mystic Circle and a lodge of the United Workmen.

The old State line passes through the borough, running within six feet of the north-east corner of the Avenue House.

The adoption of Girard as the residence of Dan Rice had the effect of drawing other caterers to the public amusement there, and in course of time it became known far and wide as a "show town." Among the famous showmen who made it their residence were Dr. James L. Thayer, who started as an employe of Rice's; Charles W. Noyes, one of his pupils; Abe Henderson, Agrippa Martin and Seymour Pease, all at one time owners or part owners of circuses. No less than five shows have been organized in the borough, viz.: Dan Rice's, Thayer & Noyes', Rice & Forepaugh's, Anderson & Co.'s and G. R. Spalding & Co.'s. Dan Rice wintered his shows there from 1856 till the spring of 1875.

Henry Ball, Esq., who died on the 12th of March, 1895, was known as one of the oldest Justices of the Peace in Pennsylvania. He was first elected in 1852, and held the office from that date until his death, a period of forty-three years.

The Robert Wilcox Library, one of the most creditable features of the borough, owes its origin to the liberality of Robert Wilcox, a native of Girard, who bequeathed $5,000 for the purpose. The building was dedicated on the 3d of May, 1895.

Denman Thompson, the celebrated comedian, was born near the borough of Girard on the 15th of October, 1833, of New Hampshire stock. His most famous part was in the play of the "Old Homestead," which he partially wrote, and which had a degree of popular favor second only to "Uncle Tom's Cabin." He closed his theatrical career in New York in 1895, at the age of 62, after being on the stage nearly forty-five years.

BOROUGH OF LOCKPORT.

[SEE GIRARD TOWNSHIP.]

The postoffice name of Lockport is Platea. The town started about 1840, during the construction of the canal, and derives its name from the fact that there were twenty-eight locks within a distance of two miles. These had an average lift of six and one-half feet, and were used to overcome the rise from the lake shore plain to the valley of Conneaut creek. The borough is about four and a half miles from Girard and four from Albion. The town owes its origin to the enterprise of Silas Pratt, who had a contract for building the locks and who owned the land. Foreseeing that a town must grow up along the locks, he started a store and built a church, hotel and several houses. Mr. Pratt failed in 1848 or 1849, and was prevented from fully carrying out his projects. The canal caused a considerable trade to spring up, and the town was once quite a flourishing place. Ezekiel Page, who invented a way of turning the blade and handle of an oar together, erected a building four stories high and 180 feet long by eighty wide. He became embarrassed about 1855, went South and was found dead in the woods of Florida. The factory building was moved to Erie after the war. A fire in 1871 swept away one hotel; some two years later the foundry was burned; and in 1876 the second and last hotel fell a prey to the same destructive element.

Lockport was incorporated as a borough in 1870, taking in about 1700 acres, of which the chief portion is farming land. Its population then was estimated at 500, but had been reduced to 345 in 1880, and was only 240 in 1890. The territory included in the borough limits was originally a portion of Elk Creek township, and after the organization of Girard township, formed its southern central part.

The eleven mile level of the canal commenced at the head of the locks at Lockport, and extended to Spring Corners, in Crawford county. Crooked creek, which empties into Lake Erie in Springfield township, rises in or near Lockport borough.

The borough contains two churches—the Disciple and the Methodist Episcopal—both built in 1878.

The Disciple Church was organized in the winter of 1877. No regular service was held for some years, but an effort is being made to revive the congregation.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation was organized about the year 1843, and soon thereafter a church building was erected about a quarter of a mile west of Lockport. This was torn down and partially used in the construction of the present edifice.

The P., S. and L. E. R. R. runs through and has a station in the borough.

The town has a cheese factory (established in 1876), a planing mill, a sawmill and a cider mill. A tannery was started by Wm. Aldrich in 1848, and an oar factory by Mr. Rowley in 1860, both of which have gone down.

CHAPTER VIII.

GREENE TOWNSHIP.

GREENE, one of the original sixteen townships, was known as Beaver Dam until 1840, when the present name was adopted in honor of Gen. Nathaniel Greene, of Revolutionary memory. Its western boundary has been twice changed—first, by adding a piece to McKean, and second, by the erection of Summit in 1854. Greene township is bounded on the north by Mill Creek and Harbor Creek, on the east by Greenfield and Venango, on the south by Waterford and on the west by Summit and Mill Creek. Its greatest extent is seven miles from north to south, and six from east to west. It contained 140 inhabitants in 1820, 443 in 1830, 1,081 in 1840, 1,542 in 1850, 1,450 in 1860, 1,395 in 1870, 1,531 in 1880 and 1,511 in 1890. The township is divided, for election purposes, into the East and West districts.

EARLIEST SETTLERS.

The earliest settlers in Greene township were Peter Himebaugh and Conrad Wine-man, two Pennsylvania Germans, who took up lands in 1800 along LeBoeuf creek and remained there the balance of their lives. About 1802 Jacob and Samuel Brown, Thomas Bunnell and John and Ambrose Coover settled in the LeBoeuf valley. In the spring of 1802 Thomas Hinton, with five sons and two daughters, made their homes in the northeast. The Browns built mills on the creek and for a long period supplied a good portion of the timber used at Erie. In the Welsh settlement the Hintons were followed by the Joneses, Knoyles, Morgans, Wilkines and others of their countrymen. From 1804 on a number of persons went in and left, and the tide of emigration did not commence again until 1816. Between that year and 1818 a colony of New England people located in the township, among whom may be named Cyril Drown and sons, Martin Hayes and sons, Isaac and David Church, Benjamin Gunnison, Roger Root, David Edwards and S. T. Rockwood. Weed's Corners was settled in 1828 by William B. Weed and William Yaple, who went there when the country south of Hayes's to Lake Pleasant was a continuous forest. The first German emigration was in 1833, when the Hirts, Pringles, Kellars and others settled on and near the Wattsburg road. Mr. Kuhl and sons removed from Mill Creek in 1835. The Irish began settling in the township about 1836, mostly on the Kuhl road. Among their number the Barrys, Gallaghers, Morrisons, McManuses, Cosgroves and McGinnesses were first on the ground. H. L. Pinney bought a farm in Greene in 1843 and moved there the next year. E. O. Pinney first rented a farm in 1843, and purchased in 1846; and Martin Pinney made the township his home in 1851. Griffith Hinton, one of the sons of Thomas, above referred to, died at the residence of his son-in-law, Sumner Bemis, on the 15th of March, 1880, at the advanced age of 96 years. The Hinton family came from Wales in 1801, but did not settle in this county till the next year.

LANDS, STREAMS AND MILLS.

The township is one of the most elevated in the county, containing the dividing ridge from which the waters of Mill creek, Walnut creek, Four-Mile creek and Six-Mile creek flow into the lake, and of LeBoeuf creek to the south. The main body of the land is clay and gravel, best for grazing. There is a good valley along LeBoeuf creek, in the southwest, ranging from half a mile to a mile in width. The value of land is from twenty to forty dollars an acre. A considerable area of forest still exists, and the township may be said to be the main supply point of Erie for firewood.

The township postoffices are: Boscobel, in the Wales settlement; East Greene, at Bogus Corners; Hamot, at St. Boniface Church; Clipper, in the Church and Tate neighborhood; and West Greene, at the settlement of the same name.

Le Bœuf creek rises on the south edge of the township, and empties into French creek below Waterford; a branch of Mill creek starts in the northwest; Four-Mile creek about a mile northeast from St. Boniface; Six-Mile creek a short distance south of Wales, and Walnut creek, near the Greene and Summit line, a little northeast of Whiteford's Corners. The great gully of Four-Mile creek begins nearly at the head of the stream, about three and a half miles south of the Harbor creek line, and continues to the crossing of the Station road, below Cooper's mill.

The mills of the township are the saw and feed-mill of Miles Brown, on Le Bœuf creek; Kane's sawmill, near the north boundary; Ripley's sawmill, back of St. Boniface Church, both on Four-Mile creek; a sawmill on Six-Mile creek, north of Wales; and one near F. & M. Cook's. The first and only gristmill in the township was built by Jacob Brown, early in the century, and ran until 1872, when it burned down.

COMMON ROADS AND RAILROADS.

The leading thoroughfares are the Wattsburg plank road; the old road to Wattsburg by way of Phillipsville, which branches off from the plank road at the Seigel place; the Lake Pleasant road; the road from Harbor Creek to Waterford; through West Greene; the old Shunpike, from Augustus Graham's, in Summit, to Waterford, and the road from the Shunpike to West Greene. The Wattsburg plank was completed in 1853, and given up as a toll road in the spring of 1865. The Lake Pleasant road was opened from Erie to the Martin Hayes place in the winter of 1821-22, and extended to French creek in the winter of 1826-27, through what was, for a good part of the way, a dense wilderness. Both of these roads traverse the entire width of the township from northwest to southeast. The Shunpike was laid out in 1827-28, to avoid the Waterford turnpike, growing out of a quarrel between its owners and the stage company over the rates of toll. The Harbor Creek and Wattsburg road was opened in 1810, and the one which branches off from the Shunpike has been in existence forty to fifty years.

The only railroad in Greene is the Philadelphia and Erie, which crosses about a mile of its southwest corner, between Summit and Waterford. It has no station in the township, and the nearest stopping places are at Belle Valley, Langdon's and Jackson's.

HAMLETS, CHURCHES, ETC.

Greene township has no incorporated towns, and no settlements that can strictly be called by the name of villages. There are, however, several thickly settled localities which have been honored with special names, such as West Greene, St. Boniface, Wales, Bogus Corners, Weed's Corners and Six-Mile Creek.

Wales, in the northeast, on the Venango line, derives its name from being first settled by Welsh, of whom the Hintons were the pioneers. The district known as Wales, includes a Presbyterian and Methodist Church, a school-house and a few farmhouses. The Presbyterian congregation was organized in 1849, by Rev. G. W. Cleveland, its first pastor, and erected a building in 1851 at a cost of $800. A cemetery adjoins the church. The Methodist congregation has been in existence some forty-five years. A creamery was started at Wales about 1891.

St. Boniface is a German settlement on the Wattsburg plank road, seven miles from Erie, which derives its name from the Catholic Church there located. The church was organized in 1857 by Rev. J. A. Oberhofer, with a congregation of some forty families. A building was erected the same year, which burned down in 1867, and the present one was erected in 1873, at a cost of $4,000. Meantime a separation took place between the German and English-speaking members of the congregation, which led to the construction of another edifice by the latter in 1870. This building, known as St. Peter's Church, was subsequently removed to Kuh's Hill, where it has a graveyard attached. A parsonage and a graveyard are connected with St. Boniface's Church. The parochial school, which has an average attendance of eighty, is in charge of the Benedictine Nuns.

Bogus Corners are at the intersection of a cross-road with the Wattsburg plank, not far from the center of the township. The postoffice was established about 1829. Half a mile west are a church and graveyard. The building was erected in 1857. It is known as St. Paul's United Lutheran and Presbyterian Church, and the congregation was organized several years previous. In 1885 the church was rebuilt at a cost of $1,200, C. R. Gray being the contractor.

Weed's Corners, at the intersection of the road from West Greene with the Lake Pleasant road, is nothing more than a few farmhouses. It derives its name from William B. Weed, who was the first settler.

West Greene consists of a small collection of buildings at the meeting of two roads in the south part of the township. The cheese factory was opened May 12, 1873. The Methodist Episcopal Church at West Greene was organized in 1827. The early meetings were held in dwellings and schoolhouses until about 1848, when a frame church was built. It was superseded in the autumn of 1883 by a new structure, erected on the site of the old church.

Six-Mile Creek is a small settlement about a mile north of Wales.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

The public officers furnished by Greene township are Capt. Thomas Wilkins, Collector of the Port of Erie from 1861 to 1869; Jonas Gunnison, a prominent Erie attorney and a member of the Assembly in 1859; Rodney Cole, County Commissioner from 1851 to 1854; William B. Weed, from 1867 to 1870, and Albert B. Gunnison, from 1875 to 1881; Ora P. Gunnison, Deputy Sheriff for a few months; Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for a long term; Acting Collector of Internal Revenue from October 8 to November 8, 1875; Mercantile Appraiser in 1879, and Clerk to the County Commissioners, from 1881 to 1883; Horace L. Pinney, Jury Commissioner from 1870 to 1873; E. O. Pinney, Trustee of Erie Academy from 1875 to 1878, and William E. Hayes, County Auditor from 1874 to 1880.

COMMON SCHOOLS.

Soon after 1825, a schoolhouse was built on lot 184, in the east part of the township. A second was erected about two miles farther south, and a third was built on the farm of William B. Weed, both at an early date.

Lake Pleasant Independent School District embraces the southwest part of Greene township, and the adjoining corners of Venango, Waterford and Amity.

CHAPTER IX.

GREENFIELD TOWNSHIP.

GREENFIELD is one of the sixteen townships established by the Legislature when the county was created. It is bounded on the north by North East township, on the east by Chautauqua county, New York, on the south by Venango, and on the west by Harbor Creek and Greene. The boundary lines are all straight, excepting a jog of about an eighth of a mile, commencing at the Prindle place, on the west side, and extending to the Plumb farm on the south. As originally formed, Greenfield was considerably larger than now, a long, wedge-shaped strip having been taken off of its northern part in 1841 and added to North East. The township as thus reduced is about seven miles in length from east to west and about four and three-quarters in breadth from north to south. Greenfield had a population of 281 in 1820, 664 in 1830, 862 in 1840, 731 in 1850, 880 in 1860, 1,089 in 1870, 1,020 in 1880 and 1,432 in 1890, being one of the few rural districts that increased during the last census period.

The surface of the township is mainly hilly; but there are some fine flats along French creek and upon a tributary of that stream which comes in from New York at the southeast corner. The valley lands range in width from a half mile to a mile. They produce corn, oats, wheat and all kinds of fruit, except peaches, but are much troubled with frosts. The hill lands, which are less affected by the frosts than the valleys, are a clay loam, and yield good crops of corn, oats and potatoes; but are best adapted for grass and grazing. The loftiest elevation is at the Brown farm in the southwest. About half a mile southeast from that, in Venango, is said to be the highest point in Erie county. Land ranges in price from twenty to forty dollars an acre.

PIONEER SETTLEMENTS.

Greenfield was one of the first townships to be settled. Among those who were impressed with its advantages was Judah Colt, a native of Lyme, Conn., who came on in 1795. He made the Population Company, which claimed most of the lands in the county, an offer of one dollar an acre for thirty thousand acres off of the east end of the Triangle, which they declined. They were so much pleased with his energy and shrewdness, however, that they appointed him their agent for Erie county. Mr. Colt took up a permanent residence in Greenfield in 1797, having been preceded by Elisha and Enoch Marvin (his brothers-in-law), Cyrus Robinson, Henry and Dyer Loomis, Charles Allen, Joseph Berry, John and William Wilson, James Moore, Joseph Webster, Philo Barker, Timothy Tuttle, Silas and William Smith, Joseph Shad-duck, John Daggett and John Andrews. All of these were hardy New England people. Mr. Colt established his headquarters at what came to be known as Colt's Station, around or near which most of the emigrants settled. The same year, Mr. Colt cut a road through from the lake at Freepport to the Station (the first in the county after the old French road), as an avenue for supplies, which were brought by lake from Buffalo. This road was extended in 1798 to French creek, near what is now "Little Hope," or Greenfield village, where Mr. Bissell had established a landing, and later in the season Mr. Colt and William Miles continued it to the forks of French creek (now Wattsburg). The eastern road from North East to Wattsburg was opened about 1800; the one from Colt's Station to Waterford, by way of Phillipsville, in 1804 or 1806; and the Station road, from Wesleyville, by way of Colt's Station to Mayville, in 1813.

Mr. Colt brought his wife on in May, 1798. In 1803, James Taylor, with wife and one child, from Rockbridge county, Virginia, settled in the township, about two miles north-east of Colt's Station. Here they remained until 1812, when they removed to New York. Henry Taylor reached the township about the same time, but changed to North East several years later. Nehemiah Finn, from Orange county, New York, located on the State line in the spring of 1834.

The inducement that took Mr. Colt and his colony to Greenfield was the belief that the hill lands were preferable to those of the lake shore, which were densely wooded, swampy and well-nigh impenetrable. In a short time, Mr. Colt saw his error, and in 1804, he removed to Erie, where he remained the balance of his life. He died suddenly October 11, 1832, aged 71 years and 5 months. On Mr. Colt's departure, the greater portion of the colony left also, scattering in various directions, and most of them taking up some of the choicest lands in the county. Enoch Marvin became the company's agent in the Beaver valley, where he died and was buried. His brother Elisha was one of the few who remained, and he and his wife both died at Colt's Station, the first in 1829 and the second in 1858. Their son, William E., continued to reside at Colt's Station till the decease of his mother, when he made his home in North East.

Col. Joseph Selden opened a store at the Station in 1820, which was continued for some years by other parties. Morrow B. Lowry clerked in this store when a boy of 16, and B. F. Sloan spent a portion of his youthful years in the locality. A tavern was established about sixty years ago, and kept up till 1860 or 1865. The first celebration in Erie county of the Nation's Independence was near Colt's Station, on the 4th of July, 1797. The first military company in Erie county was organized in Greenfield, in 1801, with Elisha Marvin as captain.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The chief stream of Greenfield is the West branch of French creek, which receives many small tributaries in the township. It heads in or near Findley's lake, about two miles from the State line in Chautauqua county, and running across Greenfield from the northeast to the middle, and through the entire width of Venango from north to south, joins the East branch in Amity, just below Wattsburg, after a course of eighteen or twenty miles. The headwaters of Six-Mile, Twelve-Mile, Sixteen-Mile, and of a branch of Twenty-Mile creek, are all in Greenfield. They have their rise on the ridge north of the West branch of French creek, and not more than a mile or two from that stream. Some of the tributaries of the West branch head within a few rods of the sources of the lake shore creeks.

The first sawmill was built by Leverett Bissell, at or near Little Hope, in 1799, being among the earliest in the county. Another was put up in 1824, by John Whiteside, in the south part of the township.

The postoffices are: Greenfield, at the village of the same name; Hornby, at Shattuck's Corners; Delhil, near the Union schoolhouse; and Nasby, on the Station road.

The first Protestant religious services in Erie county were held at Colt's Station on July 2, 1797. About thirty persons assembled from Greenfield, North East and Venango, to whom a sermon was read by Mr. Colt. The old graveyard, on the Erie and Mayville road, a little east of the Station, was the earliest (1801) of which any record has been preserved in the county.

VILLAGE, CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The only settlement in the township which approaches the dignity of a village is Greenfield, on the West branch of French creek, just off from the middle road between North East and Wattsburg. The place is better known by its nickname of "Little Hope." The site of the place was taken up about 1796, by Leverett Bissell, on a soldier's right of 400 acres. He built a sawmill and a landing on the creek, where bateaux came up loaded with supplies from the lower country. The village embraces a feedmill, sawmill, two cheese factories, two stores, blacksmith shop, creamery, cheese box factory, a shingle mill, schoolhouse and twenty or thirty houses. There is a cemetery just at the outskirts of the village.

The M. E. Church, at the junction of the Wattsburg and Wildman roads, near Little Hope, was organized in 1836, and erected its house of worship in 1850, to which a parsonage was added in 1868.

The Free Will Baptist congregation was organized in 1881, and put up their church, which stands about three-fourths of a mile north of Shadduck's Corners, in the same year. The dedicatory sermon was preached in the spring of 1882.

The United Brethren congregation was organized about 1875. Their building, known as "The People's Church," was erected in the Walling neighborhood in the year 1893 or '94. Before that they held service in the schoolhouses of the vicinity.

There was a school in the eastern part of the township at an early date. One was in existence in 1816, two miles east of the present Miller building, in what was known as the Wilson schoolhouse. School was taught during the winter of 1820-21 in a log house at Colt's Station. The township adopted the common school system soon after the general law on the subject was enacted.

IN GENERAL.

Greenfield township is without a railroad, the nearest station being at North East.

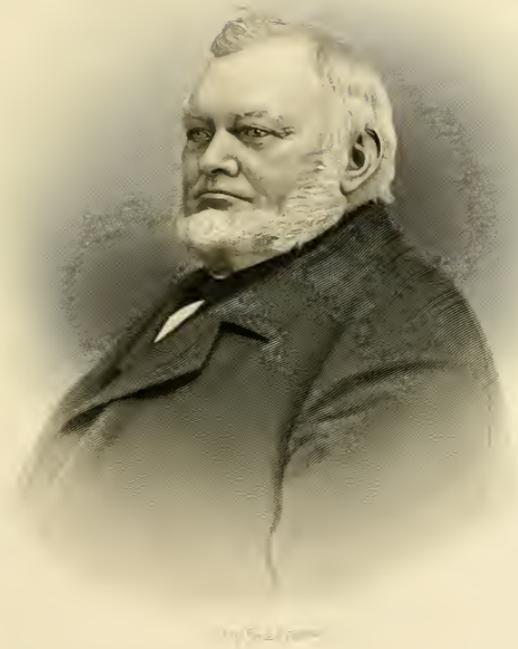

The main common roads are the east road between North East and Wattsburg, and the Middle road, through Colt's Station, between the same points; the Station road from Wesleyville to Mayville; and the road from Greene past the Methodist Episcopal Church and Greenfield Village to Findley's lake. All of these were laid out on a straight line, but had to diverge in order to surmount the ridges.

The State and county officers from the township have been: County Auditor, Mark Baldwin, 1833 to 1836; County Commissioner, William E. Marvin, 1845 to 1848; William Parker, 1853 to 1856; Assembly, J. Ross Raymond, elected in 1892 and '94.

The first marriage in the township was that of Joseph Shadduck to Betsy Willard, and the first child born was their son Ira.

The first frame barn was built by Joseph Shadduck about 1815.

The third oldest man of whom there is any record in Erie county, was James Davis, of Greenfield—the very oldest having been Michael Hare, who died in Waterford in 1843, aged over 115 years. Davis resided in Greenfield at a huddle of cabins known as Log City, a mile or two toward North East from Colt's Station. When about 100 years old he moved to Michigan, where he died in the 105th year of his age.

The East Greenfield cheese factory at Ashton's Corners, commenced business in March, 1895.

CHAPTER X.

HARBOR CREEK TOWNSHIP.

THOMAS REES, the first person who located land in Harbor Creek township, took up a large tract long known as the Rees Reserve, in 1796. He did not become a resident of the township, however, until some years after. The first actual settlers were William Saltsman, Amasa Prindle and Andrew Elliott, who went in in 1797. These were followed by Hugh McCann and Alex. Brewster in 1800; by Thomas Moorhead, John Riblet and sons, John, Christian and Jacob Ebersole and the Backus family about 1801, and by Ezekiel and Benjamin Chambers in 1802. Mr. Moorhead's father, and brothers John, Robert and George, came in at intervals running from 1802 to 1806. Robert Scott, Thomas Greenwood, Robert Jack, John Shattuck, Aaron Hoag, Henry Clark, Andrew Culbertson, Thomas Bunnell and the Caldwell brothers were among the earliest settlers. Several of these were from the eastern portion of the State; the others were mainly from New England and New York. Mr. Saltsman was from Northumberland county; the Riblets and Ebersoles from Lancaster county; Mr. Clark from New England and Mr. Elliott from Ireland. The Riblets and Ebersoles were the first of the "Pennsylvania-Dutch" stock that settled in the county. A man by the name of Jack was on the Jesse Ebersole place in 1802. Dr. Ira Sherwin made his location in the township in 1825. William Henry and brother settled in Mill Creek in 1808, and changed from there to Harbor Creek. Mr. Brewster cleared thirty acres, which he abandoned and moved to Erie.

Sarah Prindle was the first female child born in the township, in 1799, and William Clark the first male child, in 1801. Thomas Rees was the first Justice, and Thomas Greenwood and Myron Backus held the same office at an early date.

At one period there were quite a number of negroes in the township, mostly descendants of three slaves who were taken in by Thomas Rees. To two of these, Robert McConnell and James Titus, upon reaching the twenty-eighth year of their age, when they became free by the emancipation act, Mr. Rees gave fifty acres of land near Gospel Hill. The Moorhead family also brought in a slave, known as Caesar, who was emancipated as above, but continued to live with his former master until his death.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

The township was one of the original sixteen established, and has retained the same limits to this day. Harbor Creek is bounded on the north by the lake, on the east by North East and Greenfield, on the south by Greene and on the west by Mill Creek. It has a frontage on the lake of about seven miles, its east line is a trifle longer, its south line is about four and a half miles in length, and its west line very nearly five miles. The township is one of the wealthiest in the county, and its citizens are not surpassed as a moral, intelligent, church-going people. It maintains unusually good schools, has many neat houses and barns, and its farms, as a rule, are under a fine state of improvement. Of late years, the farmers have given much attention to the culture of fruits, berries, grapes and melons. The First and Second ridges extend across the entire southern portion of the township from east to west. On the First ridge and back of it, on the second plain, the land continues quite good. From the Second ridge south, it is broken, cold and clayey, being better suited for grazing than grain.

The township contains three villages—Wesleyville, Harbor Creek and Moorheadville—each of which is a station on the Lake Shore and Nickel Plate railroads. These are also the postoffices of the township. The population has been as follows: 555, in 1820; 1,104, in 1830; 1,843, in 1840; 2,084, in 1850; 2,033, in 1860; 1,974, in 1870; 1,781, in 1880, and 1,660, in 1890. The township is divided into the East and West districts, for election purposes.

STREAMS AND GULLIES.

The streams are Four Silx, Eight and Twelve-Mile creeks and Elliott's run, all emptying into the lake, and McConnell run, a branch of Four-Mile creek. Four and Six-Mile creeks head in Greene, and Twelve-Mile creek on the edge of North East and Greenfield. All the rest are wholly within the township. Elliott's run and Eight-Mile creek are both small streams; the first flows through or near Harbor Creek village, and the second is the next stream east. McConnell's run joins Four-Mile creek near the foot of the great gully. It received its name from a mulatto, who built a cabin at an early day on the bank of the stream.

The great gully or gorge of Four-Mile creek, commences in Greene township, and extends to very near the bridge of the Station road, about half a mile south of Wesleyville, gradually becoming shallower as it reaches its northern terminus. Its length is about six miles and it varies in depth from fifty to a 150 feet. The third sawmill in the county was erected by Thomas Rees, near the mouth of Four-Mile creek, on the Crowley place, in 1798, for the Population Company. In the same year, Eliphalet Beebe constructed the sloop Washington, of thirty-five tons, on the shore of the lake, near the mill, for the use of the same company, being the first sailing vessel built on the south shore of Lake Erie. The gorge of Six-Mile creek extends to within a mile or a mile and a half of the Buffalo road, and its windings must be nearly five miles long. The deepest part of the gorge is at the Clark settlement, where it is but little short of 150 feet deep, with an average width of not more than 100 feet.

MILLS AND FACTORIES.

The mills of the township are the old Cooper, near the foot of the gully of Four-Mile creek; the old Neeley gristmill, at the mouth of Twelve-Mile creek, now owned by Dietley & Son; a sawmill on the same stream, about half a mile south; and Dodge's handle, shingle and sawmill, and Troop's cider and feedmill, at Harbor Creek station.

A small gristmill was erected in 1800 by James Foulk, at the cascade of Six-Mile creek, near its mouth, but was only kept up a year or two. Neeley's mill was established in 1802 by Captain Daniel Dobbins and James Foulk. The mill fell into the hands of Joseph Neeley in 1816, who did a prosperous business until 1841. From that time the mill was run by his son-in-law, Gen. John W. McLane, until the outbreak of the war, when it was sold by Mr. Neeley. Since then it has changed proprietors several times. The old Cooper mill was once a famous landmark of the lake shore region. William Saltsman, first built a sawmill at this point in 1815, and added a gristmill in 1826. These afterward became the property of William Cooper, sr. Mr. Cooper bought the property in 1839, and rebuilt the mills in 1850. The mill of the Messrs. Dodge was built in the spring of 1870. It is run by steam, which is partially created by the gas from a well on the premises. Troop's cider and feed-mill was started about 1878. The building used as a barn, on the north side of the road, on the Joseph McCarter farm, was once a gristmill, the power of which was furnished by Elliott's run. The first cargo of flour and pork shipped to New York from Erie county was taken through the Erie canal by Joseph Neeley in 1826. The flour was made at the mill near the mouth of Twelve-Mile creek.

RAILROADS, COMMON ROADS, ETC.

The Lake Shore and Nickel Plate railroads pass through the whole width of Harbor Creek township from east to west, and the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. runs through about a half of its western portion in a semi-circular direction at the gully of Four-Mile creek. The first two have stations at Wesleyville, Harbor Creek and Moorheadville. The last has a flag station at Shannon's Crossing.

The main public roads are the Buffalo and the Lake, in the north portion, crossing the township from Mill Creek to North East, and the Station road, commencing at Wesleyville and running in a general southeastern course into Greenfield. The Lake road extends through the township at a distance of a quarter to a half mile from the water's edge. The Buffalo road runs at an average distance of a mile and a half south of the lake. The Station road was laid out through Colt's Station to Mayville, N. Y., about 1813.

Near the close of the last century the State of Pennsylvania made a donation of 2,000 acres of land in the newly purchased Triangle to Gen. William Irvine for his services in the Revolutionary war, giving him the privilege of making his own selection. In 1795 he took up a mile along the lake from Brawley's old tavern to the Greenwood schoolhouse, embracing the mouth of Six-Mile creek and running back a proportionate distance. In 1830 Gen. Callender Irvine, son of William, had 800 acres surveyed on both sides of the Buffalo road and sold it off, reserving the water-power, which was still regarded as of great value. About 1848 the balance of the reserve was disposed of by Dr. William A. Irvine, son of Callender.

VILLAGES.

The village of Wesleyville is situated about four miles from Central park, in the city of Erie. Of late it has grown considerably, and now numbers between three and four hundred people. Four-Mile creek runs through the village, and the Buffalo road is its main street. The schoolhouse, a fine two-story brick, built in 1894, stands near the center of the village on land donated by Gen. Kilpatrick to the public for that purpose. The Lake Shore and Nickel Plate railroads run just north of the place, and it is the point of intersection of the Station road with the Buffalo road. The alley on the west side of Chaffee & Farnsworth's store is the line between Harbor Creek and Mill Creek townships. Wesleyville was laid out in 1828 by John Shaddock, who owned the farm. He built a gristmill in 1823 and a sawmill two years later, both on the west bank of Four-Mile creek. The place was named Wesleyville after John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. Wesleyville contains a Methodist and a Baptist Church, the first of brick and the second of frame.

The village of Harbor Creek is one of the pleasantest in the county. Besides the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches it contains a hotel, two factories, two stores, a wagon shop, two blacksmith shops and perhaps 100 people. Both the Lake Shore R. R. and Nickel Plate R. R. have stations in the village. The postoffice at Harbor Creek was established about 1832. It is fifteen miles from Erie to North East, and Harbor Creek is exactly midway by the Buffalo road.

Moorheadville, on the Buffalo road, half a mile north of the railroad station of the same name, is not properly a village, but a cluster of neighborly farm residences. The locality received its name from the large number of Moorheads living there. It was first settled by Thomas Moorhead in 1800, who was soon followed by others of the family from the eastern part of the State. The first Sabbath school held in Erie county was established in 1817 at this place by Col. James M. Moorhead and Rev. Mr. Morton. Moorheadville is ten and one-half miles from Erie, and four and one-half from North East by railroad.

CHURCHES.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in Wesleyville was built by Mr. Shaddock in 1828, and rebuilt by the congregation in 1866.

The Baptist congregation in the same village was organized in February, 1891, as a mission connected with the First Baptist Church of Erie. The building was erected in the summer of 1891 and dedicated in May, 1892. The organization became a regular church in 1893.

The land was donated by Dr. Applebee, Rev. W. L. Lemon was the first pastor and W. L. Kelley was Superintendent of the Sunday-school for some time. The property is valued at $5,000.

The Presbyterian congregation at Harbor Creek was organized May 26, 1832, with fifty-eight members set off from the church at North East. The first building was erected half a mile east of the present site, on a piece of ground donated by Judah Colt. It was of brick, and was dedicated in 1834. The present beautiful edifice was built and dedicated in 1871, at a cost of $10,000. There was quite a struggle between Harbor Creek and Moorheadville over the site of the new building, and when the former place was decided upon some of the congregation withdrew and attached themselves to the church at North East. Rev. G. W. Cleveland, who became pastor of the church in 1849, continued until his death in 1893.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in the same village was erected in 1873, on ground donated by Rev. Noah Sullivan, at a cost of about $4,000; it was dedicated December 11 of that year.

The South Harbor Creek Methodist Episcopal Church, in the Walker and McGill neighborhood, is the outgrowth of a class organized in that vicinity at an early day. An early preaching point was at Lowry's Corners, in a schoolhouse, which was the main place of worship until the building of the church in 1841 or 1842.

The United Brethren congregation in the Clark neighborhood was organized in 1856. The building was erected the same year.

Besides the above places, religious services are frequently held in the schoolhouse at Gospel Hill, on the Station road. This place received its name because most of the early citizens were Methodists who were very devoted to their religion. The graveyard on Gospel Hill has been in use for more than seventy years. The first bodies interred were those of two girls who were drowned in Six Mile-creek in 1823.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The county officers from Harbor Creek township have been as follows: Sheriff—John Kilpatrick, October 28, 1855, to October 21, 1858; John W. McLane, October 21, 1858, to November 16, 1861. Register and Recorder and Clerk of the Courts—William P. Trimble, November 10, 1857, to November 19, 1860. Clerk of the Courts—Robert S. Moorhead, elected in 1885 and '88 (also clerk in the Auditor General's office at Harrisburg many years). County Treasurer—James Chambers, January 4, 1853, to January 6, 1855. Clerk of the Courts—Robert S. Moorhead, January 1, 1883, to January 1, 1886 (resident of Erie when elected). County Commissioners—James M. Moorhead, 1827 to 1830; Samuel Low, 1836 to 1840; James Chambers, 1864 to 1867. Directors of the Poor—George W. Walker, 1840 to 1843; Benj. E. Riblet, elected in 1888 and '91. County Surveyor—G. W. F. Sherwin, November 12, 1866, to February 22, 1869. County Auditors—Thomas Rees, 1821 and 1824; James Chambers, 1846; Jesse Ebersole, 1870; William P. Edwards, 1880 to 1883.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL HISTORY.

Early in the century, a school was taught in the barn of Robert Hurst, in the vicinity of Moorheadville. On the Col. Moorhead farm, a half mile east of the Hurst barn, a log schoolhouse was built, where the next school in that settlement was taught. This was too far for the Harbor Creek settlement, which led to the building of another house on the farm of William Wilson, on the Buffalo road, just north of the Lake Shore R. R. In 1825, at Harbor Creek settlement, Miss Elenor Burnett taught a school. Where Wesleyville now is, at a point opposite Kelley's store, a schoolhouse stood as early as 1811 or 1812.

THE OLDEST JUSTICE, ETC.

The venerable James Chambers, who was born in 1805, is the oldest continuous Justice of the Peace in the county, and probably in the State. He was first commissioned by Gov. Ritner in 1837, and has held the office from then to the present time, with the exception of an interval of six years, during which he served a term each as County Treasurer, Auditor and Commissioner. To show their regard for Mr. Chambers, the people re-elected him for another term of five years, in the spring of 1895.

The value of land in Harbor Creek ranges from $150 an acre on the lake shore plain to twenty-five dollars on the high ground south. Several valuable gas wells have been drilled in the township, but most of them have ceased producing except in small quantities.

Grapes, melons, fruits and berries are extensively raised, and the township is one of the main producing sections for the Erie markets. Large quantities are also shipped to the oil regions and to the cities and towns east and west. The raisers of these crops generally co-operate with the North East shippers and cultivators in finding an outside market for their products.

[For an account of the railroad war in Harbor Creek see the General History of Erie County.]

CHAPTER XI.

LEBŒUF TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF MILL VILLAGE.

THE TOWNSHIP OF LEBŒUF received its name from LeBœuf creek, which joins French creek within its limits. It is one of the original townships of the county, and belongs to what is known as "the Southern Tier." LeBœuf is bounded on the north by Waterford, on the east by Union, on the south by Crawford county, and on the west by Washington. The township lines are all straight except two slight variations in the northern boundary, and a jog or handle about a half mile square at the northeast corner, extending into Waterford. LeBœuf is six and one-half miles long from east to west, by four and one-half wide from north to south. The population was 505 in 1820, 554 in 1830, 876 in 1840, 990 in 1850, 1,483 in 1860, 1,743 in 1870, 1,420 in 1880, and 1,215 in 1890. The postoffices are LeBœuf, on the P. and E. R. R., and Mystic, in the Waterhouse settlement.

FIRST WHITE INHABITANTS.

The first lands were selected in LeBœuf township in 1794, by Capt. Robert King, who took up 400 acres at the present Ford bridge. Returning to his home in Lycoming county, he brought his family along in the spring of 1795. When he reached LeBœuf, he found William and Thomas Black located on the next tract east. John R. Black, son of William, was the first white child born in Erie county. This event took place on the 29th of August, 1795. In 1797, the little colony was increased by the arrival of Francis Isherwood, with a son and daughter, and of James, Robert and Adam Pollock. William Mallory located in 1801, and John Clemens, James Biggers and Philip Gregory in 1802. Mr. Biggers came from Fayette and Mr. Gregory from Berks county. Among other early arrivals were James Weston, David Boyd and Mathias Himebaugh. Of the emigrants who entered the township about the beginning of the century many left, and a new set came in between 1815 and 1820, the descendants of whom generally remain. The bulk of these were from New England and New York. Between 1825 and 1830, a number of Pennsylvania Germans from Lehigh county settled on the banks of French creek, including the Burgers and others. Capt. King, the pioneer of the township, had been an officer in the Revolutionary war. Mr. Isherwood, like Capt. King, came first to locate a tract, accompanied by a son and daughter, and went back the next winter to his old home in Lycoming county for the purpose of bringing his wife, leaving his children to keep the claim good. William Miles, the founder of Union City, built a log storehouse at an early day at the mouth of the South branch, where he landed provisions and other supplies brought up from Pittsburg by flatboats and canoes.

CREEKS, MILLS AND BRIDGES.

The chief streams of the township are French creek proper, the South branch and LeBœuf creek. The South branch comes in from Union at the south line of the Conrad farm, having a course of but little more than a mile within the township. French creek proper enters from Waterford on the Moravian grant, in the northeast corner of the township. The two unite a few rods below the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. bridge. From there the united stream meanders to the west, across the northern portion of the township, until the junction with LeBeuf creek, when it makes an abrupt turn and flows in a general southerly course to Crawford county. LeBeuf creek comes in from Waterford and joins French creek at the David Boyd place. The Indian name of French creek was Toranadakon or Innungah, the latter of which was corrupted by the French into Venango or Weenango. The tributaries of the main streams are Trout brook, Colt run and Mill run, on the south side, and Moravian run, Gill brook and Mallory's run, on the north.

The mills are the Burger gristmill, on French creek; Waterhouse's sawmill, on a small stream emptying into French creek; Troup's sawmill at Willey's Corners; Wheeler's saw and feed-mill and cheese factory, near the junction of Moravian run with French creek; a sawmill on the Burger place, near Mill Village; Thompson's, on the turnpike, at the foot of McLean hill; and the Limburger cheese factory, near the Wheeler settlement. The Burger mill was built by a Mr. McLenehan fully eighty years ago, and rebuilt in 1870. It was long owned and operated by George Burger. The Wheeler sawmill was started in 1852, and the feed-mill about 1885. The cheese factory has been in operation some thirty years, but cheese-making on a small scale has been conducted at the locality for at least forty years.

The township once contained vast bodies of timber, most of which have been cut off. Hon. C. M. Wheeler owns the largest tract that remains, a considerable portion of which is pine.

The bridges over French creek are the Stranahan, on the Waterford and Union road; the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. bridge, near the latter; the Quarry bridge at the stone quarry; the Ford bridge, on the Waterford and Mill Village road; and Pollock's, leading from the turnpike to Mill Village. The Town Line bridge crosses the South branch at the Union boundary, and the Moore bridge, Le-Beuf creek, near the residence of Monroe Moore. Of these, the Ford and Quarry bridges are constructed of iron.

LANDS.

The flats along French and LeBeuf creeks are from a mile to two miles in width, and the soil is not exceeded for fertility in any part of the county. That it is mostly made land is apparent from the fact that large logs are frequently met with at a depth of from two to three feet below the surface. The balance of the township is hilly, but there is very little if any portion but what is tillable. Two ridges are encountered, at the Arter place, and west of the LeBeuf flats, which attain a height of almost 200 feet above the valley, the loftiest elevations in the township. Wheat can be raised in every part of the township. The valley land produces big crops of oats. The great business of the township, however, is dairying, and large amounts of butter are made. Land ranges in value from thirty to sixty dollars on the flats, and from fifteen to forty dollars on the hills.

MORAVIAN GRANT, ACADEMY LANDS, RESERVE TRACT AND HOLLAND LAND COMPANY.

On the 17th of April, 1791, the State of Pennsylvania granted to "The Society of the United Brethren for Propagating the Gospel among the Heathen," commonly known as the Moravians, two tracts of land of 2,500 acres each, with allowance, to be located respectively on "the River Connought, near the northwestern corner of the State," and "on the head of French creek." This association had long maintained missionaries at its own expense among the Indians, and the above generous gift was intended by the State as a remuneration in part for the service it had rendered in behalf of peace and good will. In locating its lands, the society chose 2,875 acres within the limits of LeBeuf township, and 2,797 in Springfield and Conneaut, paying for the excess in money. The French creek tract was given the name of "Good Luck," and that on Conneaut creek the title of "Hospitality." The agent of the society for many years was William Miles, who was succeeded on the failure of his health by his son, James Miles, as manager of the "Hospitality," and by John Wood, of the "Good Luck" tract. The land was occupied on lease till about 1850, when it was bought by James Miles and N. Blickensderfer, cut up into farms, and sold in the main to the present owners or their predecessors. The Moravian grant extended from the Conrad farm to within about a mile of LeBœuf creek, and lay principally upon the north side of French creek. P. G. and John D. Stranahan made the first purchase of the Moravian lands in 1849, the latter moving from Concord the same year, and his brother in 1854, both locating at what is now LeBœuf Station.

The Academy grant, at the mouth of LeBœuf creek, embraced 500 acres, donated by the State for the support of Waterford Academy. The lands were sold off about 1840, having been previously occupied on lease.

North of the Academy grant was a large body of land known as the Reserve tract, from the fact that the State reserved or withheld it from settlement under the general law to encourage emigration. Of the Reserve tract, 400 acres extended into LeBœuf, the bulk being in Waterford. An act was passed in 1799 throwing the land into market, and most of it was sold off at low prices about the commencement of the century.

The Holland Land Company held some 400 acres west of Mill Village, which were sold off between 1802 and 1810.

George Fisher, of Dauphin county, took up twenty-seven 400-acre tracts at an early period, lying within the limits of LeBœuf, Waterford and Washington townships. This property he divided with Col. McNair in 1824, and the same year the portion belonging to the latter was disposed of at Sheriff's sale. The remainder fell to Mr. Fisher's children in 1845, who sold it off at intervals ending in 1873.

A grove that once stood on the Flats road, near Ford's bridge, was a favorite camping place for Indians, and numerous Indian graves and relics have been found. Near by was a circular mound sixteen or twenty feet in diameter with banks four to six feet high, on which trees were growing of a size indicating an age of 150 or 200 years. The remains of one of these pre-historic circles are also to be seen near the home of Hon. C. M. Wheeler.

RAILROADS, COMMON ROADS AND QUARRIES.

The township has the benefit of two railroads—the Philadelphia and Erie, extending across the northeastern part for about three miles, and the N. Y., P. & O., following French creek nearly to the center, where it deviates to hit Mill Village; and then returning to the valley further south. LeBœuf, on the Philadelphia and Erie, is the only station in the township.

The principal common roads are the old Waterford and Susquehanna turnpike, once the great highway between Lake Erie and Eastern Pennsylvania; the Erie and Warren road, which passes through the township by two routes that unite near the Stranahan bridge; the Flats road, from Mill Village to Waterford; the road from Mill Village to Union; and the road from Mill Village to Pollock's bridge, connecting with the turnpike.

LeBœuf possesses the largest and best quarries of building stone in Erie county. The bluff from which the stone is taken extends along French creek from the old Dunlap place to opposite the farm of A. L. Tilden, a distance of about a mile, and averages some forty feet in height. The material is a blue sandstone of fine quality, more durable than the Berea stone, but saturated with oil, which spoils it for the highest class of work. Three quarries have been opened, known respectively as Senger's, Paskett's and the Atlantic & Great Western.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The Methodist Episcopal society at Edenville was organized about 1839. The congregation began by worshipping in the schoolhouse, and continued to do so until 1855, when the Edenville Church was built.

The Manross Church was built in 1869 by John W. Manross, who intended it to be used by religious bodies generally. The first minister officiating there was Rev. Mr. Barnhart, a Methodist. It has since been used principally as a Methodist preaching place.

The United Brethren Church, near New Ireland, is the outgrowth of a revival held in that neighborhood in 1876. Preaching of this denomination had years before been held in the neighborhood, but the society had ceased to exist until it was re-established as above stated. The church building was erected in 1877 and dedicated on the 6th of January, 1878.

In the Ford neighborhood, some two and a half miles north of Mill Village, a schoolhouse was standing in 1820, in which a summer school was taught by Miss Elizabeth Strickland; a later summer teacher was Hannah Hall. The winter school was taught by James Skinner. Other teachers in the building at about this time, and perhaps a little subsequent, were Stephen Skinner, Paddy McGill, Cyrus Nutt and Thomas Graham. This was known as the Smith schoolhouse and it served that portion of LeBœuf township for many years. A log schoolhouse was built in the northeast corner of the township, west of French creek, about the year 1822, which was burned after several terms of school had been taught in it. Another building was erected on land now owned by Adam Yocum. Among the teachers in this portion of the township about the period spoken of above were Sophia Sackett, Mrs. Ward and Mr. Crownstar. In 1825 a log schoolhouse was built by the people living in the vicinity of the United Brethren Church near New Ireland. Early instructors in this building were Nathan Mallory, Mr. Reynolds and Miss Emeline Sloan.

STATE AND COUNTY OFFICIALS.

The citizens of LeBœuf and Mill Village, who have held State and county positions, are as follows: Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1837-38, James Pollock. Assembly, James Weston, 1813, 1814, 1815 and 1822; John D. Stranahan, 1868-69; Chas. M. Wheeler, elected in 1890 and 1892. Deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth, A. L. Tilden, 1891 to '95. Sheriff, James Weston, 1810-13. County Commissioners, James Weston, 1803-04; James Pollock, 1890-93; A. L. Tilden, 1878-84. County Treasurer, elected in 1886, W. J. Robinson. Director of the Poor, William Bracken, 1846-49 and 1859-62. Auditors, Thomas Pierce, 1844; John Wood, 1847; E. K. Range, 1875-78 and 1884. Steward of the Almshouse, Geo. K. Mitchell, appointed in 1890. Mercantile Appraiser, H. L. Minium, 1883. Perry G. Stranahan, Jury Commissioner from 1867-70, was long a resident of LeBœuf, moving from there to Union about 1859. In addition to the offices held by Mr. Tilden, he was the People's candidate for Congress in 1890, and the Democratic nominee for State Treasurer in 1891.

SETTLEMENTS.

Edenville consists of the church mentioned above and perhaps a dozen dwellings. Formerly the site boasted a store, postoffice, sawmill, oil refinery, etc. The village went down after the construction of the A. and G. W. R. R., which diverted the trade and travel to Mill Village. The settlement is on the road from the latter place to Union, in the south part of the township.

The locality known as New Ireland is on the road from Ford's bridge to Lincolnville, about a mile and three-quarters east of Mill Village. A church, a school and a few dwellings make up the village.

Quite a settlement has grown up around C. M. Wheeler's mill, in the northeastern part of the township, which gives the site much the appearance of a small village. Mr. Wheeler alone has five dwellings and eight barns, besides which there are a cheese factory and some farm buildings.

In the Waterhouse settlement (Mystic postoffice) there is a cheese factory, sawmill, schoolhouse and a few dwellings.

LeBœuf station consists of some tenement for railroad men, several farm houses, and a platform for handling lumber and stone.

BOROUGH OF MILL VILLAGE.

[SEE LEBŒUF.]

The borough of Mill Village occupies a site nearly in the center of LeBœuf township, from which it was taken, and about a mile from French creek. The town owes its origin to Mill run, which flows through its limits, and unites with French creek a short distance beyond. Three sawmills with their attendant buildings, sprung up along Mill run, which gave the settlement the name of Milltown. When the A. and G. W. R. R. was built, the station was called Mill Village, and in 1870 was incorporated as a borough by that title. Before the opening of the railroad, there was nothing on the site, in addition to the mills, but a cooper shop, blacksmith shop and a few houses. Now it is a brisk town, with a population, according to the census of 1880, of 388 and by that of 1890, of 320. The idea of laying out a town was conceived by William Kingen, and the survey was made by Judge Benson, of Waterford. The plat includes portions of the farms of Mr. Kingen, P. H. Colt, John Gregory, H. M. Range, E. K. Range, David McKinley, James Hunter, F. N. Reynolds, W. C. Ford, M. S. Edmunds and G. W. Gillett.

The chief manufacturing interests of the borough are a cheese factory (built in 1870); a planing mill; a cider, feed and jelly mill; a steam sawmill and a wagon shop.

The Methodist Episcopal Church dates from about 1810, when a class was formed at the Ford settlement, on French creek. This body formed the nucleus of the church organization. Preaching was held in the dwelling of Capt. Robert King, and subsequently in that of one of the Fords. The first church building was erected in 1850, about one-half mile south of the village. In five or six years this edifice was destroyed by fire, when the one in the village was erected, which was enlarged in 1878.

The Presbyterian congregation was organized by Rev. J. M. Gillett, pastor of the church at Union Mills, in 1870. The building was erected in 1872.

The Free Methodist Church was built in the fall of 1894.

Roman Catholic services are held at stated periods by a priest from Union City.

The Mill Village Herald was started by C. C. Wright in January, 1876. It was purchased in October, 1882, by J. S. Ross, who is still its proprietor and editor.

CHAPTER XII.

McKEAN TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF MIDDLEBORO.

THE TOWNSHIP OF McKEAN was established by the act creating Erie county. Its limits were reduced by the taking off of a slice for Waterford about 1820, for Franklin in 1844, and another for Summit in 1854. These curtailments of its territory account for the irregular shape of the township. McKean is bounded on the north by Fairview, Mill Creek and Summit, on the east by Summit and Waterford, on the south by Waterford, Washington and Franklin, and on the west by the latter township and Fairview. It has a breadth in the widest part of about eight miles from east to west, and about seven from north to south. The old State line, before the purchase of the Triangle, ran a little north of the center, and cuts the borough limits of Middleboro into two almost exact halves. It also forms the north and south lines of many of the farms. The township was named in honor of Gen. Thomas McKean, second Governor of the State, after independence. McKean has given Erie city a number of its best known citizens, among whom may be mentioned Hon. Joseph M. Sterrett, A. J. Sterrett, the Crouch brothers, the Johnston brothers, the Minnig brothers, and the Stancliff brothers. By the United States census, McKean had a population of 440 in 1820, of 984 in 1830, of 1,714 in 1840, of 1,921 in 1850, of 1,600 in 1860, of 1,426 in 1870, of 1,394 in 1880, and of 1,330 in 1890. The postoffices are Sterrettania and Sibleyville (on the Waterford line).

LANDS AND STREAMS.

McKean is one of the elevated townships of the county, and its surface is generally hilly, with numerous deep ravines along the streams. The valley lands are first-class, and grain is easily raised. Off of the streams the country is cold and clayey, but cultivation makes it fairly productive. As a grazing and dairying section the township has few superiors. In the southeast portion is a ridge known as South Hill, which is said to attain an altitude of 800 feet above the lake. The township contains two small quarries, viz.: Mays' and Stafford's, both producing a fair article of building stone. Land ranges in value from ten to forty dollars an acre.

The township is wholly watered by Elk creek and its branches, with the exception of a small district in the southeast containing the headwaters of Little Conneauttee creek, which empties into French creek below Edinboro. Elk creek rises in Tamarack swamp, in the western portion of Waterford township, and flowing nearly through the center of McKean, across the southern portion of Fairview, and the northeastern portion of Girard, falls into the lake a short distance north of Miles Grove. Its general course is westerly till it reaches the Girard township line, where it turns to the northwest. The South branch of Elk creek rises in Washington township, near the line of McKean, and flowing directly north, unites with the main stream one-half mile west of Middleboro. At one time there were within the township eight sawmills and two gristmills on the chief stream, and two sawmills and one gristmill on the South branch; now, all that are left is a gristmill on the former, being the one at Sterrettania. The valley of Elk creek is generally narrow, but it spreads out just above Middleboro, near the crossing of the Edinboro road, reaching a breadth of about two miles. Below that it is from a quarter of a mile to half a mile in width.

MILLS AND FACTORIES.

The first sawmill in McKean township was built by James Sterrett, on Elk creek, in 1810, and the second on the same stream, by Oliver Dunn, in 1812. The third was put up by Eber and Lemuel Stancliff, on the South branch, about 1827.

The existing mills and factories of the township are as follows: A grist and sawmill on Elk creek, at Sterrettania; a creamery at Sterrettania, with cider and jelly-mill attached; a saw and feed-mill, about a mile south of Middleboro; two cider and jelly-mills at Glazier's Corners; a cheese-factory on the Waterford line; a shingle-mill near the town house; a tannery, one mile east of Sterrettania, in a building formerly used as a woolen-factory; and a saw and feed-mill near the Summit line.

The gristmill at Sterrettania was built by David S. Sterrett in 1839. A gristmill was established on the South branch, at Branchville, about forty-five years ago, was burned down and rebuilt twice, and was finally demolished by fire on October 19, 1882, since when it has never been revived.

VILLAGES.

The villages are Sterrettania and Branchville. Sterrettania is on Elk creek, near the Fairview line, in the western portion of the township, twelve miles from Erie. It received its name from the numerous Sterrett family living in the village and vicinity. Robert Sterrett, the pioneer of the flock, came from Cumberland county and located there in 1804, remaining three years, when he sold out to his brother James. The village contains a Union Church, a schoolhouse, a gristmill, a sawmill, a creamery, a cider and jelly-factory, a wagon-shop, a blacksmith-shop and a general store. The residences number fifteen or twenty, and the population is about eighty. Thomas Sterrett, a resident of Sterrettania, is one of the wealthiest and most influential men in the county. The Sterrettania school was taught at various times by Hon. George H. Cutler and William Benson, afterward two of the leading members of the Erie county bar.

Branchville is a small collection of houses along the Edinboro plank road, in the south part of the township. It embraces a United Brethren Church, a schoolhouse, a grocery store and about a dozen residences. The South branch of Elk creek runs through the hamlet, giving it its name.

CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, CEMETERIES AND ROADS.

The religious edifices of the township are a Union Church at Sterrettania, a Methodist Episcopal at South Hill, and a United Brethren at Branchville.

The South Hill Church was dedicated on December 9, 1880. The land on which it stands was donated by Oren Reed. Previous to the erection of the church building, the congregation held services in the schoolhouse.

The Union Church at Sterrettania was built in 1842. It was jointly erected by the Methodists, who had organized many years before and by the Presbyterians, who had previously met in the schoolhouse. For a time it was occupied by the Congregationalists, and it is now in common use by all the denominations in the vicinity.

The United Brethren Church at Branchville was built about 1865. The society existed for a number of years previous.

The first school in the township was taught during the winter of 1811-12. Schools were held in the vicinity of Middleboro from 1820 to 1825. One was kept up at Sterrettania about 1830.

A cemetery used by the township in common has long been established on the Waterford and Girard road, a short distance east of Middleboro; another on the plank road, about a mile south of the same village; one at Sterrettania; one attached to the old Catholic Church north of Middleboro (soon to be abandoned), and one on South Hill. The Wiswells, Dunns and others have private burying grounds. Land for a Catholic cemetery was purchased at Sterrettania in 1809. It has not been used much up to date, but is intended to be the general burial ground of the denomination in the township.

The main roads of McKean are the Erie and Edinboro plank, running through nearly the whole width of the township from north to south, and the Waterford and Girard road, which crosses the township from east to west, following the valley of Elk creek. A mail route was established between Erie and Edinboro in the winter of 1835-36.

FIRST SETTLERS.

The first settler was James Talmadge, who came from Genesee county, New York, in 1795, and located in the Dunn neighborhood. His wife and father accompanied him. Mr. Talmadge brought in the first bushel of wheat sown in Erie county. Thomas and Oliver Dunn moved into McKean in the fall of 1797, having been preceded by Stephen Oliver; Lemuel Stancliff, a New Englander, settled a mile south of Middleboro in 1799; Benjamin Grubb, a Lancaster county man, on the John Peffer farm in 1800; Benjamin Grant, from Connecticut, in March of the same year; Robert Sterrett, at Sterrettania in 1804, and Jas. Aubrey about 1806. Eliachim Cook, who accompanied Mr. Grant, located in what is now Summit township, but removed to Waterford in 1800. In 1807 Mr. Sterrett sold his McKean property to his brother James and removed to the bank of the lake, five miles west of Erie. John Evans came from Maryland in 1802, and first took up land on the Mill Creek and Summit line, but removed to Mill Creek in 1811. Among other early settlers were Russell Stancliff, Rufus Trask, Benjamin Cullom, David Weldon, Joseph S. Bush and the Dunlaps. The Staffords, a New England family, settled around Middleboro about 1815. Ansel Crouch went in from New York in 1817. David Sterrett and son James settled on the homestead farm. He was the father of Robert W., Ennis, Brice, Thomas, James and Andrew J., and of Mrs. Wright, Norton, Brockway and Hall. Among the other early settlers were the following: In 1800, Ira Glazier, from Oneida county, New York, and Ezra White; about 1812, Zachariah Joiner, from New England; in 1825, the Washburns, from Massachusetts; about 1826, Benjamin F. Morey, of Berkshire, Vt.; in 1831, John Drown, of Lyons, N. Y.; about 1835, the Marshes, from Nova Scotia, and Peter J. Barron, from France; in 1837, Oren Reed, from Otsego county, New York; in 1840, Lorenz, Antony and Daniel Hauck, all from Germany.

Joseph Weldon was the first male child born in the township, and Hannah, daughter of James Talmadge, the first female child, both events occurring in 1798, or thereabouts. Stephen Oliver was 97 years of age when he died, January 14, 1857. James Steadman, who died in 1892, was six months older, being the most aged man that ever lived in the township.

STATE AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

The State and county officers from McKean township have been as follows: State Senate, Joseph M. Sterrett, 1837 to 1841. Associate Judge, Joseph M. Sterrett, 1850 to 1856. Assembly, Stephen Skinner, 1840 and 1842. County Commissioner, Joseph M. Sterrett, 1829 to 1831; Stephen Skinner, 1834 to 1837; Thomas Sterrett, 1837 to 1839 (died in office); Thomas Dunn, 1850 to 1853. Clerk to Commissioners, A. J. Sterrett, 1863 to 1881. Director of the Poor, David Sterrett, 1847 to 1850; John Parmeter, 1852 to 1855; James Dunn, 1874 to 1877; Seymour Washburn, 1877 to 1880. Steward of the Almshouse, Thomas Dunn, 1858 to 1863. Jury Commissioner, William Grant, 1873 to 1876. County Surveyor, Hiram Bumphrey, 1833; Stephen Skinner, 1836 to 1839. County Auditor, Thomas Dunn, 1810 to 1821, 1822 to 1825; Eli Webster, 1829 to 1832; Oren Reed, 1852 to 1855, 1863 to 1865; Elias Brecht, 1857 to 1860. Joseph M. Sterrett left his father's house in McKean when a boy, to learn the printing trade. He founded the Erie Gazette and ever after resided in Erie. When elected to the offices mentioned above he was a resident of Erie. A. J. Sterrett was born in McKean, but left home at an early age. He also lived in Erie when elected Clerk to the Commissioners. [For an account of the Weiss Library, extract from Mr. Weiss' will, etc., see Mill Creek township.]

BOROUGH OF MIDDLEBORO.

[SEE M'KEAN TOWNSHIP.]

The borough of Middleboro was created out of portions of McKean township in 1861, and is about two-thirds of a mile square. Its population was 126 in 1870, 210 in 1880, and 195 in 1895. The borough is situated on the Edinboro plank road, in the center of the township, near the junction of the South branch with the main stream of Elk creek, ten miles south of Erie and eight north of Edinboro. Benjamin Cullom built the first house in Middleboro in 1810.

Middleboro contains a Catholic and a Methodist Episcopal Church, a schoolhouse, one hotel, a carriage works, a creamery and cheese factory, several stores, two blacksmith shops, a sawmill, a planing and feed-mill, and other establishments, being one of the liveliest settlements of its size in Northwestern Pennsylvania. The postoffice name is McKean.

The Methodist Church was organized in 1819, about one-half mile south of the borough. Meetings were held in the schoolhouses until 1857, when a building was erected within the borough limits. This was enlarged and improved in 1869.

St. Francis's Catholic Church was built in 1876. It superceded an old frame building, which stood two miles north of Middleboro, and was dedicated in 1833. The congregation was organized a few years prior. The rector in 1895 was Rev. Francis Aaron. A burial ground has been connected with the church from the first, but is intended to be abandoned, the denomination having purchased a more suitable piece of ground at Sterrettania.

Middleboro has a number of secret societies, of which the G. A. R. Post started August 21, 1880; A. O. U. W. Lodge, November 5th of the same year; the Equitable Aid Union in 1891; the Odd Fellows' Lodge in 1892; the Junior Order U. A. M. in 1894.

CHAPTER XIII.

MILL CREEK TOWNSHIP.

MILL CREEK TOWNSHIP, which was created by the bill establishing the county, received its name from the stream of Mill creek, an account of which is elsewhere given. The length of its east line is four and three-quarter miles; of the south line, ten and a half, and of the west line, four and a quarter. The variation of the east line is due to a 400-acre tract at the mouth of Four-Mile creek, which it was thought desirable to make a portion of Mill Creek rather than Harbor Creek, to which it naturally belongs. The original township was considerably larger than the present one, the reduction being caused by the extension of the city limits of Erie.

In 1820, Mill Creek contained a population of 1,017; in 1830, of 1,783; in 1840, of 2,682; in 1850, of 3,064; in 1870, of 2,774; in 1880, of 3,274, and in 1890, of 3,279.

Mill Creek is bounded on the north by Lake Erie, the Bay of Presque Isle and Erie city; on the east by Harbor Creek and a small part of Greene; on the south by McKean, Summit and Greene; and on the west by Fairview. The township was divided in 1864 into two districts for election purposes, which were known as East and West Mill Creek. Another partition was made in 1892, when the township was divided into the East, Middle and West election districts, being numbered from east to west. The post-offices are West Mill Creek, Belle Valley and Kearsarge.

LAKE SHORE PLAIN, VALLEYS AND RIDGES.

Commencing at the bay, there is the lake shore plain, about two miles wide; the First ridge; a valley, about a mile in width; the Second ridge, and finally the Walnut creek valley, also about a mile wide, which is succeeded by the Third ridge. From the bay to the Second ridge, the land is comparatively level, with a gentle ascent to the south, but on the opposite side of the ridge it is much broken, especially those portions which lie beyond Mill creek and Walnut creek. The Second ridge has obtained special names at different points, such as Nicholson's hill, where it is crossed by the Waterford pike, and Russell hill on the Waterburg road, between Erie and Belle Valley.

A valley begins in Harbor Creek township and extends across Mill Creek and Fairview into Girard, a distance of fully fifteen miles. It is bounded on the north by the Second, and on the south by the Third ridge, and is watered in different sections by Mill creek, Walnut creek and Trout run. The two streams first named, after traversing the valley in a western direction, turn abruptly to the north, break through the First and Second ridges by narrow channels and find their way to the lake—Mill creek within the limits of Erie city, and Walnut creek at Manchester, in Fairview township. Mill creek enters the valley at or near Belle Valley and Walnut creek just east of Kearsarge. The former leaves it near the old Erie County Mills, and the latter at or near the Schluraff farm, in the western part of the township. Among the residents of this valley are some of the best known farmers in Erie county.

The farms along the Lake road, west of Erie, from the fact of that being the main drive to the Head, are probably the most familiar to the general public in the county. The township contains some of the best grape, fruit and vegetable farms in this section.

RESERVATIONS AND "GORE."

The tract along the Waterford pike known as the Academy lands consists of 500 acres set apart by the State for the maintenance of Erie Academy. They commence at the west line of the Cochran and Evans farms, and lie on both sides of the road, which runs through them at an angle. These lands were originally let out to tenants for ninety-nine years, but in 1851 or 1852, legislation was secured which authorized their sale, and most of them have been disposed of in fee simple.

The lands from the city limits west to the Herrman place are a portion of the tract of 2,000 acres, less 100 for the support of the pier, ceded by the State to the borough of Erie, for the construction of a basin at the harbor, in contemplation of the opening of the canal. They were sold at public sale on the 1st of August, 1833, and brought from nine to twenty-two dollars per acre.

The original surveys in the township were made in 1795 by George Moore, under the direction of Thomas Rees, the first State Surveyor in the county. In laying out the country, as directed by law, a reservation was made of certain lands bordering the town of Erie, which were withheld from sale and settlement. This tract was known as the Erie State Reservation. It commenced at the head of the bay, ran southward three miles, then parallel with the lake and bay eight miles, and from there to the shore of the lake, excluding the portion embraced within the town site of Erie. Outside the reservation, all the territory in the township, and in fact, in the Triangle, was laid out in 400-acre tracts, with an allowance of six per cent. for roads.

By some mistake of the surveyors or disparity in their instruments, a piece of land was left between the Erie Reservation and the other lands of the township, open to general settlement, which is known by the general name of the "Gore." It started "at nothing" at the head of the bay, ran south by west, about 500 feet out of the way, to a point some eighty rods south of the reservation; thence eastward, on a parallel line, to the F. W. Koehler farm; and thence north to the lake, varying from 400 to 500 feet, to a point about thirteen rods east of the reservation line. This land was sold in general to the parties owning farms bordering on the same.

STREAMS AND BRIDGES.

The streams of the township are Two, Three and Four-Mile creeks, east of Erie; Mill creek and Cascade run, emptying into the bay within Erie city; the Head run, Kelso run and Fassett run, on the west side; and Walnut creek on the south, with its branches, Thomas run and Rhodes run.

Mill creek is created by two branches, which unite near the southeastern line of the township. The creek received its name because the first mill in the county was built at its mouth. As late as 1835 there were no less than four gristmills and thirteen sawmills along this stream, all propelled by water-power.

Walnut creek, the largest in the township, rises in Summit and enters Mill Creek township near Kearsarge, where its valley widens out to the extent of a mile. From there it flows through the south part of the township in a general westerly course to Fairview, where it suddenly turns to the north, joining the lake at Manchester. Some of the earliest settlements in the county were made in the valley of this stream at Kearsarge and westward. Near the Nece milldam it receives Thomas run, which is joined by Rhodes run about a mile above. Both of these rise in McKean township, the first having a length of about four and the latter of three miles.

Two, Three and Four-Mile creeks were named because of their supposed distance from Central park in Erie. The first two are small streams, rising near the central eastern portion of the township and flowing directly to the lake. Four-Mile creek rises in Greene township, runs along the western edge of Harbor Creek township, enters Mill Creek at Wesleyville, and reaches the lake about a mile and a half north of that village.

Cascade creek is formed by two branches which unite on the pioneer farm of the Scott estate. The creek empties into the bay at the Pittsburg docks. It was at the mouth of Cascade creek that Perry built the brigs Lawrence and Niagara in 1813. The little stream at the Head rises in a swamp south of the Catholic Cemetery. A mill once stood at its mouth, the ruins of which remained until fifteen or twenty years ago. Fassett run, which empties into the lake in the northwest corner of the township, was a fair-sized stream in the days of the canal. It at one time gave power to a sawmill. Kelso run rises in what was called the Tracy swamp, and empties into the lake above the Head. Though only a mile long, it is quite a stream in rainy seasons.

The township has within its limits a large number of bridges, of which those over Walnut creek are the most important. The one at the town line across the latter stream was built jointly by the Commissioners of Fairview and Mill Creek. The old Philadelphia and Erie R. R. bridge over Mill creek, once quite a formidable piece of trestle work, has been replaced by a culvert and embankment.

COMMON ROADS, RAILROADS AND CANAL.

All of the great highways in the county, which center at Erie city cross Mill Creek township. The most important of these are the Lake road from east to west, the Buffalo road from the east, the Wattsburg plank and Lake Pleasant roads from the southeast, the Edinboro plank and the Waterford pike and plank road from the south, the McKean road from the southwest and the Ridge road from the west. The Lake road extends across the township from Harbor creek to Fairview, entering Erie by Sixth street and leaving by Eighth, a variation due to the gullies in the western part of the city. The railroads are the Lake Shore, the Philadelphia and Erie, the Erie and Pittsburg, the Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie (commonly known as the "Peasley"), and the New York, Chicago and St. Louis (abbreviated into "The Nickel Plate"). The Philadelphia and Erie, Erie and Pittsburg, and Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie terminate at Erie; the two others are through routes between the East and West. The railroad stations in the township are Belle Valley and Shannon, on the Philadelphia and Erie; the Junction, on the Erie and Pittsburg; and West Mill Creek, on the Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie.

The canal between the Ohio river and Erie traversed the township from the Fairview line to the bay at the latter city. It was opened in 1844 and discontinued in 1871. The bed of the canal was bought by the farmers along its line, and only slight traces of this once important improvement remain.

The Erie Electric road extends along the line of the Lake road from the city limits to the Head, and is a great comfort and convenience to those who have occasion to visit the numerous places of public interest west of the city.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The churches of Mill Creek township are the Presbyterian at Belle Valley, the Westminster (Presbyterian), the Asbury (Methodist) and St. Paul's (Lutheran). The Westminster and Asbury churches are on the Ridge road, west of the almshouse; St. Paul's Church is at the McKean line in the southwest part of the township.

The Presbyterian Church at Belle Valley, first known as the Presbyterian Church of East Mill Creek, was organized by a committee consisting of the Rev. Geo. A. Lyon, D. D., and the Rev. Nathaniel W. West, the second Monday of December 1841. The original members, probably thirty-eight in number, came from the First Presbyterian Church of Erie.

The organization took place in the schoolhouse, which served as the general place of worship for the congregation till 1843, when a church building was erected at a cost of $1,200, with a seating capacity of 300.

This building was dedicated on the 6th of January, 1843, and, being substantially constructed in the beginning, remains, and having been remodeled and improved several times, notably in 1885, 1892 and 1894, it constitutes an attractive and suitable house of worship.

The ministers, who have served the congregation as pastors and supplies, as nearly as can be gathered from the somewhat defective records, were as follows, serving in the order in which their names appear: Revs. N. W. West, William Fuller, William Smith, James F. Read, D. D., William Ottinger, Joseph Vance, J. Rodger Wilson, Hezekiah Webster, Alexander Ross, J. Bell, H. C. Foster and J. P. Irwin. Those who served for the longest periods were the Rev. J. F. Read, D. D., pastor from 1849 to 1852; Rev. Joseph Vance, pastor from 1854 to 1871; Rev. H. Webster, pastor from 1879 to 1885; and Rev. J. P. Irwin, supply from 1888 to October, 1895, when he resigned.

Under the faithful ministrations of the above pastors, the church has been greatly prospered. The contributions have been liberal and the number of accessions to the membership has been constant and encouraging, the church having on several occasions enjoyed seasons of wonderful spiritual awakening. Under the ministry of Rev. Joseph Vance, at one time ten, at another eight, were received on confession of their faith. Under Rev. H. Webster, in 1880, eleven, and in 1882, seven, were received, most of them on examination; while, during the ministry of Rev. J. P. Irwin, thirty-one were received on confession at the same communion. Thus, while, owing to unfavorable location, the church has never attained the proportions of a strong, self-supporting body, there has been a gradual increase in numbers and a material improvement in facilities—a parsonage, quite conveniently located and suitable, having been purchased by the congregation in 1888.

The membership of this church and congregation has comprised many of the best families in the community, and the session, which originally consisted of Messrs. George Davison, Samuel Low and Hiram Norcross, has included men of excellent character, such as Messrs. Converse Clark, Myron Hayes, D. H. Sanford, W. E. Hayes, Clark Wood, W. M. Hillborn, John Cook, H. H. Miller, F. W. Perrin, W. W. Conrad and A. J. Tate.

An interesting Sabbath-school has been sustained for many years, and the women of the congregation have ever been active in all good work, having maintained missionary and other societies, during past years, while at present there are Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, a Missionary Aid Society and the Senior and Junior Christian Endeavor Societies.

Rev. E. B. Russell, and Revs. Edward and Joseph H. Vance have gone out as ministers from this church, and others now occupy prominent and useful positions in the churches and localities to which they have gone.

The congregation of Westminster Church was organized by Rev. Johnson Eaton in 1805 at the mouth of Walnut creek, in Fairview township. Worship continued at that place till 1833, when a building was erected in Swanville. In 1845 a portion of the congregation was set apart as the church of Sturgeonville, and erected a building in Fairview borough. This left the church building at Swanville to one side of the territory in which the bulk of the communicants resided. In 1851 the building was removed to the western part of Mill Creek township. The name of Fairview Church was retained till 1861, when that of Westminster was adopted. Mr. Eaton continued as pastor for the congregation until his death June 17, 1847. A new and handsome brick building was erected in 1894, and formally dedicated November 30th of that year. It stands on or nearly upon the site of the original structure.

Asbury Methodist Church, in the western portion of the township, was built in 1846, and remodeled in 1894. The congregation was organized in the first-mentioned year.

St. Paul's German Lutheran Church, in the southwest part of the township, was erected about 1837, and overhauled in 1873. No regular services have been held in the building for several years.

One of the first schools was opened in the southeastern section of the township about 1805 or '6, and lasted until 1821. A school was established about the same time as the other in the Love neighborhood, and maintained until the common school law went into operation. School was taught in the Reed residence, at or near Kearsarge, in 1809. In 1812 the neighbors united in putting up a building on the north side of the ridge, on or about the site of the present Lake View school. Other schools were kept up by private subscription, previous to the adoption of the common school system, but no reliable account of them is at hand. Mill Creek was the first township in the county to adopt the one-term school system, which was done about 1863 or '64.

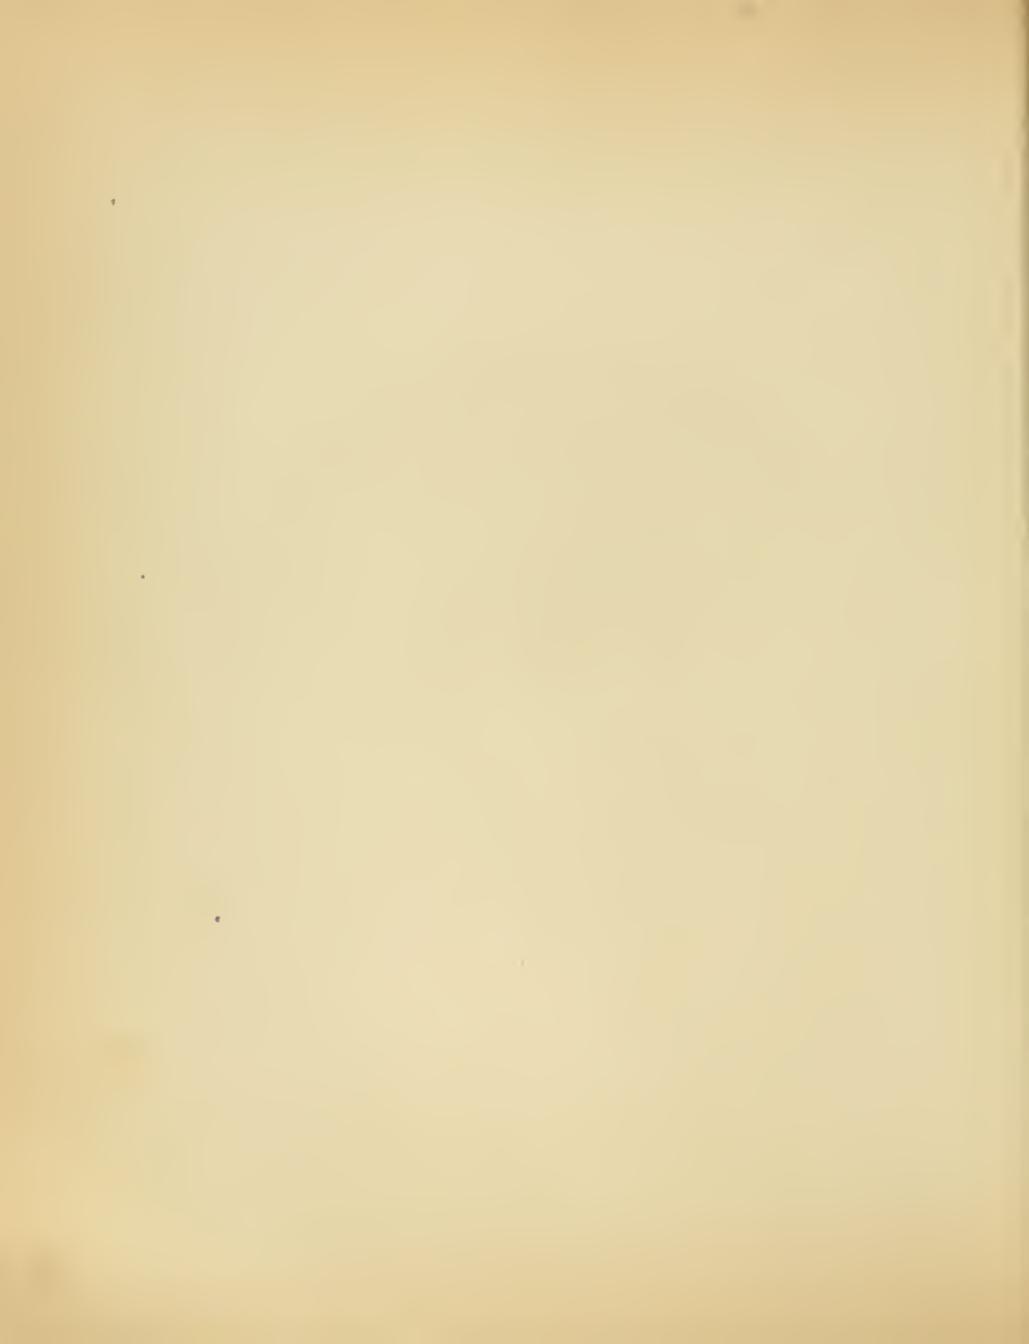

VILLAGES, POSTOFFICES, ETC.

Mill Creek has no settlements of much size, Belle Valley, Weigelstown and Kearsarge being the largest. Belle Valley is a scattered collection of houses along Mill creek, on the south side of the Second ridge, about four miles from Erie. This place, though settled at an early date, never attained to much importance, having at present not over 100 residents. The Presbyterian Church has a graveyard connected with it which contains the graves of some of the most worthy of the original settlers. The Belle Valley postoffice was established in 1855, being long supplied by the Wattsburg stage.

Kearsarge was formerly known as Walnut Creek, and was once a point of more importance comparatively than at present. At Kearsarge are a store, hotel, schoolhouse, brickyard, and a number of residences. The settlement is on the Edinboro road, four miles from Erie. This is one of the oldest settled sections in Erie county, Col. Seth Reed having located on the site in 1796. The postoffice at

Geo A Allen

Kearsarge supplies portions of Mill Creek, McKean and Summit townships.

The first frame barn in the county was erected by Charles J. Reed, on the Zimmerly place at Kearsarge, in 1799, and the first frame house on the same farm by the same gentleman, in 1800. It was here also that the first white couple married in the county took up their residence. Charles J. Reed, son of Col. Seth Reed, was united in matrimony to Miss Rachel Miller, on the 27th of December, 1797.

Weigelton, on the southwestern edge of Erie city, at the junction of Brown's avenue with the Ridge road, was named after Geo. Weigel, sr., who bought fifty acres at the sale in 1833, and laid out the north side of the Ridge road front into building lots. The village was then a mile and a half out of Erie, and was a convenient stopping place for farmers and travelers.

About a mile westward, on the Ridge road, is Warrentown, a small collection of houses lining the south side. It was named after John M. Warren, whose father took up a large tract of land there.

At the point where the McKean road and the road from the Head intersect the Ridge road, are the Half-Way House, a grocery, blacksmith shop and a number of dwellings. The hotel was opened by Thomas Willis in 1822 or 1823. It then stood about half a mile west, on the original line of the road. The building was moved about the time the road line was changed, some thirty-five years ago.

In 1847 a man named Frederick Reidel was convicted: t Pittsburg of the murder of his wife, but the night before the date fixed for the execution he cut a vein in his arm and bled to death. His body was delivered to his brother, who brought it to Erie county and buried it secretly in a graveyard on the south line of Mill Creek township. The matter soon leaked out and the indignation of the people compelled him to remove the remains, which were again buried on the east side of the cross road between the Half-Way House and the Catholic cemetery, some fifteen or twenty rods north of the Ridge road. In November, 1858, George Reidel had an altercation with Buttennelly, then owner of the property where the Half-Way House stands, and shot the latter dead within a short distance of his brother's grave. He was sentenced to the penitentiary for nine years and served out his term.

Between Warrentown and the Half-Way House, a short distance north of the Ridge road, is the Erie County Almshouse. Less than a mile west of the Half-Way House is the West Mill Creek Hall. Near by is the Westminster Church, and further west is the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church. The West Mill Creek postoffice, which supplies the vicinity with mail matter, is about one-fourth of a mile west of Westminster Church.

In the Mill Creek valley, some two miles south of Erie, was a considerable settlement known as the Erie County Mills, which once contained a grist and sawmill, fulling-mill and brewery, all of which have gone down.

OTHER PROMINENT POINTS.

Passing over from the Half-Way House to the Lake road, the first point of interest is Trinity cemetery, the burial place of the Catholics of Erie and vicinity. It embraces thirty acres purchased by Rev. J. L. Coady, Vicar-General of the diocese, of Wilson and Richard Laird in June, 1867. A little east of the cemetery is the road to the Head of the bay, which has been for many years the chief pleasure resort of Erie. The hotel and other buildings erected at this point were burned down in December, 1882, and rebuilt in 1885. At the junction of the Lake and Head roads is the Algeria farm, famous as a breeding place for trotting horses. It was here that Rayon d'Or, for which animal Hon. Wm. L. Scott paid $40,000 in France, was kept and begot some of the fastest horses in America. Further east, on the bank of the bay, is the site of the Lone Fisherman's Inn, afterward the Tracy Point Hotel, now leased by the Sommerheim, a German association, organized in the fall of 1894. Still eastward are the buildings of the Kakhwa and Cascade clubs, the Frontier farm of the Scott estate, and the former site of the Mt. Hickory Iron Works. The latter were started in 1872, and the mill was burned December 9, 1883, and never rebuilt. Across the Lake Shore R. R. from the rolling-mill site was the old Reed Garden, once a favorite resort. It was opened as a public garden in 1840 or 1841, and was one of Gen. Reed's pet enterprises. Nearing the city the old fair grounds are seen, about half a mile to the south of the Lake road.

These grounds were first opened for a fair by the State Agricultural Society in 1872. In addition to the above the Eaglehurst club have a good building on the Marshall farm, west of the Head, and there are numerous resorts and summer residences all along the Lake road between the city and the west line of the township.

East of the city on the north side of the Buffalo road are the original Erie county fair grounds, now owned by the estate of H. C. Shannon. This property was purchased by the Fair Association in 1860, and fairs were held there in '60 and '61. The war for the Union breaking out in the latter year, they were taken for military purposes, and the Eighty-third, One Hundred and Eleventh and One Hundred and Forty-fifth regiments were organized on the premises.

On the Edinboro road, a mile or so south of the city limits, quite a village has sprung up on the Evans farm, incident to the establishment of the coffin factory. This enterprise was originated by Robert Evans, who sold out at a heavy loss. Near by is the site of Glenwood Park, embracing the Evans farm and the valley of Mill creek, which is intended to be the main park of Erie city. It is an ideal location for the purpose, and if the plans of its projectors are carried out will be one of the most beautiful pleasure resorts in the country.

On the Lake road, east of the city, upon the Reed farm, are the new grounds of the Erie Fair Association, organized in January, 1895, for the development of fine trotting and racing stock. A short distance beyond, at the mouth of Four-Mile creek, is the Grove House, a favorite summer resort, opened to the public in 1887.

Lakeside Cemetery, a new project, is located on the north side of the Lake road, between the city and the Reed farm last referred to.

For a further account of some of these places see Erie city.

MILLS AND FACTORIES.

The first sawmill in Mill Creek township was built by John Cochran, in 1800, and the first gristmill in 1801, on the site of the one known later as the Eliot or Denmore mill. The second grist and sawmill in the township was established on the site of the old Erie County Mills in 1802, one mile up the creek from Cochran's mill, at the forks, by Robert McCullough. A sawmill was built in 1816 by Foote & Parker on the R. H. Ar buckle place, which went down a good many years ago. The first sawmill on Walnut creek in Mill Creek township was built by James Love in 1816.

The present mills, factories, etc., are as follows: The Glenwood Paint Works, occupying the site of the Eliot or Densmore mill; the coffin factory, on the Edinboro road, and a brickyard near by; Ball's brewery, on the Lake road, west, and Voight's, just south of the city limits; a planing, saw and cider-mill near Kearsarge; a brickyard at the latter place; a shoe factory (idle) east of the city; a glue and fertilizer factory (established in 1869) near the Buffalo road between Erie and Wesleyville; a sawmill and a feed, cider and sawmill on Walnut creek, and a grist, saw, shingle, feed and cider-mill on Thomas run. Some of the most important mills, such as the Erie County and the Eliot gristmills, once famous in the county, have gone down for want of water-power and support, the latter being chiefly due to their proximity to the city.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settlers within the township were Col. Seth Reed, David McNair, George Moore, James Baird, Capt. Russell Bissell, David Dewey, Francis Randall, J. W. Russell and Thomas P. Miller, who contracted for lands in 1795, but did not locate till 1796. Their number was increased the same year by John Grubb, Benjamin Russell, Anthony Saltsman and John McFarland. In 1797, William Saltsman, John Nicholson, the McKees, Jacob Weiss and Boe Bladen, a free colored man, were added to the colony. All of the above were New Englanders, except the Saltsmans, who were from Northumberland county, Bladen, who was from Maryland, and Weiss, from Cumberland county, in this State. Joseph Henderson made his location in 1798. In 1800, William Bell came in from Lyncoming county, Joseph F., William, Samuel and David McCreary from Lancaster county, and James Wilson, John M. Warren and John Cosper from New York. William Bladen and Samuel and Joseph Conrad, from Maryland, and the Ebersoles and the Riblets, from Eastern Pennsylvania, settled in the township in 1801; Hamlin Russell, from New England, Andrew Caughey and sons, Joseph B. McCreary and George Reed, all from Lancaster county; James Love and the Arbucksles from Cecil county, Maryland; John McCoy, John Robinson, Robert McClelland, John Pherrin, James Dumars and William Henry, in 1802. The Arbuckle family located first in Fairview, but Joseph, Adam and John changed to Mill Creek.

The date of the arrival of other pioneers is as follows: In 1803 John Kelley, from Mifflin county; in 1804, Christian Ebersole, from Lancaster county; George Bissell, Warren Foote and Andrew Martin, from New England; Abraham Wagner, David Robinson and John Mosier, all from Eastern Pennsylvania; in 1806, James B. Wilson, from Dauphin county; in 1807, John Fagan; in 1809, John Ryan; in 1810, George Haybarger, Spencer Shattuck, William Whitley, Alexander Robinson and sons, and Andrew and John Norcross; in 1811, John Evans, John Burton, sr., James Stewart, John McCrea and Robert Evans; in 1812, N. W. Russell and Calvin Foote; in 1813, Conrad Brown, sr., James Gill and I. M. Martin; in 1815, Samuel Flickinger, Jonas Parker and George and Arthur Davidson; in 1816, S. B. Wagner and Asa G. During the year 1828, a colony of "Pennsylvania Dutch" reached the township from Lancaster county, consisting of George Weigel, Martin Warfel, Samuel Brenneman, Thomas Mohr, Jacob Metzler and others, followed by Jacob Charles in 1829. The Davisons and Norcrosses settled first in Venango township, in 1801 and 1802, from which they moved to Mill Creek. George Haybarger, settled in Elk Creek in 1802, and John Evans in McKean, in 1802, changing to Mill Creek as above. Thomas Willis was born in England, came to this country when a boy, and lived for a time in Lancaster county. William Bell sold his farm and moved into Erie, where he built the old frame house on the site of the Becker block, and went into trade. The Zimmerman, Stough and three Kreider families came in from Lebanon or Berks county at the same time in 1805.

The Riblets, Ebersoles, Loups, Zucks and Browns were all from Lancaster and Berks counties. Spencer Shattuck was from Litchfield county, Connecticut, James Love resided in McKean a short time before going to Mill Creek. He located in McKean in 1802, and changed to Mill Creek in 1806. James Barr settled in North East about 1800, went to Harbor Creek in 1813, and from there to Mill Creek in 1830. The father of John Fagan located in Amity township in 1795, moving to Mill Creek about 1807. Benjamin Russell landed at Erie on July 4, 1796, and settled at Belle Valley, on almost the identical spot long occupied by his nephew, Capt. N. W. Russell, where he built a cabin and located 1,000 acres of land. He was followed in 1802 by his brother Hamlin, who purchased 150 acres from Benjamin, and established his home a little further west on the cross road.

The first male child born in the township was David M. Dewey, December 15, 1797, and the first female child was Matilda Reed, born November 14, 1798. Martin Stough died in West Mill Creek on the 2d of October, 1881, at the advanced age of 93 years, 3 weeks and 2 days. Deacon John Cook, one of the earliest residents, died in Belle Valley, October 5, 1895, at the unusual age of 97 years.

cial positions are not included in this list, because, although at one time residents of the township, they were not such when elected. Among the number is Gen. D. B. McCreary, a native of Mill Creek, Colonel of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Regiment, Assemblyman for three terms, Adjutant General of the State from 1867 to 1870, and State Senator for two terms; G. Russell, elected Coroner in 1892; and Conrad J. Brown, elected County Treasurer in 1895.

THE SCOTT FARMS.

The group of farms owned by Hon. Wm. L. Scott comprise some 1,380 acres, in addition to which he purchased the Jesse Ebersole place, of 250 acres, in 1888. The farms in Mill Creek township are known as the Algeria farm, Frontier place, the Cascade farm (McNair place), the Carter farm and Lake View farm. The nucleus of the Algeria stud farm, which became celebrated for the horses owned and reared there, was formed in 1880, with four mares and one stallion, Algerine, after which the place was named. Rayon d'Or, "the best race horse of his day in England and France," was imported in 1882 at a cost of $40,000. His total winnings on the turf before he was brought to America were $122,145. Nineteen of his "get" at the Algeria farm were sold at auction in December, 1887, for $44,275, or an average of $2,330 each. Kantaka, another famous horse, was imported in 1883, and the old race horse, Wanderer, joined the family in 1886. The five frame stables on the Algeria farm were built by David Burger in 1880, 1881, 1883, and 1884, and the Rayon d'Or stable, of brick, for the exclusive use of that valuable animal, by Henry Shenk, in the fall of 1882. The farms were long in charge of James Sampson, now a resident of California. Mr. Scott gave directions that after his death the stock of blooded-horses should be sold, which was done, and the Algeria was abandoned as a stud farm in 1892.

THE WEISS LIBRARY.

The late John Weiss left an estate worth about $58,000, the whole of which—with the exception of a bequest of $3,000 to the children of his deceased sister, Mrs. Hinkle—by the terms of his will, is to be applied to the establishment of a free public library for the use of the residents of West Mill Creek, McKean, Fairview township and Fairview borough. The section of his will relating to the library is as follows :

ITEM TENTH.—I give all the residue of my estate, real and personal, to Amos Hinkle, of Mill Creek township, and to Levi H. Kreider, of McKean township, and to ——— in trust, nevertheless, for the purpose and use hereinafter described, and I direct the same to be paid said trustees in cash or securities as soon as my executor hereinafter named shall be able to properly dispose of my property and settle my estate, and I direct that they procure by purchase or otherwise a piece of land not exceeding two acres, upon which they shall erect and maintain a building to be used for a free library and place for literary and mental improvement, and I direct said trustees to purchase and keep up a library, which shall comprise a good selection of books for reading and mental improvement, and prescribe rules therefor. This library shall be for the use and benefit of any and all residents of Fairview township and borough, McKean township and so much of Mill Creek as comprises the election district of West Mill Creek; without distinction of race, color, creed or sex.

I direct said trustees to erect a building on said lot, which I desire to be located for the convenience of the people of said townships, which building shall contain a library room, a hall for literary and scientific use, and such other apartments as may be deemed proper by said trustees, which building and ground shall not exceed in cost $5,000, and shall be kept insured, and if destroyed be replaced. The balance of said fund, after paying for ground and building, and library, shall be kept at interest upon real estate and the interest shall be applied to maintaining, replenishing, care and attendance of said library and building, repairs and taxes. And I direct said trustees in their discretion to apply from said increases for the education of some young person or persons, whom they deem worthy, meritorious and needy, a sum not exceeding $100 per year to each person so aided to assist in obtaining a liberal or scientific education. But this provision is not to interfere with or prevent the free execution of the direction contained in this item of my will, directing the erection of the hall and library, and the purchase and maintenance of same, and any income over what may be applied to the foregoing purpose shall go to the increase of said fund.

I direct that an annual report be made by said trustees to the Auditors of Mill Creek township, and, in case of failure to make such report for six months at any time, after being requested to do so by any three resident taxpayers of any of said townships, I request the Orphans' Court to compel trustees to do so, and in case of second failure I empower said Court to appoint new trustees who would be required to give bail in double the amount of the fund, and serve without pay. All of the foregoing trustees shall serve without pay and give bail to be approved by the Court before they receive the money. And vacancies shall be filled by the surviving trustees or trustee, and if they fail to qualify, then the Court to appoint.

The site selected for the location of the library is at the junction of the Thomas road with the Valley road, near the corners of Mill Creek, Fairview and McKean townships, on land donated by Amos Hinkle, a brother-in-law of Mr. Weiss, being a part of the old Weiss homestead. When the library is in full operation, Mill Creek township will have one of the most credible public institutions in the county, and the name of John Weiss will take rank, on a local scale, with that of Girard, Astor, Tilden, Cooper, and other great benefactors of their race. The building is of brick and cost some $5,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Weigleville, there are two routes into the city, the one by way of Federal Hill, and the other by Brown's avenue. The latter is due to the foresight of the late Conrad Brown, who rightly judged that a more direct route from the western part of the city to the Ridge road would be a popular project. He laid out the avenue eighty feet wide in 1808, and was rewarded by selling off a large portion of his farm for city lots at good prices.

The cross-road from the Pioneer farm to the Ridge road was opened about 1833.

A formidable swamp once extended across Mill Creek township from east to west, nearly midway between the Ridge and Lake roads. Within Erie city, it lay between Twelfth and Eighteenth streets, and was so gloomy and impenetrable that the land was regarded by the first settlers as almost valueless. As early as 1810, however, William Wallace, who owned a strip from the east branch of Cascade creek westward, dug a ditch which had the effect of reclaiming a portion of the swamp. About 1840, the inhabitants of the vicinity, alarmed by the sickness occasioned by the swamp, formed a bee and dug another ditch across the Lake road through the farms of E. J. Kelso and James C. Marshall, which still further reclaimed the waste land. These and other measures have nearly dried up the swamp, and in a few years no trace of it will remain. The latest improvement in this direction was made by D. D. Tracy, whose ditches have nearly removed all traces of the swamp.

The old town hall on Federal Hill, was sold some years ago to the city, of which it became a part by the extension of the corporate limits, and the township business is now done in Schultz's Hall, near by.

The Schwingel farm, near Kearsarge, was the scene of a dreadful tragedy on the night of Friday, the 15th of October, 1880. Charles Schwingel, with some neighbors, had spent the evening drinking hard cider and playing cards. Philip, his brother, came home from Erie late at night very drunk. After the neighbors had left, Charles and Philip fell into a dispute, which resulted in the death of the former by a pistol shot fired by the latter. Philip was tried, convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to the Alleghany penitentiary.

CHAPTER XIV.

NORTH EAST TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF NORTH EAST.

NORTH EAST TOWNSHIP received its title when the county was established, and derived its name from its position as the northeastern township of the original sixteen. Its limits were extended in 1841 by adding a wedge-shaped strip from Greenfield. The township has a frontage upon the lake of more than eight miles, a breadth of over seven miles in the widest part, along the New York line, and of a little less than five miles on the Harbor Creek line. It is bounded on the north by Lake Erie, on the east by Chautauqua county, New York, on the south by Greenfield and on the west by Harbor Creek. The lands of North East township average as well as any section of the county. The lake shore plain is about three miles in width, rising gradually from a height of about seventy-five feet near the water's edge to about 200 feet in the vicinity of the borough. An abrupt elevation takes place in Harbor Creek township, at Twelve-Mile creek, and this continues across North East nearly to Twenty-Mile creek, where the land again falls to the general level of the lake shore. The greatest height is on the Bothwell farm, a mile east of North East Station, where the summit of the railroad is attained between Buffalo and Erie. The lake shore lands readily produce every kind of grain, fruit, flower and vegetable that can be raised in this latitude. East of Sixteen-Mile creek, on the Lake road, they are usually of a sandy loam. West of that, on the same road, and upon the Buffalo road, they are of a gravelly nature. The hills in the south part rise gradually to the summit in Greenfield and there is scarcely any waste land in the township. The hill farms are clay, loam and gravel. Land ranges in value from forty dollars to $100 an acre. This does not include planted grapelands, which are held at from $150 to $350 an acre, according to the location.

The population of the township has been as follows: 1,068 in 1820; 1,706 in 1830; 1,793 in 1840; 2,379 in 1850; 1,900 in 1860; 2,313 in 1870; 2,152 in 1880, and 2,124 in 1890.

The only postoffice in the township is at Northville, most of the mail being received at North East borough. The township is divided into the East and West election districts.

ORIGINAL RESIDENTS.

The first person to locate land in the township was Joseph Shaddock, who came from Vermont and took up a tract in 1794, near the center. He was joined in a few months by George and Henry Hurst from New Jersey. Although these parties filed an application for their lands in that year, they did not make an actual settlement until 1795. Henry Hurst, after a brief residence, moved to Meadville, and was elected to represent the district in the State Senate. Shaddock also changed, going to Greenfield, where he remained until his death. The same year that Shaddock and the Hursts made their settlement, George Lowry took up a tract of 400 acres in or near the borough. He was followed in 1796 by his mother, Margaret Lowry, and her family, who located 2,800 acres more in the vicinity of George's land, of which they paid the State for 2,000 acres. Mrs. Lowry was of Scotch-Irish birth, but emigrated to Cumberland county, in this State, and came from there to this county. She was the mother of ten sons, of whom four—Robert, Andrew, George and Morrow—married four daughters of James Barr. From this stock descended Hon. Morrow B. Lowry, the famous politician. James and Bailey Donaldson arrived in 1795; Henry and Dyer Loomis in 1796; Thomas Robinson, Joseph McCord, James McMahan (all of Perry county), William Wilson, James Duncan, Francis Brawley and Abram and Arnold Custard in 1797; Thomas Crawford, with his sons, William, James and Robert, Lemuel Brown, Mathew Taylor, William Allison, Henry Burgett, and John, James and Mathew Greer in 1797-98. In the summer of 1800, Robert Hampson, with his wife and one child, from Juniata county, settled in the township, where he lived until his death. Among those who reached the township about 1800 were Alexander T. Blaine, John and Andrew McCord, Samuel Graham, Robert Burrows, William Dundas, Campbell, Joel Loomis, James Barr, Timothy, Amos and Jerry Tuttle, Timothy Newton, James Silliman, Thomas Mellen, Cornyn Shaddock, Tristram Brown, Robert McNeill, Stephen Sparrow, Perrin Ross, Chas. Allen, John Russell, M. Brown and Hezekiah Brown. Of the later settlers Henry Taylor located in the township in 1802; Wm. Dickson about 1805; Wendell Butt in 1810; Jesse Belknap in 1812; Cyrus Robinson in 1813; Justin Nash, Gilbert Belknap and W. E. Mason in 1814; Harmon Ensign, Buell Phillips, Edmund Orton, Joseph Force, Joseph Law and Levi and Shubal Atkins in 1815; Alexander Davidson, William Hall, Dr. Smedley, Clark Putnam and John Butt in 1816; Arnold Warner in 1817; O. Selkriegg in 1818; Hugh Beatty in 1819; Clark Bliss in 1821;

Bester Town in 1824; James Cole in 1825; John Scouler, William Graham, D. D. Loop and N. C. Remington in 1830; Amos Gould about 1831; E. N. Fuller in 1835; Calvin Spafford in 1836; J. S. Haynes in 1837; William Griffith and R. A. White in 1840; Stephen Griffith in 1846; Henry Wolf about 1857; William E. Marvin and Isaac Wolf in 1859, and E. K. Nason in 1860. James Barr finally changed to Mill Creek. Levi Atkins died in his 100th year.

Reference is made in the general land history to the litigation between the Pennsylvania Population Company and the citizens who claimed title by virtue of mere settlement. The burden of these troubles largely fell upon the settlers of North East. The Lowrys, Wilsons and Barrs fought the claims of the company until the matter was settled by the decision of the United States Supreme Court.

EARLY INCIDENTS.

The first church was organized under the auspices of the Presbytery of Ohio in 1801. The first brick house in the county outside of Erie was erected by James Silliman in 1809, about a mile east of the borough, and is still standing. The first Justices of the Peace were Timothy Tuttle and Thomas Robinson. Mr. Robinson was the Justice who married the parents of Gen. C. M. Reed in 1801. The first gristmill in the township was built by Col. Tuttle on Sixteen-Mile creek in 1807. The first building used for a schoolhouse was built in 1798 on "the north side of the main road near the house belonging to the Brookins farm." The first road was cut through from Freeport to Greenfield in 1797. The first mail route between Buffalo and Erie was established in 1806. The first regular line of coaches was in 1820-21. The first telegraph line was put up in 1847 or 1848. The first regular passenger train passed through from the State line to Erie on the 8th of January, 1852. [For further information as to some of these events see the General History of the county.]

COMMON ROADS AND RAILROADS.

The common roads which are most extensively traveled are the Buffalo road, running across the township at an average distance of about a mile and a half south of the lake, and the Lake road, which approaches the water's edge in the eastern part of Harbor Creek and follows the bank of the lake through North East township almost to the mouth of Sixteen-Mile creek. From there to Twenty-Mile creek the direct road has been abandoned, but another road further back from the lake carries the route to the mouth of the latter stream, where it again follows the water eastward through New York.

The Lake Shore R. R. runs across the township from east to west at an average of two miles from the lake, in nearly a straight line and with a light grade. The New York, Chicago and St. Louis R. R. crosses the township in the same direction as the Lake Shore R. R., and, generally speaking, at a distance of seventy-five to 200 feet south of it. Both roads have stations at North East and Northville.

PRINCIPAL STREAMS.

The township is one of the best watered in the county, a great number of rivulets springing out of the high land in the south and uniting their waters before reaching the lake. The main streams are Twelve-Mile creek in the west, Sixteen-Mile creek in the center and Twenty-Mile creek in the east, with Spring creek, Spafford run and Averill run between.

Twelve-Mile creek rises on the northern edge of Greenfield, flows in a general north-eastern direction and falls into the lake in Harbor Creek, after a course of about ten miles.

Sixteen-Mile creek takes its rise in Greenfield township, within a mile of French creek, passes the borough on its west side, and enters the lake at Preport. Its length is about ten miles and its general course northwest. About two and a half miles south of the borough Sixteen-Mile creek is joined by Graham creek, which rises in New York, and is perhaps four miles long. At the point of junction, there is a "hog's back," which is nearly perpendicular on the east side. The gully at the "hog's back" is not far from 150 feet deep.

The heads of Twenty-mile creek are in Westfield and Sherman townships, Chautauqua county, N. Y., and its mouth is near the northeast corner of North East township, just east of the New York line. It enters the State about a mile above the crossing of the Lake Shore R. R., and must have a length of ten to twelve miles. The deep gulf of this stream begins three or four miles south of the Lake Shore R. R. culvert, and continues nearly to the lake, some two miles further by the windings of the creek. Its depth where the railroad crosses is about 110 feet. The culvert at this point is one of the finest pieces of masonry in the country. The Nickel Plate R. R. has an iron bridge about an eighth of a mile above, which is a skillful piece of work.

The gully on the head-waters of Sixteen-Mile creek, in the south part of the township, runs out in the vicinity of the borough, but begins again just below, and continues to the lake. It is nowhere as abrupt as that of Twenty-Mile creek, except at the junction above referred to. Twelve-Mile creek has steep banks from Moorheadville to its mouth, but above that the gully is less deep and striking than those of the other streams.

MILLS AND FACTORIES.

The mills and factories are as follows: A grist and sawmill and a cider and vinegar-factory in the "gulf" of Twenty-Mile creek; a paper-mill (not now running) on Sixteen-Mile creek; a furniture-factory, a grist-mill, a cider-mill and vinegar-factory, a door, blind and sash factory, a tannery, a saw-mill, a basket-factory and a brickyard, all near the borough. The South Shore Wine Company have an extensive winery north of the borough, and Mr. Mottier has another near by. A number of mills and factories which were in operation ten years or so ago, have been burned or allowed to run down.

The paper-mill, once one of the best known institutions in Erie county, was established by Steele, Judd & Easton in 1833, and, after passing into the hands of William L. Hall, was burned in 1838. It was immediately rebuilt by John Scouller and Chauncey Easton, the former of whom soon purchased his partner's interest. Mr. Scouller sold the mill in 1853 to James S. Johnson, who was the victim of another fire on the 16th of August, 1881, which almost destroyed the property. By July 2, 1872, Mr. Johnson had the mill running again on a more extensive scale than ever, but in re-building he became involved, and was obliged to succumb to the financial pressure. The mill was sold to Cochran & Young, of Erie, who ran it until January 1,

J. A. Forman

1888, when it passed into the hands of West, Swaney & Jackson, of Pittsburg. These gentlemen failed, and the mill, after passing through several managements, finally became the property of the Keystone Bank of Erie. Operations ceased some ten years ago.

A GREAT GRAPE SECTION.

The cultivation of grapes was commenced on a small scale, in North East township, about 1850, by Messrs. Hammond & Griffith, who planted their first vineyard near the establishment of the South Shore Wine Company. It was soon discovered that the soil and climate were peculiarly favorable to the growth of this luscious fruit, and the small beginning of forty-five years ago has developed until there are thousands of acres under cultivation in the township. The South Shore Wine Company was formed in 1869. They built a large cellar on the road between the borough and lake, and have done an extensive business in shipping grapes and making wine.

For a while it was thought the lake shore lands north of the borough were the only ones suitable for the purpose, but of late years the vineyards have spread all over the township, even to the hillsides extending into Greenfield. The grapes are sent to all parts of the country, and some shipments have been made to Europe. It is claimed that there were 3,500 acres of grape lands in North East township alone in 1895, and that 450 carloads of grapes were shipped from that station, at North East during the same year. [See Miscellaneous chapter in General History of Erie county].

Besides the grape culture, the township has become an important berry, fruit, melon and vegetable growing region. A good deal of trucking is done for the Erie and oil country markets.

VILLAGES, ETC.

The village of Freeport, at the mouth of Sixteen-Mile creek, a mile and a half north of the borough, though now nothing more than a straggling collection of houses, was once expected to become a lake port of considerable magnitude. When the Population Company established their headquarters at Colt's Station, their supplies were received mainly by boat from Buffalo and landed at Freeport. To transport these goods the first road in the county—with the exception of the old French road—was opened from Freeport to Greenfield in 1797, which a year afterward was extended to Wattsburg. The road followed generally the same route as the one which now runs from the depot at North East to French creek. Quite a trade was done at Freeport till 1802, when the removal of the company's headquarters to Erie suspended the lake traffic. Afterward it did a good business as a lumber port, but this did not last long. The village is something of a fishing place and several families are supported by the fisheries. The first foundry in Erie county was established at Freeport in 1824, by Philetus Glass and others for the manufacture of cast iron plows.

Northville is mainly in New York, but the postoffice is in Pennsylvania. The place embraces two stores, a hotel, church and twenty or thirty dwellings. The Buffalo road passes through, and the town is a station on the Lake Shore and Nickel Plate R. R.'s. The Methodist Episcopal congregation is at least seventy years old, and built the first church in 1841. The second one was erected in 1880, and was replaced by a third one in 1894.

The little settlement of Grahamville, at the cross roads, about three and a half miles southeast of the borough, was founded by Samuel Graham, who came from Centre county in 1800, his brothers James and Ebenezer locating at the same time in Summit township. A tannery was established there in 1835 by Robert Graham, a sawmill by James Graham in the same year, an ashery by E. N. Fuller in 1842, and a distillery, wagon shop and blacksmith shop some time between 1830 and the latter year. The place was at the height of its prosperity from 1842 to 1846, when, for some reason, it began to run down, the store being closed in 1847, and the ashery and distillery soon after. It consists at present of a schoolhouse (in which religious services are sometimes held), a blacksmith shop, wagon shop, about fifteen houses and fifty or sixty inhabitants.

North of the borough, and near the bank of the lake, is the Dill Park House, a pleasant summer resort. The enterprise was started by H. S. Southard in 1875. Robert Dill has owned the property a number of years.

CHURCHES AND CEMETERIES.

In addition to the church at Northville, there is one belonging to the German Lutherans on the north side of the Greenfield line, on the Town Line road, about half a mile east of the North East and Wattsburg road. It was built in 1884 or '85.

The township contains three regularly incorporated cemeteries, besides the graveyard at Northville and one near the woolen-mill. The one known as the North East cemetery, which is used by the borough and township in common, occupies high ground on the west bank of Sixteen-Mile creek, along the Buffalo road, a short distance west of the borough limits. The cemetery company was incorporated April 15, 1882. Twelve and one-half acres were purchased from the heirs of P. S. V. Hamot, to which five acres were added that had been used as a burial ground for fifty years.

The cemetery of the Phillips Burial Ground Association is on the Henry Wolf farm, about two and a half miles east of the borough, along the Buffalo road. Although there had been a graveyard on the site for many years, the management was never regularly incorporated until 1868. Mrs. Buel Phillips, wife of the donor, was the first person buried there. Her death took place in 1822.

The Grahamville Burying Ground Association was incorporated in the spring of 1879. The society's grounds are on the road from North East to Grahamville. The site has been used as a graveyard for nearly sixty years.

SCHOOL HISTORY.

In the western part of the township, about a half-mile north of the track of the Lake Shore R. R., was what was known as the Hildebrand house, in which school was taught about the year 1811. Not long after a log schoolhouse was built eighty or 100 rods south of the same site, in which the first school was taught about 1814. In the early history of the township, the children residing east of the "gulf," in the northeastern portion, attended school in New York State. An early school was taught not far from the State line in a vacant building. A schoolhouse was built probably one mile from the line in New York as soon as 1816. About one mile southwest of the church at Northville, in the Orton district, a schoolhouse was erected, in which school was opened in the winter of 1832-33. School was taught in the Belknap district, about one and one-half miles south of the Orton school in the winter of 1833-34. When the common school system went into force, the township was prompt to avail itself of its benefits. [The list above does not include the first schoolhouse mentioned in the "early incidents."]

BOROUGH OF NORTH EAST.

[SEE NORTH EAST TOWNSHIP.]

The borough of North East lies nearly in the center of the township, between its eastern and western lines, about a mile and a half south from the lake, upon the highest ground of the lake shore plain. It is an important station on the Lake Shore and the Nickel Plate R. R.'s, fifteen miles east of Erie and seventy-three west of Buffalo. The Buffalo road constitutes its main street. A branch of Sixteen-Mile creek runs through the place, and the main stream waters its southwestern section. North East is justly regarded as one of the most pleasant and enterprising towns in the county.

The land covered by the borough was purchased from the State by a settler named Brown, who sold it in 1804 to an Eastern man by the name of Gibson. The earliest dwelling within the borough limits was a log cabin, built by William Dundas, a little to the east of the Presbyterian parsonage. In this modest abode the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered for the first time in Erie county, according to the Protestant form, on Sunday, the 27th of September, 1801. The Dundas property was sold in 1806 to Henry Burgett, who converted it into a tavern, and occupied it as such for years. A more pretentious tavern was erected in 1808, by Lemuel Brown, on the site of the present Haynes House. Previous to the ventures of Burgett and Brown, a tavern had been kept by George Lowry, near the park. The first store was opened in 1816, by Alexander McCloskey, in a building on Main street, at the foot of Vine. By degrees a village sprang up around the taverns, which received the title of Burgettstown, after Henry Burgett, the landlord. In 1819 the name was changed to Gibsonville, in honor of the man who owned most of the property, and donated the park to the use of the public. It was known by that title until the 27th of February, 1834, when the village was incorporated as the borough of North East. The original limits were extended in 1852, and again at a quite recent date. The postoffice was established in May, 1812. The population has been as follows: In 1840, 899; in 1850, 387; in 1860, 952; in 1870, 902; in 1880, 1,396; in 1890, 1,538. The borough is separated into the East and West wards.

CHURCHES.

The Presbyterian society, the oldest religious organization in Erie county, was founded in 1801, as "the Church of Lower Greenfield," under circumstances which are narrated in the early chapters of this book. Thomas Robinson and John McCord were ordained as the first elders. Services were held in the woods and in the barn or tan bark house of Joseph McCord till 1804, when a log church building was erected upon a tract of five acres, given for the purpose by Henry Hurst, which is now occupied as a part of the North East cemetery. A Sabbath-school was established, and a day school was also maintained in connection with the church. In 1818, the congregation commenced the erection of a new frame building nearly in the center of the present park, and finished it in 1822. In 1832, fifty-eight members, separated from the congregation and were constituted a church at Harbor Creek. A second building was erected in 1860, and the old one in the park was torn down in 1862. The big fire of August, 1884, destroyed the second church, and a new one, better than either of the others, was put up immediately after. [For fuller particulars in regard to this charge, see the General History.]

The Methodist Episcopal congregation was organized in 1812, by Rev. Thomas Branch, a missionary from Connecticut. The original members were Tristram Brown, George Culver, John Russell, and two others, with their wives. For ten years the congregation were without a house of worship. In 1822, a brick building was erected on the eastern side of the park, facing the south. The present edifice was built in 1852, and the old one was torn down the same year.

The first Baptist society occupied a small log structure in the eastern part of the township. In 1832 a new congregation was organized, and erected a building on the Buffalo road, about two miles east of the borough in 1833. This society ceased to exist about 1850. A third congregation was established in 1858. The present church building was put up in 1859, and a Sabbath schoolroom was added in 1870. A split in the congregation during the spring of 1895 resulted in a considerable loss of members. In April of that year forty-seven persons withdrew at one time.

St. Paul's German Evangelical Lutheran congregation was organized in 1864, and became a separate charge in 1868. The first church was built in 1867, and was replaced by a new one about 1888. The original building is used as a parochial school, which is quite flourishing.

The Episcopal Mission of the Holy Cross was organized in 1872. The society placed a building under roof during the season of 1879, which was completed in due time.

St. Gregory's Catholic Church was erected about the year 1860. For years prior to this, the Catholic families had been visited by priests from Dunkirk and occasionally from Erie. In July, 1870, Father Briody entered upon his duties as pastor in connection with the one at Girard. The church as first erected was a mere shell of a building, but has been remodeled and improved. A parsonage adjoins the church.

The German Church of the Evangelical Association of North America was organized in 1870. Preaching had been held occasionally for several years prior to that time. The corner-stone of the present building was laid October 2, 1870, and the church was dedicated January 15, 1871.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE.

St. Mary's College, a Catholic educational institution, is situated just north of the borough, on a gently rising knoll, which commands a view of Lake Erie and the surrounding country. This college was built at great expense by the Methodist denomination in 1860, and was called the Lake Shore Seminary. Owing to financial difficulties, it was obliged after a few years to close its doors to students. The building stood unoccupied for several years, when it was purchased by the Redemptorist Fathers of the State of Pennsylvania, a congregation of missionary priests.

When the necessary alterations in the interior of the building had been made, it was dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Tobias Mullen, Bishop of Erie, on the 2d of August, 1881, amid a great concourse of priests and people. A pontifical high-mass was celebrated in the great hall by the Rt. Rev. Bishop, assisted by a number of visiting clergy, after which the Very Rev. Wm. Wayrich, of New York, preached a sermon on Education, explaining to the assembled crowds the aim and scope of the college that was thenceforward to be known as St. Mary's.

The college is a brick structure, three stories high, with a fine basement, the latter containing the refectories of the professors and of the students, kitchen, store-rooms, bakery, boiler-room and closets. The first room is taken up by the oratory, recitation halls, class-rooms, infirmary and pharmacopœia. The second floor embraces the chapel, study hall, sacristy and professors' rooms. Two large dormitories occupy the whole of the third floor. Above the third floor is a half-story, which has been utilized for lavatory and bath-rooms.

In 1894 an east wing was added to the main building at an expense of $40,000. This structure had been contemplated for a number of years. It was constructed of brick and conforms in general outline with the main building. The new building embraces study halls, private oratory for the faculty, dining-room, kitchen and library (containing 6,000 volumes); also handsomely decorated reading-rooms. The faculty now have in contemplation a chapel, which will be erected to the west of the main building. This, it is expected, will be added to the college buildings within the next few years.

When the college passed into the hands of the Redemptorist Fathers the grounds were not sufficiently large; they therefore bought two pieces of land, the one lying on the east of the building, the other on the west. A large sum of money has been expended by the college authorities in beautifying the grounds, with the result that the college and its surroundings form one of the finest ornaments in the borough.

As the aim of the institution is to fit young men for the priesthood in the missionary congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer, only such students as are desirous of joining the congregation are admitted. After a six-years' course has been completed, the graduates proceed to Annapolis, Md., where, during the space of one year, they receive a spiritual training and are tried in various ways to test their religious vocation. At the expiration of the year they make their religious profession, thus consecrating themselves to God. They then begin at Ilchester, Md., a six-years course of higher studies, Philosophy, Theology, Sacred Scripture, Canon Law, Church History and Sacred Liturgy. Toward the end of the course they are ordained priests, and, after an additional training of six months, for the special work of the missions, they are sent forth into the world to labor in behalf of the church.

At the present time (September 1, 1895) the faculty consists of the president, Very Rev. Aug. Dooper, and nine professors: Rev. Fathers Auth, Saftig, Bausch, Schautz, DeLaad, Tarr, Cook, Coughlan and Prof. Aug. Messier. The average number of students is 100. The course of studies is the same as that pursued in the ordinary ecclesiastical college, viz.: a course in Greek, Latin, English, German and French languages, rhetoric, history (ancient, mediæval and modern), mathematics (algebra, geometry and trigonometry), Christian doctrine and plain chant.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

A day school was taught in the old log meeting house, above referred to, soon after the year 1804, which was maintained until about 1817, when a log schoolhouse was built not far from the center of the park. This was the regular school for the vicinity. In 1824 the present grounds were purchased and a small brick building erected, in which school was taught as early as 1826. In 1818 a summer school was taught in the office of Dr. Dunlap, the site being just in front of the house of E. Scouller.

The next village schoolhouse was a large frame building, erected in 1844, on the site of the brick house, at a cost of $3,000, raised by subscription. This was replaced by the present school building, erected in 1878 at a cost of $10,000, and enlarged and much improved in 1893. All the public schools of the borough are held in this structure. The schools were first graded in 1878, and the first commencement exercises were held in 1881.

BANKS AND HOTELS.

The first banking institution of the borough was established by A. W. Blaine about the year 1860, at the corner of Lake and Main streets. This was merged into the First National Bank when it was organized in 1865. The latter, which is still in operation, opened with Wm. Griffith as president and A. W. Blaine as cashier.

The People's Savings Institution was incorporated in April, 1870, and commenced business May 1 of that year. The firm of Blaine, Gould & Short, which subsequently became Short, Blaine & Co., opened in 1871. This institution stopped business May 14, 1883, and the People's Savings Bank became its successor. The latter suspended on the 23d of January, 1895. Five days after, January 28, Sampson Short started a private bank under the name of the Short Banking Company.

W. A. Ensign & Co. also have a private bank.

The hotels of North East are the Brawley House, built in 1833; the Haynes House (originally) in 1852-3; the Palace Hotel, by Sampson Short, in 1877, and the Earl Hotel, started in 1894. The first hotel—or more properly, tavern—was opened by George Lowry, the second by Henry Burgett, the third by Lemuel Brown, and the fourth by the latter's son, Hiram L., who erected the house once owned by Miss Davison for that purpose. In course of time, the two Browns almost monopolized the tavern business of the town. Hiram L., eventually purchased the Eagle Hotel property at the corner of State street and the northeast side of the Park in Erie. It burned down and he erected another house on its site, which was known as Brown's Hotel until its purchase by Col. Ellsworth, when the name was changed to the Ellsworth House. The Haynes House was burned in the fire of 1894 and promptly re-built.

FACTORIES—MILLS—WATER WORKS.

The manufacturing institutions of the borough are: The Short Manufacturing Co., the Eureka Tempered Copper Co., the Scouller Milling Co., a large fertilizer and chemical works, the Columbia Novelty Co., an iron foundry and specialty works, a carriage and trimming factory, a tub and firkin factory, a wire goods works, a number of grape basket, fruit and cigar box factories, a cod liver and emulsion factory, an unfermented wine establishment, and various smaller concerns. It will be seen that, for a place of the size, the manufacturing interests are unusually extensive. The town is also the headquarters of the Lake Erie Grape Growers' Association, which controls most of the Erie county grape shipments.

North East has a fine system of public water supply. The works were commenced in the spring of 1885 and practically completed in the fall of that year, at a cost of about twenty thousand dollars. The water is collected into a reservoir from springs on the hills southeast of the borough and led through pipes into the streets, furnishing a pressure which avoids the necessity of fire engines.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first attempt to establish a paper was by J. J. Barker, who commenced the North East Guard in 1855, but only printed it a few months. In August, 1867, the North East Herald was started by S. O. Hayward, who abandoned its publication at the end of a year. The North East Star was commenced September 26, 1868, by Brainerd & Cushman, both of whom are now practicing lawyers. Mr. Brainerd sold his interest in 1869 to L. B. Cushman. The name of the paper was changed to the Sun in March, 1873, and, since that date, it has been edited by the Cushman Brothers. May 2, 1883, it was consolidated with the Advertiser, started by W. E. Belknap & Co., in March, 1877.

The North East Advertiser (a different paper from the one above referred to) was founded by George W. Moore, as an independent journal, December 20, 1884. In 1890 it espoused the cause of the Farmers' Alliance, and continued in that interest until the death of Mr. Moore in November 1892. The paper was then purchased by Messrs. M. C. Moore and Thomas O. Marshall, who made it independent again, and remain in charge, under the firm name of the Advertiser Printing and Publishing Company.

The North East Breeze was started May 8, 1893, with W. H. Sandborn as editor and proprietor, who has continued ever since.

Brainerd, 1883-85 (resident of Erie when elected). State Senator, Henry Hurst, 1816-21 (resident of Meadville when elected); James D. Dunlap, 1845 (resident of Erie when elected); Emory A. Julius C. Burrows, Member of Congress from the Kalamazoo district of Michigan a number of terms, and elected United States Senator from that State early in 1895, was born in North East, on the 9th of January, 1837. Among other prominent natives of North East are Rev. Cyrus Dickson, the eminent Presbyterian preacher, and Rev. Thomas H. Robinson, for years pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Harrisburg, and now a college professor at Sewickly. Alfred Short was the Democratic and Greenback nominee for Congress in this district in 1880, and Thos. O. Marshall was elected a delegate on the Democratic ticket to the proposed State Constitutional Convention in 1891. John C.

Brady, ex-Mayor of Erie, and George P. Griffith, a prominent Erie attorney, regard themselves as "North East boys."

MISCELLANEOUS.

North East furnished one captain to each of the Erie county regiments in the war for the Union, viz.: N. L. Terrell, Co. K, 83d; John Braden, Co. F, 111th; Dyer Loomis, Co. C, 145th.

The borough has been visited by four destructive fires. One on Sunday night, the 19th of December, 1858, consumed a row of buildings extending from the Presbyterian Church to the Union block. Another on May 23, 1872, destroyed a number of wooden structures on Main street. The third, in the summer of 1874, demolished some buildings that occupied the present site of the opera house. The fourth and last of a widespread nature, occurred on August 13, 1884. It burned the Presbyterian Church and a large portion of the business section.

Dyer Loomis was elected Justice of the Peace in the spring of 1845, and held the office until the spring of 1880, a period of thirty-five years.

Most of the secret societies in vogue in this section have lodges in the borough. The Masonic lodge was organized in 1867 (E. K. Nason being the first Master), and the Odd Fellows' lodge in 1850.

Dr. Samuel G. Orton, the famous Presbyterian evangelist, resided in North East during the closing years of his life.

The fourth annual grape, fruit, flower and vegetable Fair and Horticultural Institute was held in North East on the 18th, 19th and 20th of September, 1895. The exhibit was one of the most interesting ever given in the county.

HOW LINCOLN CAME TO GROW A BEARD.

The following communication appeared in the New York Daily Press of January 24, 1890:

To the Editor of the Press: The true history of Mr. Lincoln's beard is as follows: At the various stations between Springfield and Washington in 1861 he delivered some thirty-eight impressive and carefully worded speeches, which were at that time recorded. At North East station Mr. Lincoln took occasion to state that during the campaign he had received a letter from a young girl of the place, in which he was kindly admonished to do certain things, and among others to let his whiskers grow, and as he had acted upon her advice he would be glad to welcome his fair correspondent if she was present. In response to the call a lassie made her way through the crowd, was helped on the platform and was kissed by the President.

Some eight years ago this same young girl, "then residing with her husband and their six children in Kansas, to correct errors which had crept into newspapers," gave minutely the correspondence between her and Abraham Lincoln in 1860, as follows:

"In 1860, while on my way home from school, I bought with a penny a Lincoln and Hamlin campaign badge. That evening my father and my brother, who were both staunch Republicans, on examining the Lincoln side of the badge, said that they could never vote for such a homely man. 'No, he is not homely,' said I. 'He would be a very handsome man if he would only let his whiskers grow.' So I wrote him if he would let his whiskers grow that I could get my father and my brother to vote for him, and asked him to please answer my letter; but should he not have time to answer it himself, please let his little girl answer it for him. In his reply, which came a few days after, he said that he was very sorry that he hadn't a little girl to answer my letter for him; that his family consisted of himself, his wife and three boys; that he would answer it himself, and that he would let his whiskers grow. On the 16th of February, 1861, my curiosity to know whether he had actually kept his promise led me to take my place in the crowd as near the front as possible. His first appearance on the platform convinced me that the promise had been faithfully kept. And, to my surprise, he had spoken but few words when he alluded to me and my letter and invited me upon the platform. Mustering all the courage at my command I pressed my way through the crowd, was helped to the platform, and as the great President took my hand he kissed me and then supported me down the steps. As the train moved on he waved his hand at the crowd, which cheered until it had passed out of sight, and then closed in on me and cheered until I was deaf."

CHAPTER XV.

SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF EAST SPRINGFIELD.

SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP, one of the original sixteen, is the most north-westerly in the county. It is bounded on the north by Lake Erie, on the east by Girard and Conneaut townships, on the south by Conneaut, and on the west by Ash-tabula county, Ohio. Up to the year 1835, the south line was a mile or so further north than now, but by an arrangement with Conneaut the latter ceded that portion of her territory lying beyond the creek, on condition that Springfield should pay one-half the expense of maintaining bridges along the boundary. The east line of Springfield extended to Miles Grove, parallel with that of Conneaut and Elk Creek, until 1832, when the township was reduced by the formation of Girard. The first officers of the township were elected in 1811. Springfield contained 896 inhabitants in 1820, 1,520, in 1830, 2,344 in 1840, 1,916 in 1850, 1,742 in 1870, 1,792 in 1880 and 1,642 in 1890, inclusive of the borough of East

Springfield. Its greatest length is about seven and a half and its greatest width about six and a quarter miles. The villages of West Springfield and North Springfield both have postoffices of the same name. East Springfield, the most populous place in the township, was created a borough in 1887. The old State line of Pennsylvania, before the purchase of the Triangle, terminated on the Hewitt farm in Springfield, between four and five miles east of the Ohio boundary.

EARLY SETTLERS.

Captain Samuel Holliday, of Franklin county, the first settler in the township, came on in 1796, located 700 acres at the mouth of Crooked creek, built a cabin, and returned to his former home in the fall of the year. Soon after his arrival, he was joined by John Devore, of Bedford county, John Mershon, of New Jersey, and William McIntyre and Patrick Ager, natives of Ireland, but residents for a time in Eastern Pennsylvania, all of whom became permanent settlers. Capt. Holliday married in Franklin county in April, 1797, and the young couple started immediately on a wedding tour to their new home, Mrs. H. riding on horseback and her husband walking by her side with his gun over his shoulder. Their route was by a trail through the woods from Pittsburg to Erie, and from there along the beach of the lake to the mouth of Crooked creek. During the year 1797, the little colony was increased by the arrival of Oliver Cross, from Vermont, and of Thomas and Oliver Dunn, from Ireland. The Duns remained but a few months, when they changed to McKean. Other pioneers reached the township as follows: In 1798, Nicholas Lebarer, of Bedford county; in 1800, Matthias Brindle, of Franklin county, and a Mr. Bruce; in 1801, Robert McKee, of Cumberland county, and Oliver Smith, from Massachusetts; in 1802, Isaac, Jesse, John D. and Thomas R. Miller, John Eaton and John Law, all of Franklin county, Henry Adams, of Massachusetts, John Hewitt, of Connecticut and John Rudd, Jr.; in 1803, Andrew Cochran and Abraham Eagley, of Dauphin county, George Ferguson, of Cumberland county, and William Ferguson of Ohio; in 1804, Samuel Rea, of Franklin county, and John Rudd, sr., and family; in 1806, John Hall, of Millin county; in 1808, Erastus DeWolf, of New York; in 1810, Joseph Ware, of Vermont; in 1813, Zachariah Thomas, of Vermont; in 1815, William Gould, of Chautauqua county, New York, Anderson Hubbard, of Ohio, and Luke Thayer, of Massachusetts; in 1816, Benjamin Carr, of Essex county, New York; in 1817, John Albert, of Cattaraugus county, New York; in 1818, David Ellis, of Massachusetts, and Derby Walter and Ezekiel Currier, both of Lyme, New Hampshire; in 1819, Andrew and Henry Mallory and Thomas Ivory, all of New York; in 1820, James, Benjamin and Lucius Bond, of Massachusetts, John S. Sherman, of New York, and James Anderson, of Virginia; in 1822 Wm. Doty, of North East; in 1824, A. Whiton, of Ashtabula county, Ohio; in 1826, John Mausell, of Otsego county, New York, and Peter Simmons; in 1829, Geo. Simmons, of Saratoga county, New York; in 1830, Lorenzo Harvey, of New York, William H. Townsend, of Washington county, New York, and Selah Walbridge, of Vermont; in 1831,

I. Pond, of New York, and Seymour Deveaux, of North East; in 1832, Scott Keith, of Girard, Pennsylvania, Stephen Warner, of Genesee county, New York, and Matthew Gray, of Lockport, N. Y.; in 1833, R. R. Robinson, of Sparta, N. Y.; in 1834, William Marsh and E. Smith, both of Wyoming county, N. Y.; in 1835, Clark Baldwin, of Vermont, Thomas Potter, of New York, and E. R. Hedden and William Church, both of New Jersey; in 1836, Thomas Webster, of Washington county, New York; in 1839, T. S. Cowles, of Connecticut; in 1840, C. Lindsey, of New York; in 1841, Joseph Strong, of Massachusetts; in 1842, Gilbert Hurd, from Rock Stream, N. Y.; in 1846, L. W. Savage, of Genesee county, New York; in 1854, Joel Day, of Wyoming county, New York. Mr. Brindle, like Captain Holliday, first came in 1800, located the next, went back and brought his family the next spring. Jesse Miller removed to Mercer county in a few years.

The first female white child was Elizabeth Holliday, born May 14, 1798; the first male white child was Joseph Brindle, born March 1, 1800; and the first funeral is said to have been that of the wife of Isaac Miller, whose grave was the first in the old Presbyterian graveyard.

PIONEER TRIALS.

Mr. McIntyre, who died in 1867, at the age of 95, brought the first potatoes planted in the township, carrying them in a sack thrown over his back, the entire distance from Pittsburg. In 1802, a barrel of salt cost Robert McKee fifty Spanish dollars. It had to be brought from Buffalo to Erie in a small boat, and from the latter place to Springfield on pack horses. In 1800 the only route to Erie was along the beach of the lake or by a bridle path through the woods. At that period there was a wide beach along the whole lake front of the county. Andrew Cochran was captain of a company of soldiers during the last war with Great Britain. It was frequently called out, but was never in an engagement. Some time during the campaign, a rumor that the enemy had landed at the mouth of Conneaut creek created the utmost consternation in the infant settlement. Several families fled, and others had preparations made for a hasty departure. Luckily the report proved to be false.

TOWNSHIP LANDS.

The lake shore plain is about three miles wide in Springfield, and while there is a good deal of high, broken land in the south part, the township is less marred by gullies than is the case further east in the county. The best portion of the township lies along the Ridge road, in the vicinity of East Springfield. A mile or less west, on the same line the quality of the land deteriorates, though some excellent farms are found at and around the village of West Springfield. In the eastern part of the township, the lake shore lands are generally good, but in the neighborhood of Raccoon creek, they become sour, and from there on to Ohio are below the average. Numerous stretches of sand are met with that hardly pay for cultivation, and other parts are cold, swampy and difficult of drainage. Back of the Ridge road, and from there to Conneaut creek, the soil is usually clay, with here and there a sand hill, which forms a curious feature of the topography. As there are exceptions to all rules, so there is to this statement. A valley commences just south of West Springfield and extends into Ohio, with a width ranging from half a mile to a mile, which is one of the best portions of the township. Wheat and other grains are raised everywhere, but the back country is best adapted for grazing. Large quantities of potatoes are produced, and many carloads are shipped annually. The lake shore farms are valued at thirty to $100 per acre, the Ridge road at forty to $100, and the back country from twenty to forty-five dollars.

The Moravian grant embraced 2,797 acres in Springfield and Conneaut, extending from the lake to a short distance south of Conneaut creek, and taking in a strip about a mile wide, except at the Ridge road, where it narrowed to fifty or sixty rods. The reason for this diversion was that the surveyors encountered a formidable beaver swamp at that point, which has since been mostly reclaimed by drainage. William and James Miles were long the agents of the Moravians. The tract was bought in a body by N. Blickensderfer and James Miles in 1849, who sold it out in pieces from 1850 on.

STREAMS AND MILLS.

The chief stream of Springfield is Conneaut creek, which forms its entire southern boundary. The stream does not receive a single tributary in the township. Next in importance is Crooked creek, which rises in or near Lockport, runs in a general northwesterly course, through the southern portion of Girard and the northeastern of Springfield, and falls into the lake about half a mile beyond North Springfield, having a length of some ten miles. Raccoon creek heads near Conneaut creek, and flowing north, after a course of about six miles, reaches the lake at Eagley's Grove. Turkey run takes its rise a little south of West Springfield, and flows about four and a half miles within the township and a mile or more in Ohio. It falls into the lake east of Conneaut harbor.

Five substantial covered bridges span Conneaut creek, built, owned and maintained by the two townships. The Lake Shore R. R. culvert and embankment over Crooked creek at North Springfield is one of the most solid and costly pieces of work in the county. The embankment is ninety feet above the water, and from 700 to 800 feet long. It was through this culvert that a house was washed in the fall of 1878, during the greatest flood ever known on the stream. The Nickel Plate R. R. crosses the Crooked creek valley by an expensive iron bridge.

The mills are as follows: Harrington's (formerly Porter's) grist and sawmill, on Conneaut creek, half a mile north of Cherry Hill; Strong's grist and sawmill, on Crooked creek, north of East Springfield; Reed's sawmill, on the Ridge road near West Springfield, and a planing, cider and feed-mill, about a mile northeast of the latter place. The first mill owner in the township was Capt. Holliday, who built a sawmill about 1801 or 1802, and a gristmill in 1803, near the mouth of Crooked creek, both of which have gone down. The Strong mills were built by Andrew Cochran about 1820 and rebuilt by Thomas Webster about 1841 or 1842, who ran them until his death, in 1860, when they fell into the hands of Joseph M. Strong, and are now operated by his son. The Harrington mill was built by Comfort Hay about 1823. A sawmill on the site of the old Lines' mill was started in 1814 and was followed by the gristmill about 1832. A cheese factory was started at West Springfield in 1874 and burned down.

SCHOOLS, BURIAL PLACES, ETC.

The academy in West Springfield was founded in 1855, burned down in December, 1859, and rebuilt of brick two or three years subsequently. The one in East Springfield was built as a rival to the other, in 1856. Both were at one period quite noted schools and had a large attendance. The North Springfield academy was established in 1866, after the two others had run down. All are now used as graded common schools.

One of the first schoolhouses was built at an early day on the Eagley place, near the lake. The material was logs, with chimney of stones and sticks. In 1818 a log schoolhouse was standing in what is now East Springfield. About the year 1822 a school was held in a vacated log cabin located in the Ferguson neighborhood, some three miles southwest of East Springfield. Not long after this another school was held in a similar building probably a mile east of East Springfield. About the year 1827 a frame schoolhouse stood in the Vaudeventer neighborhood, some two and half miles southwest of East Springfield.

The cemetery at East Springfield is the principal burying place of the township, though small graveyards are attached to the Christian Church in the same village, in West Springfield, at the Town House, and in other localities. The inclosure takes in eighteen acres of high and dry gravel and loam on the north side of the village. It was originally the burial ground of the Presbyterian Church, to which other land was added by purchase. The cemetery was surveyed and graded in 1864, and the first sale of lots was in October of that year. The first body interred in the cemetery proper was that of Henry Keith, which was placed in the inclosure in August, 1864.

In the northeast part of the cemetery are still to be seen traces of one of the series of ancient earthworks, four in number, which extended from the western part of Girard to the southern portion of Springfield. The other mounds in Springfield were on the Oney farm, about a mile southwest of East Springfield, and on the McKee place, half a mile further west. They were all in a direct line from northeast to southwest, and were similar in character, each one covering over half an acre, being circular in form, and having earthen embankments two to three feet high by six feet thick at the base.

During the war for the Union Springfield sent about 150 men into the army, being probably excelled by no other township in the country.

PUBLIC MEN.

The following is a list of citizens of Springfield who have held State and county offices: Assembly, Thomas R. Miller, 1836; David A. Gould, 1843 and 1846; I. Newton Miller, 1870. Associate Judge, William Cross, November 22, 1861, to November 8, 1866. Prothonotary, Maj. S. V. Holliday, elected in 1881 and '84. County Superintendent of Public Schools, L. W. Savage, 1860-63. Register and Recorder, Samuel Rea, jr., November 17, 1863, to November 16, 1866; Henry G. Harvey, November 16, 1866, to November 19, 1872. County Treasurer, Thos. J. Devore, December 23, 1858, to December 20, 1860. County Commissioner, Thomas R. Miller, 1831-34; Richard Robinson, 1852-55. Director of the Poor, Thomas R. Miller, 1840-42 (John Spaulding was elected in 1856, but refused to serve). County Auditor, John Eagley, 1848-51; L. W. Savage, elected in 1884. Mercantile Appraiser, Samuel Rea, jr., 1858; Perry Devore, 1862; C. C. Holliday, 1887; M. Z. Sherman, 1891. County Surveyor, Robert P. Holliday, November 5, 1863, to November 12, 1866, and February, 1869, to November 11, 1872; George M. Robison, January, 1879, to May, 1879.

Humphrey A. Hills, County Commissioner from 1847-50, Deputy Marshal for taking the census in 1850, and Assemblyman in 1852-53, became a resident of Springfield in 1863, moving there from Conneaut, his former home. E. B. Ward, the Detroit millionaire, was a native of the township, where he began life as a fisherman and sailor. Among other natives of the township are A. E. Sisson, District Attorney from 1888 to 1894, and Col. E. P. Gould, elected to the Assembly in 1894, both being residents of Erie at the time. Maj. Holliday was Commissioner of Customs, with location in Washington, during the last Harrison administration.

RAILROADS, COMMON ROADS, HOTELS, ETC.

Springfield has the advantage of two through lines of railroad—the Lake Shore and the Nickel Plate—which cross the township from Girard into Ohio. The Lake Shore has a station in North Springfield, and the Nickel Plate one each for East and West Springfield. The Erie and Pittsburgh R. R. branches off from the Lake Shore in Girard township, half a mile from the Springfield line, which it follows southward into Conneaut, at about the same average distance. Crosses' Station, in Girard township, a mile and a half from East Springfield, was established for the accommodation of the township.

The principal common thoroughfares are the Ridge road, which runs nearly through the center of the township, forming the main streets of East and West Springfield; the Lake road, which follows the lake front to the Ohio line; the Middle Ridge, which leaves the Lake road not far from North Springfield, runs southwest and strikes the Ridge road a mile beyond West Springfield; the Kingsville, which branches off from the Ridge road two-thirds of a mile west of East Springfield and continues to Kingsville, Ohio; and the roads from East and West Springfield to Albion, which come together at Sherman's Corners, near Conneaut creek, in the southeast.

Previous to the opening of the Lake Shore R. R. the travel on the Ridge road was very extensive, requiring numerous hotels for its accommodation. Scott Keith opened a public house at East Springfield in 1832, which was destroyed by fire some years ago. In 1822 William Doty removed to East Springfield from North East, and took charge of the old Remington stand, which he kept till his death in 1864. It is no longer used for hotel purposes.

The East Springfield postoffice, the first in the township, was established many years ago. The postoffice at West Springfield was established in 1838 or 1839, and the one at North Springfield some time after 1860. On the night of the 6th of December, 1874, the office at West Springfield was broken into and robbed, set on fire by the burglars and destroyed with the store to which it was attached. Two of the guilty parties were caught, convicted and sent to the penitentiary.

CHURCHES.

The churches are Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal and Christian in East Springfield, and Methodist Episcopal and Baptist in West Springfield.

The first Methodist Episcopal services in the county were held in the house of John Mershon, in Springfield township, in September, 1800. About 1804 a church building was put up something like a mile south of West Springfield. A second society was formed in 1815 in what is now Girard, but was then a part of Springfield, which has since been known as the Fair Haven Church. This congregation divided in 1821, and twenty-one of the members formed what they styled a "Reformed Methodist Church." In 1825, a fourth society was organized in the east part of the town, which was the beginning of the church in East Springfield. The Cottage Church, which stood on the Ridge road, about half a mile west of West Springfield, was commenced in 1830, but was not finished till 1836. The present church in West Springfield was built in 1854, and the one in East Springfield about 1866.

The first Presbyterian edifice was a small log building which stood on the old portion of the cemetery grounds. A preaching point was established in Springfield in 1804, and the building referred to was put up the same year. The congregation was organized in 1806, and the present building was erected in 1844.

The Christian Church was organized in 1826, and put up its building in 1839.

The Baptist congregation was organized in 1826, and erected a church in 1833. This building, which stood on the Ridge road, about two and a half miles west of East Springfield, was sold to the township, and a new one was provided in West Springfield in 1858.

The Universalists organized a congregation in West Springfield in 1848, and built a house of worship in 1850, which burned down October 2, 1889. Since then the body has practically broken up.

VILLAGES.

West Springfield at the junction of the Albion with the Ridge road, is three miles east of the Ohio line, four west of East Springfield, and twenty-five by common road from Erie. The Nickel Plate railroad station at this place is known as Crayton.

North Springfield has sprung up within the last forty years on the Lake Shore R. R., just west of Crooked creek embankment, about half a mile south of Lake Erie, and twenty by railroad from Erie. The railroad company have at this place a station house, two water tanks and an engine house to pump the water up from Crooked creek. Its station was established in 1852, the year the road was opened.

BOROUGH OF EAST SPRINGFIELD.

[SEE SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP.]

East Springfield was created a borough September 5, 1887. It cast seventy-nine votes in 1892, and is thought to have a population of between 400 and 450. The borough, which is a station on the Nickel Plate R. R., occupies a site along the Ridge road, two and a half miles from North Springfield, on the Lake Shore R. R., one and a half west of Cross's Station, on the Erie and Pittsburg R. R., and twenty-one by common road from Erie.

The churches, schools, historical events, etc., are referred to on the pages relating to Springfield township, of which the borough was originally a part.

CHAPTER XVI.

SUMMIT TOWNSHIP.

SUMMIT TOWNSHIP was the last one established in Erie county, and is the smallest in area. It was formed in 1854, out of the western part of Greene, the eastern part of McKean, and a small portion of Waterford. The name of Summit was given because it contains the dividing ridge between the waters of LeBeuf and Walnut creeks, the former flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, and the latter into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It had a population in 1860 of 1,038; in 1870 of 1,047; in 1880 of 1,047, and in 1890 of 903.

The township is bounded on the north by Mill Creek, on the east by Greene, on the south by Waterford and on the west by McKean. The north line dividing it from Mill Creek is the only straight one, and has a length of five and a half miles; the east line, including its numerous angles, is over six miles long; the south line three and a half, and the west line about five miles.

RAILROADS—COMMON ROADS.

The Philadelphia and Erie R. R. runs through the east side of the township almost its entire length from north to south, entering from Mill Creek and leaving through Waterford. To reach the township it crosses the summit between Mill creek and Walnut creek by a heavy grade, passing into the valley of the latter stream at Langdon's Station. From there it follows the Walnut creek valley to the main summit at Jackson's, where it enters the valley of LeBeuf creek, which it follows to Waterford. The summit of the road at Jackson's is a little over 650 feet above the level of the lake. The railroad stations are Langdon's, Jackson's and Sampsonville.

The main public roads of Summit are the Waterford turnpike, running over the hills almost through the center of the township; the Waterford plank road, following the valleys of Walnut and LeBeuf creeks, and the Edinboro plank road, which passes through its northwestern corner. The old road, by which the French transported goods from Presque Isle to Waterford, and over which the army passed that defeated Braddock near Pittsburg, in 1755, crossed the township from north to south, and most of it is still used as a public thoroughfare.

Summit township has no villages, but one postoffice. A postoffice was kept at Jackson's Station some years after the opening of the railroad, which was removed to White-ford's Corners. It was abandoned and again revived under the name of Godard in 1882. Another was maintained for a time at the White church, on the Edinboro plank road, in the northwestern section of the township, but it, too, proved a failure. Most of the mail for the township goes to Erie or Kearsarge.

CREEKS, VALLEYS AND LANDS.

Walnut creek and the West branch of LeBoeuf creek are the principal streams, both being quite small in their course through the township. Walnut creek rises on the western edge of Greene, a little northeast of Whiteford's Corners, runs across Summit in a general northwestern direction, and, crossing the southwestern portion of Mill Creek, flows through Fairview into the lake at Manchester, after a course of about twenty miles. The West branch of LeBoeuf creek has its source on the farm of W. A. Bean, but a few feet from a tributary of Walnut creek, and, flowing through the township in a southeastern course, unites with the East branch in Waterford township, a little north of Waterford Station. LeBoeuf creek, measuring from its usually reputed head, on the edge of Greene and Venango, to its mouth at French creek, has a length of perhaps twenty miles.

The Walnut creek lands are the cream of the township. The valley has an average width of about three fourths of a mile, and produces almost everything that can be raised on the lake shore. The LeBoeuf valley is about a mile and a half wide, and the tillable land is perhaps equally good with that of the Walnut creek valley, but there are numerous swamps, which however, are being gradually drained.

On the hills, the land of the township is best for grazing, and large quantities of butter are produced. The whole township is a good fruit country. The price of land runs from twenty to fifty dollars an acre.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settler in the township was George W. Reed, a son of Col. Seth Reed, who located about 1796. In a few years he changed to Waterford, where he died. A tract of land was taken up in the Walnut creek valley by Thomas Rees in 1797, but he never resided in the township. Oliver Dunn located in the western portion of the township the same year, but afterward removed to McKean township. In 1800, James and Ebenezer Graham, with their families, came from Centre county and settled what has since been known as the Graham neighborhood. They were soon followed in the same vicinity by Eli Webster and Abijah Hull. Eli Rockwell went in in 1801, and Daniel Lee in 1802. Among other early residents were Thomas Rees, Jr., and John Way. P. S. Woolley made his location about 1823, and James Jackson in 1825. The latter, who was originally from Herkimer county, New York, settled in Erie in 1818, and went from there to Summit. The original settlers were mostly Americans, of the Protestant faith. Within the last thirty years, a large influx of Irish and German Catholics has taken place, and that denomination now numbers fully a fourth of the population. William Dunn, the first child born in the township, in 1798, died on the 14th of April, 1880.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

The church buildings of Summit are one Methodist Episcopal, one Catholic, one United Presbyterian, and one of the Evangelical Association.

The Hamlin Methodist Episcopal church, on the road from Whiteford's Corners to W. A. Bean's, was organized in 1837, and the building was erected in 1852.

The United Presbyterian Church at Five Points was organized in January, 1842, and re-established in 1873. Its church building was erected in 1848. Services of the same denomination are held in the school house at Whiteford's Corners, the congregation having been organized in 1876.

St. Matthew's Catholic church building was put up in 1876 on land donated by George Reynolds. The congregation was organized about the same time. Services are attended by a priest from McKean.

Emanuel's Church of the Evangelical Association, which has a building near the McKean line, was started about 1838. The house of worship was built in 1863.

A school was held about two miles east of the house of Squire Webster, in a vacated cabin, as early as 1819. In 1820 or '21 there was a school on a cross-road which intersected the French road. About the same time schools were taught at Hull's Corners and on Graham Hill. The first school house was built in 1822 by neighborhood subscriptions. This was for years the only school building in the township. During the winter of 1841-2, there was a school about a mile east of the Webster farm. All of these were kept up by private contributions.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The township had at one period as many as four sawmills on Walnut creek, all of which have been abandoned. There are three sawmills at present in the township, viz: one near W. A. Bean's, one near Jackson's Station, and one at Sampsonville. At the latter place there is quite a settlement, due to the lumbering operations in the vicinity.

Whiteford's Corners embraces a store, schoolhouse and several other buildings. Close by is a favorite picnic grove, on the line of the railroad.

The township contains two cheese factories, the Excelsior, near the railroad, on the public road from the Lake Pleasant road to the Waterford plank road, and Bean's, near the residence of William A. Bean. Both have been in operation about nineteen years.

The nearest stone quarry to the city of Erie of much account is the one known as Reynolds', near the Catholic church. It has been in operation many years, has furnished quantities of good stone, and an abundance is still left. Many years ago, Col. Norris gathered considerable oil as it exuded from the rocks at the quarry and sold it for medicine. This circumstance led to the drilling of a well on the premises, but, although plenty of gas poured out, oil was never found in paying quantity. In addition to the Reynolds' quarry, William Liddell had a small one near the turnpike.

Summit has furnished but two county officers—both Auditors—viz.: Eli Webster, from 1829 to 1832, and John L. Way, from 1849 to 1852, and from 1859 to 1862.

In 1821, James McKee was convicted of murdering a mariner near the old brewery, and was sentenced to seven years' solitary confinement in the Philadelphia Penitentiary, but died after a few months' imprisonment. John A. Hays, also at one time a resident of the township, but who removed to Erie, was convicted of causing the death of his wife, at the corner of State and Second streets, in that city. He was sentenced to Allegheny Penitentiary, served out his term, returned to Erie and died soon after.

CHAPTER XVII.

UNION TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF UNION CITY.

WHEN Erie county was organized all that portion of its territory lying east of LeBeuf and Waterford, to the western line of Wayne and Concord, was given the name of Union township. From 1800 to 1821 Union and Brokenstraw, which included Wayne and Concord, formed one election district. In 1825 Amity was taken from Union, leaving the township lines as they are at present. Union township is almost square, having a length of about six and a quarter by a breadth of about five and three-quarter miles. It is bounded on the north by Amity, on the east by Wayne and Concord, on the south by Crawford county, and on the west by LeBeuf. The population was 200 in 1820, 235 in 1830, 543 in 1840, 1,080 in 1850, 1,954 in 1860, 1,334 in 1870, 1,337 in 1880, and 1,366 in 1890.

The township contains very little flat land, and such as there is, embracing a few farms only, lies wholly along the South branch of French creek. The balance of the township is rolling, with few steep hills or abrupt ravines, almost every foot of ground being susceptible of cultivation. Land is valued at fifteen dollars to $100 an acre, according to the location. "The soil is generally a heavy clay, with an underlying strata of hard pan, excepting about 1,200 acres, which were originally covered with pine timber, and are a gravelly loam, underlaid with sand. The timber, aside from the pine above mentioned, was principally beech, maple, hemlock, cucumber and whitewood, with a ridge of oak and chestnut through the southwest corner." A sink-hole, similar to the one near Waterford, but of less extent, was encountered in building the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., a short distance east of Union City. The only postoffice in the township is that of Ferdinand.

MAIN STREAMS.

The chief stream is the South branch of French creek, or Little French creek, as it is sometimes called, which rises in Concord, south of Corry, flows through the main part of the latter township, across Union from east to west, and joins the main stream in LeBeuf, a few rods below the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. bridge, after a course of not far from twenty-five miles. From Corry to LeBeuf it furnishes the route of the New York, Pa. and Ohio and Philadelphia and Erie R. R.'s. Its tributaries in Union township are, on the south side, Scotchman's, Wilson's, Mulvin's and Carroll's runs, and on the north side Pine, Tolbert's and Benson's runs, all small streams. Scotchman's run rises in Bloomfield township, Crawford county, and falls into the South branch on or near the Wade farm, having a length of about four miles. It has two branches, known as Stewart's and Cochran's runs. Wilson's run also heads in Bloomfield, and, after a length of five to six miles, ends at Steenrod's mill. The head of Mulvin's run is on the Shreve farm, its mouth is on the Mulvin farm, and its length is some two miles. Carroll's run ends in LeBeuf township, just across the line, after a course of about seven miles. Pine run begins near the Amity line. Its length is perhaps three and a half miles. Tolbert's run has its head on the Church place, and its mouth in the borough. Its length is estimated at three miles. Benson's run terminates in the borough, near its western boundary. The main inlet of Oil Creek lake, in Crawford county, rises in the southwest near the LeBeuf line.

RAILROADS, BRIDGES AND MILLS.

The Philadelphia and Erie R. R. has five bridges over the South branch, two in the township and three in the borough, while the New York, Pa. and Ohio R. R., by following a higher grade, avoided the necessity of crossing the stream at all. The township bridges are good, but not expensive. The main thoroughfares are the old road to Wattsburg, the Smiley road to the same place, the Flats road to Waterford, and the roads to Corry, Concord, Titusville and Mill Village. The Philadelphia and Erie and New York, Pa. and Ohio R. R.'s both cross the township from LeBeuf to Concord, following practically the same route, by way of the South branch, though at different elevations. A third railroad, the Union and Titusville, once connected with the Philadelphia and Erie at Union City, but has been abandoned.

The manufacturing concerns of the township are Steenrod's saw and gristmill on the South branch, east of the borough; Fenno's sawmill and Seymour's saw and shingle-mill; Kamerer's sawmill, north of the borough; the West Union or Carroll's cheese factory, south of the borough on the Mill Village road; Wager's cider mill, south of the borough; Vermilyea's sawmill on the Town Line road; Bentley's sawmill, northeast of the borough; Miller's sawmill, in the south part; Harrison's, in the Wilson neighborhood; Lyon's mill, east of the borough; one on the South branch, between the N. Y., P., and O. R. R. and P. and E. R. R., east of the borough, and Thompson's, southeast of the borough. The Carroll cheese factory was started May 6, 1872. The township has had at different periods as many as fifteen sawmills, the mention of which indicates the immense amount of timber that has been cut off and marketed.

CHURCHES, SCHOOLS, ETC.

The Asbury Methodist Episcopal chapel stands near the Mill Village road, almost on the line of LeBeuf, three miles southwest of the borough. The congregation was organized by Rev. John Scott, in 1840, and the building was erected in 1862. A graveyard, the only one outside of the borough cemeteries, is attached to the chapel.

Most of the burials from the township take place at Union City.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church, in the southeast corner of the township, was organized November 18, 1882. A building known as the Church at Cottage Hill, was erected in 1883, and dedicated in November of that year, on a lot donated by F. M. Devereaux, the entire cost being about $1,800. Services are held in the church every Sabbath afternoon.

One of the earliest schools in the township was taught during the war of 1812, by William Craig, in a house vacated by Thomas McElhany. Probably the next school was taught by Mrs. Susanna Pain, during the summer of 1815, in a log cabin built by Hugh Wilson. The first house built for a school which was successful was erected about 1818, near the mills, now Union City. William Kelley, an Irishman, taught in it two winters. Daniel Sacket, who hailed from the East, taught there in 1825, and from that date schools were frequent. In the fall of 1835, a second house was built, two and one-half miles distant, where David Wilson taught for four winters.

Smith's quarry, a mile north of the borough, on the Wattsburg road, and Wellman's, in the Carroll settlement, near the LeBoeuf line, are the only ones in the township.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settler in Union township was Hugh Wilson, from the North of Ireland, who came early in 1797 and was joined the following year by Andrew Thompson, wife and four children, Matthew Gray, wife and son Francis B., and Robert Smith. Jacob Sheppard, from the Susquehanna valley, went in during the year 1798, but left and did not return until 1820. About the same time that Sheppard first came, John Wilson, father of Hugh, arrived direct from Ireland, with two grown daughters. John Fagan, from Franklin county, settled on the Russell Church farm about 1798, but changed to Mill Creek township in 1803 or 1804. William Miles and his family moved over from what is now Concord in 1800, and were followed by Miles' brother-in-law, William Cook, with his family, in 1801. During the latter year, the settlement was increased by the arrival of Abel K. Thompson, with five sons and two daughters, and of Ferdinand Carroll and family from Ireland. From that date to 1816, it does not appear that any permanent acquisitions took place, but in the latter year James Smiley with his wife and six children were added to the colony. Of later settlers, Richard Shreve made his location in 1820; Levi Barnes and Abram Emerson in 1821, and Daniel Dunham in 1836. Mr. Shreve had been a resident of Crawford county, and Messrs. Barnes, Emerson and Dunham were from the interior of New York. Matthew Gray founded the first tannery. Mr. Smiley had charge of Miles' mill for many years. The colonists were few until 1830. Most of the families now in the township came after that year.

The first death was that of John Wilson, father of Hugh, who departed this life in June, 1799. The first child was Martha, daughter of Hugh Wilson and wife, born August 18, 1800. The first marriage, and the first in the south part of the county, was that of William Smith and Elizabeth Wilson, in 1799, and the second that of Thomas King and Sarah Wilson in 1800, both ladies being daughters of John Wilson. Mrs. Smith, nee Elizabeth Wilson, died August 6, 1875, in Wayne township, at the age of 99 years, being the fourth oldest woman who has lived in the county. Hugh Wilson was one of the first Justices of the Peace in Erie county. He was commissioned by Governor McKean in 1803, and held the office till 1816 or 1817. While he held the position, he officiated at most of the marriages in that part of the county.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Union City and Union township have furnished the following county officers: Sheriff, F. E. Staples, January 1, 1880, to January 1, 1883. County Treasurer, W. O. Black, December 20, 1860, to December 23, 1862; C. W. Keller, December 26, 1866, to March 10, 1870, when he resigned. County Commissioner, Robert Gray, 1843 to 1846; William Putnam, 1858 to 1861; A. O. Gillett, elected in 1884; Clinton B. Smith, elected in 1893. Jury Commissioner, P. G. Stranahan, 1867 to 1870; James D. Phillips, 1882 to February, 1884 (resigned); G. G. Smith (appointed by the Court to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Phillips), February, 1884, to January, 1885. County Superintendent of Public Schools, Charles Twining, 1878 to 1884. Director of the Poor, Andrew Thompson, 1865 to 1870;

County Detective, Daniel Mitchell, January, 1876, to January, 1879. Mercantile Appraiser, John C. McLean, 1888 and '89.

James Miles, who left Union to make his home at the mouth of Elk creek in 1832, was a County Commissioner from 1835 to 1838 and an Associate Judge from 1851 to 1856. Newton T. Hume, County Treasurer from January 1, 1875, to January 1, 1878, though elected from Wattsburg, was long a resident of Union City. Joseph Sill was Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue under the United States Government for several years.

BOROUGH OF UNION CITY.

[SEE UNION TOWNSHIP.]

The borough of Union City stands upon both sides of the South branch of French creek, very nearly in the center of Union township, at a distance of twenty-seven miles by railroad southeast from the water's edge at Erie. The settlement was first given the name of Miles' Mills, which was changed to Union Mills in 1863, when it was created a borough, and finally to Union City July 4, 1871. The earliest buildings were erected on the flat land, in the valley of the creek, immediately around the mills, from which point the town has spread to the ridges north and south. The Philadelphia and Erie and New York, Pa. and Ohio R. R.'s both pass through the borough. Its population was 1,500 in 1870, 2,171 in 1880 and 2,261 in 1890. The borough is divided into the First and Second election districts.

FOUNDER OF THE TOWN.

The founder of Union City was William Miles, a native of Ireland, who was brought to this country when 8 years of age, his parents settling in the eastern part of Pennsylvania. While quite young he volunteered as a soldier in the Revolution, was stationed at Freeland's fort in Northumberland county, which was attacked and captured in 1778 by the Indian allies of the British, was sent to Quebec as a prisoner of war, and was kept there in dreary confinement for the long term of five years, or until our National Independence was acknowledged. The father of Mr. Miles was killed in the fight. On his release William Miles returned to the Susquehanna valley, and in 1785 surveyed the Tenth Donation district, extending from near Waterford borough to the Warren county line, and then returned east. He again came west in 1795 and located in what is now Concord township. In 1796 Mr. Miles made a clearing and built a storehouse at Wattsburg, where for some years an extensive trade was carried on in furs and supplies. In 1800 he moved his family to Union, where he commenced the erection of a grist and sawmill combined, completing it in 1801. The mill was destroyed by fire in 1802, rebuilt in 1803 and again burned at a comparatively recent date, when it had become known as Church's mill. Added to his other business, Mr. Miles cleared a great deal of land, opened roads, secured a mail route, and had a postoffice established, with himself as Postmaster. In 1822 he established a gristmill and sawmill at Wattsburg, and in 1828 laid out that town, naming it after his wife's father, David Watts, sr., of Carlisle. Mr. Miles died in Girard township in 1846 at the age of 87. William Cook followed Mr. Miles to Union with his family in 1801, where he died in 1830. He had been a surgeon in the Revolutionary army.

A PROSPEROUS CAREER.

Previous to 1855 the settlement consisted of but a few buildings surrounding the mills, and gave no promise of the bright future that proved to be in store for it. In that year H. L. Church, A. L. Summerton and D. M. McLeod moved over from Warren, rebuilt the mills, started a store and sold some lots. A town was laid out by David Wilson under the patronage of James (a son of William) Miles—who owned much of the property—which included only a trifling part of the present borough. About 1856 Mr. Summerton surveyed the plat since known as Summerton Hill. Prior to that, in 1852, James Miles had been made a director of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., and by his influence the route was carried to Union instead of by way of Wattsburg. In 1858, the road was opened to Union. In 1859, P. G. Stranahan, who had been a farmer and hotel-keeper on the Moravian flats in LeBœuf, purchased the Miles homestead, laid out an addition to the town on the south side, and sold off a large number of lots, continuing to make additions and sales for ten years. The Atlantic and Great Western R.R. being built through Union in 1862, gave increased value to property on that side of the town, and in 1865 James Sill, P. G. Stranahan and Joseph Sill bought and laid out the Black farm into lots. In 1866, James Sill purchased the Tourtellott farm, on the north side, and in 1873, E. W. Hatch the Smiley farm, adjoining, both of which were surveyed and a large number of lots sold. Another addition was made by T. B. Shreve, south of the Atlantic and Great Western R. R., about the latter year.

THE OIL ERA.

The first strong impulse was given to Union by the opening of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., and this circumstance was followed by another in the summer of 1859, which may be said to have been the making of the town. This was no less an event than the development of natural oil as an article of commerce at Titusville. In 1862, three oil refineries and several large cooper shops were running to their fullest capacity. The completion of the Oil Creek R. R. during the latter year gave a sudden check to this thrifty condition of affairs, by doing away with the hauling by wagons and diverting the oil traffic to Corry. The town had a live population, however, and gradually picked up again. In the fall of 1870, Woods & Johnson started the largest barrel factory that had then been built upon the continent. In 1865, James Sill and P. G. Stranahan originated the Union and Titusville R. R. It was not completed, however, till February, 1871, after the oil center had changed from Titusville, and never realized the hopes of its projectors. The road was operated for several years and finally abandoned.

While upon the subject of oil, it may be stated that for many years—commencing long before Drake's discovery at Titusville—the fluid was gathered on the banks of the creek at Union. The most prolific yield was at the foot of the hill, below the Stranahan residence. A well was sunk there about 1859, to a depth of 100 feet, and deepened to 900 feet in 1864, and other wells were put down along the stream.

CHURCHES AND CEMETERIES.

Union City contains Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, Catholic and United Brethren church buildings.

The Presbyterian congregation was organized with nine members, by Rev. John Matthews in 1811. The first church building was erected in 1831, on a lot donated by William Miles, who also contributed fifty dollars; and the present one, which cost $12,000, was dedicated February 24, 1874. The sheds were built in 1875, and a fine chapel, the gift of Mrs. Jane Gray, widow of Robert Gray, was added in 1879. Mr. and Mrs. Gray were the only original members who lived to worship in the new church.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation was organized by Rev. Ira Eddy in 1817, and had Rev. John P. Bent as its first pastor. The first church was built in 1847, and the second and present one in 1862, costing $10,000. A movement is in progress to secure a new and better building.

St. Teresa's Catholic Church was organized about 1857. Catholic families settled in Union about 1854, and were attended for several years from Pittsburg. Father Emerand, O. S. B., held services for several years. At the opening of the rebellion, he enlisted as Chaplain of a regiment under General Rosecrans and was killed in service. Rev. T. Lonnergan, of Corry, took charge of the congregation in 1860, and under efforts put forth by him a church was immediately built. The parochial school was built in 1866 and enlarged in 1875, and the parochial residence was erected in 1874. The school has an average attendance of seventy. It is in charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph. Attached to the church is St. Teresa's Academy and Convent. Rev. David Hanley is the present rector.

The Baptist Church was formed with eleven members in August, 1859, by the withdrawal of members residing in Union City and vicinity from the Wattsburg Baptist Church. In 1862 Rev. A. D. Bush accepted a call to the pastorate, under whose labors a meeting-house was erected.

The United Brethren society was organized about 1872, succeeding an old class which formerly met at Kimball's Hill, two miles northwest from the borough. Services were held in the Presbyterian church until 1876, when a church was erected.

The first Episcopal services were held in 1806, in the old town hall, and continued in various places for many years. A building lot was bought in 1877, and the foundation for the present site laid in 1888. The building was consecrated by Bishop Whitehead on St. Matthew's day, September 21, 1893. On April 3, 1894, the mission became a regularly organized parish, connected with the diocese of Pittsburg.

Evergreen cemetery, the principal burying place of town and township, is a piece of high, dry, gravelly ground, on the Concord road, near the southeast edge of the borough. It was originated by David Wilson, who laid out the plat and was the first President of the company. The cemetery was dedicated in September, 1865.

The Catholic cemetery, near the other, was consecrated about 1860, and embraces about two and a half acres.

The soldiers' monument in Evergreen cemetery was dedicated on May 30, 1884.

NEWSPAPERS.

The earliest newspaper in the town was the Union Mills Bulletin, started by William C. Jackson in 1865, and continued by him for one year, when the office was purchased by H. G. Pratt and F. B. Berrington, who changed the name to the Star. These gentlemen held out for about a year and then moved to Corry, where the establishment was merged with the Republican. The town was without a journal until November, 1870, when the Union City Times appeared with Robert Troup as editor. The Times was printed in the Dispatch office at Erie for about two years. In August, 1873, H. D. Persons and L. B. Thompson bought the office, taking possession September 1; six months afterward, Mr. Thompson retired from the firm. Mr. Persons continued the management until the spring of 1875. By an arrangement with the owners of the Corry Republican the two offices were moved to Erie May 1, 1875, and their material was used in the publication of the Argus, which had a brief but brilliant career. After the failure of the Argus, Mr. Persons took his office back to Union and re-established the Times on the 12th of August, 1875. The establishment was purchased by Dr. D. P. Robbins in November, 1877, who leased it to McLean & Moore November, 1879. In May, 1880, Mr. Moore sold his interest to A. F. Moses, who in turn conveyed it a year later to J. C. McLean and W. G. Lefevre. It was then published under the name of the Times Publishing Company until May, 1882, when F. E. & J. C. McLean became sole proprietors, and have continued ever since. The office was burned out in the great fire of April 24, 1879, and was replaced by Dr. Robbins in two weeks—a splendid piece of enterprise for the time.

In February, 1875, Mr. L. B. Thompson moved the Enterprise from Waterford to Union City, and issued it until June of the same year, when it was bought by Pratt Bros. & Hubbard. Mr. Hubbard soon retired from the firm, and Pratt Bros. continued the paper at Union until November, 1877, when the office was moved to Corry and used as the basis of the Corry Herald.

The Union City Advertiser was begun in the summer of 1874, by Hildreth, Young & Co., to give publicity to their photocome business. The work was done in the Waterford Enterprise office, and shortly after the removal of that paper to Union City, as above stated, the Advertiser was discontinued.

Early in 1879, M. H. Fenno started an edition of the Corry Herald for Union circulation, calling it by the name of the Record. Its list was purchased by F. E. McLean in November, 1879, and combined with that of the Times.

FIRES AND FLOODS.

The most extensive fire that Union has known broke out in the Stranahan Block about half-past 3 o'clock on the morning of April 24, 1879, and swept down both sides of Main street to the creek, destroying buildings and goods estimated to be worth $75,000, not more than half of which was covered with insurance. The burnt district was rebuilt with a better class of structures than before.

The next great fire occurred on Monday night, the 24th of July, 1882, and destroyed property to the value of $50,000. It originated in the boiler-house of Hineman & Cheney's chair and furniture factory, and burned down eight buildings, besides damaging two others. The insurance was not much more than one-fourth of the loss.

Another fire on the evening of Wednesday, May 28, 1884, burned down a row of frame buildings adjoining the Johnson House, occupied by seven business firms. The loss was about $12,000.

The fourth great fire occurred on the afternoon of January 9, 1895, and destroyed property estimated to be worth $27,000, on which there was an insurance of about $13,000. It started on the second floor of the Cooper block.

Union City was visited by a destructive flood on the 4th of February, 1882. Another followed in June, 1892, which was the most disastrous in the history of the borough. The track of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. was badly cut up between Corry and LeBeauf Station, numerous bridges were injured or destroyed, and portions of the low lands in the borough were overflowed, inflicting immense damage. The flood of the latter year extended over a large portion of the State, being due to heavy and long continued rains.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The first successful school was established about 1820, in a building which stood on High street. The first tavern was opened by David Jones in 1820. The first store was started in 1831 by Fleming & Brewster, of Erie. The old portion of the Stranahan residence was built by William Miles in 1828.

A tavern was built in 1832, near the Miles mills, by Asa Walton and Washington Webber. The property was purchased in 1838 by Capt. A. Tourtellot, who rebuilt the house. D. Dunham & Sons started a tannery in 1896, and continued until 1871.

Union City has an unusual number of manufacturing establishments for a place of the size, nearly all of which have been prosperous.

The borough has suffered severely from bank failures, but the energy of the citizens has enabled them to overcome these misfortunes as well as the fires and floods.

The date of organization of some of the secret societies was as follows:

Eureka Lodge No. 366, F. and A. M., in 1865.

Clement Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F., August 26, 1871.

Nineveh Encampment No. 248, I. O. O. F., May 18, 1874.

Union City Lodge No. 1015, I. O. G. T., February 27, 1878.

Banner Union No. 12, E. A. U., August 22, 1879.

CHAPTER XVIII.

VENANGO TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF WATTSBURG.

THE name of Venango river was given by the French to the stream afterward called by the English and still known as French creek. It is a corruption of the Indian word Innungah, which is said to have been the Indian term for the stream. Venango was one of the original townships of the county, and has been known by the same title from the beginning. It is bounded on the north by Greenfield, on the east by French Creek township, Chautauqua county, N. Y., on the south by Amity, and on the west by Greene. The township has regular lines, and is nearly square, having a width of about six and a quarter miles by a breadth of seven. The population was 490 in 1820, 683 in 1830, 812 in 1840, 1,019 in 1850, 1,301 in 1860, 1,650 in 1870, 1,445 in 1880, and 1,351 in 1890. The east line of Venango, Greenfield and North East townships forms the boundary between Pennsylvania and New York, which is exactly on a parallel with the western extremity of Lake Ontario. The south line of Venango is a part of the original northern boundary of the commonwealth. The villages are Lowville and Phillipsville, both of which have postoffices. The highest point in Erie county is said to be in Venango township, near the Greenfield and New York lines. The only postoffice outside of the above is Lake Pleasant, near the lake of the same name.

FIRST SETTLEMENTS.

The first white man who is known to have visited Venango township was William Miles, who came out as a surveyor with David Watts in 1785, fell in love with the flats at the junction of the East and West branches, and returning in 1795 took up 1,400 acres, including the site of Wattsburg. He was followed in 1796 by Adam Reed and his son James, who located 400 acres on the East branch, and at a later period built the first gristmill in the township. Thomas Smith settled in Lowville in the same year, and was soon followed by Burrell and Zalmon Tracy. In 1797 John and David Phillips became possessed of 1,100 acres on which Phillipsville now stands. In 1798 William Allison and wife, from Northumberland county, with their son James, a boy of three years, settled near Lake Pleasant. From that time to 1800 a number of colonists went in whose names will be found in the list of taxables further on. In 1822, Lowville was settled by Samuel Low and his brother-in-law, Dr. Wright, both from Genesee county, New York. Timothy Butler and father from Onondaga county, New York, made their settlements in 1816, John R. Smith about 1826, David Bailey in 1828, and Dr. D. T. Bennett, from Delaware county, New York, in 1829. William Blore, the Chapins, the Tituses, and others took up their residence in the township in 1830. The Norcrosses and the Davisons, who had located on the highlands west of Lake Pleasant, changed to Mill Creek. John Warren, another of the early settlers, moved to Erie in 1810. During the interval between 1810 and 1820 there was little increase; but about the latter year a new population, mainly from New York, commenced going in, whose descendants generally remain.

The taxable citizens of the township in 1800 were as follows: William Allison, Hezekiah Barker, Philo Barker, Henry Bontz, John Boyd, John Carnahan, William Carnahan, Thomas Carnahan, John Clark, Thomas Davison, sr., Francis, Robert, George, Arthur and Thomas Davison, jr., John and William Dickson, Bailey, John and James Donaldson, John Dickson, jr., Samuel and Stuart Henderson, Stephen Hazleton, James and John Hunter, Thomas Hinton, jr., Robert and Wilson Johnston, John B. Jones, Caleb Lyon, David McNair, Joseph McGahen, William Miles, Barnabus McCue, Andrew Norcross, John, James M. and David Phillips, Thomas Prentice, James Perry, James M., Thomas E. and Robert R. Reed, Ralph Spafford, Thomas, Samuel and John Smith, Benjamin Saxton, Zalmon and Burrill Tracy, Nathaniel Wilson, John Warren and John Yost. In 1817, William Miles was assessed for 2,400 acres in Venango township, most of which were at Watsburg and Lovville. They were valued for taxable purposes at $3,400.

The first child was Robert, son of William Allison and wife, who was born in 1799, soon after his parents moved into the township. The first death was that of Adam Reed, in 1805. Samuel Henderson came with William Miles from Carlisle in 1795. He and his brother, Stuart, located 400 acres of land in the spring of 1798, and then went to Fayette county and married.

SOLDIERS IN THE WAR OF 1812-14.

Below is the muster roll of Co. E of the One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, at the breaking out of the war of 1812: Captain, William Dickson; Lieutenant, Robert Davison; Ensign, Thomas Davison; Sergeants, Arthur Davison, John Dickson, David Phillips; privates, James Donaldson, David McNair, Bailey Donaldson, Thomas Johnson, John Hunter, Samuel Smith, George Davison, John B. Jones, John Smith, James Smith, James White, Thomas Prentice, Samuel Henderson, Thomas Henton, Griffith Henton, William Henton, Zalmon Tracy, Burrill Tracy, Thomas E. Reed. Capt. Dickson moved from the county in April, 1813, and Lieut. Davison assumed command, continuing during the war. The company was called out in June, 1813, and for some time guarded the shipyards at the mouth of Cascade creek, where Perry's fleet was building. They remained until the fleet sailed and were then sent home, but were ordered into service again when the news came in January, 1814, that the British had taken Buffalo.

STATE AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

The list of citizens of Venango who have held State and county positions is as follows: Canal Commissioner, John Phillips, 1826 to 1829. Assembly, John Phillips, 1809, 1810, 1811, 1812 and 1824; Wareham Warner, 1856 and 1857. Prothonotary, Giles D. Price, December 28, 1875, to January 1, 1882. Sheriff, M. V. B. Gifford, elected 1885. Clerk of the Courts, Charles L. Pierce, November 20, 1867, to November 14, 1873. County Treasurer, John Warren, 1817; elected from Erie, where he had moved. County Commissioners, John Phillips, 1804 to 1807; Samuel Low, 1836 to 1840, elected from Harbor Creek, where he moved in 1834; Jacob Fritts, 1860 to 1863; Daniel W. Titus, 1875 to 1881. Clerk to County Commissioners, Giles D. Price, chosen in January, 1883. County Auditors, Samuel Low, 1882; Daniel W. Titus, 1872; C. R. Gray, 1878 to 1881. Mr. Price served about four years as Deputy Collector of the United States at Erie, and was prominently named as a candidate for Auditor General and State Treasurer on the Republican State ticket.

MAIN PUBLIC ROADS.

The chief avenues of Venango township are the Erie and Watsburg plank-road; the old Erie and Watsburg road by the way of Phillipsville, which branches off from the former at the Siegel farm in Greene township; the Watsburg and North East, up the West branch and through Greenfield; the Waterford and North East, through Phillipsville and Colt's Station; the Erie and Lake Pleasant, by way of French creek and the lake; the Watsburg and New York, up the East branch to Clymer and Sherman; the Union and Watsburg; the Watsburg and Corry; and the cross road from A. N. Woods' to M. S. Rouse's. The old Erie road was opened in 1809, partially changed in 1828, and improved in 1832; the Waterford and North East in 1804; and the Watsburg and North East in 1798. The latter was the route for conveying goods between Lake Erie and the Allegheny until the road was opened between Presque Isle and Waterford.

The Erie and Watsburg plank road was commenced in 1852, completed in 1853 and abandoned as a toll road in 1865, after the gates had been torn down by a party of indignant farmers. The road from Erie to Lake Pleasant was opened as far south as the Martin Hayes place, in Greene, in 1821-22, and completed to French creek in 1826-27. From Erie to Watsburg by the Lake Pleasant road is eighteen and three-quarters miles; by way of Phillipsville eighteen miles, and by way of Lowville twenty miles, the latter route, however, having the advantage of better grades.

Venango is without a railroad, the nearest station being at Union City. In 1853, the Erie City Railroad Company was chartered to build a road from the bay of Presque Isle to the State Line, three miles from Wattsburg, where it was to connect with an extension of the New York and Erie from Jamestown, N. Y., giving a continuous route between the lake and the Atlantic ocean. Surveys were made, but no grading was ever done, and the project was finally given up. It was at one time proposed to build the P. and E. R. R by way of Wattsburg.

CREEKS, LAKES AND BRIDGES.

The township is one of the best watered in the county. The West branch, which rises in Findley's Lake, N. Y., enters the township from Greenfield, and crosses its entire width from north to south, past Lowville and Wattsburg. The East branch takes its rise near Sherman, N. Y., and coming in not far from the southeast corner, flows in a southwestern course into Amity, where the two unite near the township line, just outside the borough limits of Wattsburg. The West branch has a length of about twelve miles in Venango, and the East branch of about four miles. The tributaries of these streams are as follows: Of the West branch, Middlebrook, Alder and Fritts runs; of the East branch, Stafford run. Several streams start in the southwest corner of Venango and unite with French creek proper in Amity.

Lake Pleasant, in the extreme southwestern part of the township, near the corners of Venango, Greene, Amity and Waterford, is a beautiful body of water, about two-thirds of a mile long and a third of a mile wide, with a depth of five to fifty feet. Its outlet is a fair-sized stream that never diminishes except in the driest seasons. It falls into French creek about three miles south, in Amity township.

The township owns one iron bridge over the East branch at the Tanner place, and a covered wooden bridge over the West branch at Lowville. All of the other bridges are ordinary open wooden structures. The one over the West branch at Wattsburg was the first in the county. It was built originally by the County Commissioners.

LANDS, MILLS, ETC.

The valleys of both branches are quite wide, running from a mile to a mile and a half, and spreading out to about three miles at Wattsburg, where they come together. Along Alder run, Middle brook and Stafford run, the flats are from a quarter of a mile to a half mile in width, and upon the outlet of Lake Pleasant they are very similar to those along the branches. The value of farm property is from thirty to sixty dollars an acre in the valleys, and from twenty to forty dollars in the hill region. Most of the marketing is done at Wattsburg and Lowville.

The mills and factories of Venango township are as follows: At Lowville—a gristmill, sawmill and a shingle and cider-mill. The gristmill was built in 1822, but has been twice remodeled. In other sections—a sawmill near Robinson's Corners; a saw and shingle-mill on the Clymer road; a cheese factory, a sawmill and a saw and shingle-mill at Phillipsville. There is a creamery just outside of Wattsburg, where much of the milk in the south end of the township is disposed of.

The last white pine tree in the township stood on the Jamestown road, about half a mile east of Wattsburg. It was cut down in March, 1895. The butt measured four feet, and the rings indicated an age of 175 years. In early days the country was full of white pine, cucumber and cherry timber.

CHURCHES, GRAVEYARDS AND SCHOOLS.

The Middlebrook church, the first house for religious worship in the county, stood about a mile and a half north of Lowville, along the Wattsburg and North East road. The first services, held in August, 1801, in the woods on the east bank of the West branch, near a spring on the Enos Mann place, were attended by every man and woman in the township, the young men having previously cleared the ground and provided a pulpit and seats by chopping down and squaring the timber. At their conclusion, a motion that a church building be erected, was eagerly adopted. On the next Thursday, all of the able-bodied men and boys met, agreed upon a site, and put up a structure—all within the same day—which, though more modest than modern churches, doubtless afforded the people as much satisfaction. The first church was replaced in 1802, by another of more pretentious style, built of hewed and split logs. Services were regularly held in this building until the Presbyterian church at Wattsburg was erected, about 1828, when most of the congregation dropped off. The congregation at Middlebrook continued to decline until April 30, 1829, when it was dissolved and attached to the one at Wattsburg. In the Middlebrook graveyard were interred the bodies of many of the foremost Presbyterian pioneers in the county. Most of the remains have been taken up, and the old burying place is no longer interesting except from its associations.

The old building was torn down soon after the last war, and some of the logs were found to be perfectly sound. Those that could be used were cut into lumber and employed in building the Moore schoolhouse in Greenfield township.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation at Lowville was organized in 1875, and built its house of worship in 1876. That of the same denomination at Phillipsville was organized some years prior to 1848. The church building was erected in 1862, on land deeded to the society by Norman Chapin. The Methodist Episcopal congregation at Macedonia has been in existence a good many years. The church was built about 1890.

The United Brethren have two churches— one on the Lake Pleasant road, at the head of the lake, near the Greene township line, and the other about half a mile north of Wick's Corners. The congregation first mentioned was organized in 1871, and put up a building in 1872; the second building was erected about 1890.

The Advent congregation at Lowville has been organized five or six years, and built a church edifice in 1893.

The cemeteries and graveyards of the township are the Lowville and Phillipsville, the old Butler burial ground on the James W. Davis place and some family inclosures. The Wattsburg cemetery is also partly within the township.

Not far from the year 1818, a school was held in the dwelling of B. Tracy, situated about one and a half miles east of the present borough of Wattsburg. In the Phillipsville settlement, about the year 1833, a frame schoolhouse was erected not far from the site of the school building now at that village. A log schoolhouse had been used from 1828. In the summer of 1819, there was a school in the neighborhood of the Middlebrook church. Near the line between Venango and Greenfield townships, stood what was known as the Campfield schoolhouse, in which school was taught at periods during the decade beginning with 1822.

VILLAGES.

Lowville is on the West branch of French creek, eighteen miles southeast from Erie, and two north of Wattsburg. The Wattsburg plank road runs through the place and constitutes its main street. Lowville is the site of the town house of Venango, a frame building built in 1872. The Lowville cemetery, a tract of four acres, on the bank of the creek, contains some costly monuments, is neatly laid out and carefully kept. Lowville owes its origin to the enterprise of Samuel Low, who moved there in 1822 from Genesee county, New York, and established a grist and saw-mill and a woolen factory. In 1834 he changed to Harbor Creek. Col. Wareham Warner carried on a tannery at Lowville with success for some years, but abandoned it about 1860 or 1861.

Phillipsville was founded by Gen. John Phillips, who opened a tavern about 1810 on the Waterford and North East road, a few rods west of the corners. The village is fourteen miles from Erie and four from Wattsburg, at the crossing of the Waterford and North East road by the old Erie and Wattsburg road.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A NATIVE.

The following interesting reminiscences were contributed by James D. Phillips, a son of one of the pioneers of Venango township:

"Thomas Phillips, with his sons John, David and Thomas, jr., and his daughters Elenor, Hannah and Polly, moved from Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, in the year 1797. John Phillips took up 1,400 acres of land, Thomas, sr., 200, and David 200 acres. Messrs. Vost, Donaldson and others followed about the same period. James Phillips, son of Thomas, sr., and brother to John, David and Thomas, jr., moved from Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in 1827. * * *

"John Phillips was Paymaster General in the war of 1812, under Gen. Harrison. He received his money, to pay off the army, in silver at Pittsburg, and carried it through the wilderness to Fort Meigs on pack-horses. He served for years as the Representative of this county in the Legislature; afterward, he was appointed Canal Commissioner of the State, and subsequently was appointed and served as Justice of the Peace for several years. He died in the fall of 1846.

"The first postoffice at Phillipsville was established in 1829, James Phillips, being appointed postmaster. A post route was established from Jamestown, N. Y., via Phillipsville, to Erie. The mail was carried on foot from Jamestown to Erie, with nothing from Phillipsville to Mill Creek township to mark the way through the wilderness except blazed trees. The county at that time was a home for bear, wolves and deer.

"Levi Butler and sons Jackson and Timothy, from Onondaga, N. Y., made their settlement in 1828-29."

BOROUGH OF WATTSBURG.

[SEE VENANGO.]

The first clearing at Wattsburg was made in 1796 by William Miles, who built a storehouse as a depot of supplies for the surrounding country and for the purchase of furs. At that time the headquarters of the Population Company were at Colt's Station, and all the trade between the lake and the Allegheny was carried on in canoes up and down French creek. The first road was opened to North East, by way of Greenfield, in 1798. In 1809, through the persuasion of Mr. Miles and others, the county opened a road from Erie to the forks of French creek, as the site was then called, which, in general, followed the route of the old Wattsburg road, though it was afterward changed in some places. Previous to 1822, the West branch had to be forded, but in that year Mr. Miles got the county to build a bridge on the same site used for the purpose to-day. This was the first permanent bridge erected in Erie county. During the same season he put up a gristmill and sawmill, and in 1822 he induced Lyman Robinson, a surveyor at North East, to move over and build a tavern. Mr. Miles located in 1795 on the head-waters of Oil creek, near the Crawford county line, in Concord township, where he remained until 1800, when he changed to Union. In 1828 he laid out Wattsburg, naming it after his father-in-law, David Watts, of Carlisle. In February of the same year, he had a postoffice established at Wattsburg, and at the same time a weekly mail route was opened between Erie and Jamestown, by way of the village. The mail was carried for years on the back of a man, who walked the whole distance. Mr. Robinson acted as agent at Wattsburg for William Miles for many years, and after his death served in a similar capacity for his son James Miles. The tract of 1,400 acres taken up by Mr. Miles was not originally in his own name, but in that of Watts, Scott & Co.

Wattsburg was incorporated as a borough in 1833, with a population of a little over a hundred. The town stands on the wide plain just above the junction of the two branches of French creek, twenty miles by the plank road, eighteen by the old road, and eighteen and three-fourths by the Lake Pleasant road from Erie, and eight miles from Union City.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

Wattsburg contains three church buildings, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian and Baptist.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation was organized in 1827, by Elder Knapp, who went there as a missionary in 1820. The first edifice was erected in 1831, and the present one in 1861.

The Presbyterian congregation, organized in 1826, is the successor of the old Middlebrook society, the history of which is given in the sketch of Venango township. The first church was built in Wattsburg about 1828, and the second in 1855. In November, 1833, the Wattsburg church was recognized by the Presbytery as a separate organization.

The Baptist Church was organized April 6, 1850. On the 25th of that month the church was duly recognized. The meeting-house was erected in 1851.

The Wattsburg Agricultural Society is one of the most successful organizations of its kind in Northwestern Pennsylvania. It held its twelfth annual fair during the first week in September, 1895.

Wattsburg Lodge No. 533, of the Masonic order, was instituted in March, 1875. The lodge of the Knights of Honor was organized in 1877; that of the Odd Fellows in 1889; the Grange in 1874; the post of the G. A. R. in 1882; the W. R. C. in 1882, and the branch of the State Police in 1877.

GENERAL FEATURES.

The borough has a number of mills and factories and does a good trade. Among its manufacturing establishments are a gristmill, two sash and blind factories and two lumber-mills. The water-power afforded by the two branches of French creek is considerable, and, with railroad facilities, the town could not fail to become a point of importance.

Wattsburg has been a famous butter market for thirty years. "Wattsburg butter," which includes the product mainly of Amity, Venango and Greenfield, ranks as "Chautauqua butter" in the New York market and brings the same price.

The population of the borough by the United States census was 286 in 1870, 389 in 1880 and 382 in 1890.

The first temperance society in Erie county was organized in Wattsburg in 1828. In 1832 a project was agitated for a new county, to be called Miles, with Wattsburg as the county seat.

A schoolhouse stood in the immediate vicinity of the present school building as long ago as 1821. All of the schools in the borough have practically been held on the same site. The present building was erected in 1852. The schools were first graded in 1878.

NEWSPAPERS AND PUBLIC MEN.

The first newspaper published in Wattsburg was styled the Chronicle, begun in 1878 by W. A. Moore and discontinued in about one year. In 1881, the Wattsburg Occasional was started by R. P. Holliday. This was succeeded by the Sentinel, established by Dr. S. F. Chapin in 1884, which is still published by that gentleman.

The following State and county officers have been residents of Wattsburg: Assembly, Lyman Robinson, 1842 and 1845; Byron S. Hill, 1863 and 1864; Samuel F. Chapin, 1875 to 1878; A. W. Hayes, 1881 to 1884. County Superintendent of Common Schools, William H. Armstrong, 1854 to 1860, the first incumbent of the office. County Commissioner, Lyman Robinson, 1839 to 1842. County Treasurer, Newton T. Hume, December 14, 1874, to January 7, 1878. Director of the Poor, O. J. McAllister, 1883 to 1889. Jury Commissioners, D. N. Patterson, 1868 to 1871; Robert Leslie, 1874 to 1877. Mercantile Appraisers, James T. Ensworth, 1856; D. N. Patterson, 1868 and 1878; O. J. McAllister, 1882. Clerk to the Directors of the Poor, W. Barry Smith (living in Erie at the time), 1886 to 1888 inclusive. Dr. S. F. Chapin, Surgeon to the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home in Erie, since October 1, 1889, was a resident of Wattsburg when appointed.

Among the prominent citizens of Erie who have lived in Wattsburg and Venango township, were: Joseph Williams (the banker), P. G. Finn, Heman Janes, Amos C. Williams, J. I. Town, J. J. Town, B. F. Sloan and the Warner brothers, Col. W. S., M. Rush and Joseph R. Outside of Erie, the list of former residents of Wattsburg who became conspicuous numbers Richard Blore, of Colorado; H. T., Wm., Augustus, and Artemas Clarke, and L. S. and H. F. Chapin, of Nebraska; Hon. Mr. Walling, of Ohio, member of Congress; L. C. Chapin, professor in Yale College for twelve years; Buchanan and Samuel Nelson, of Chicago; David Preston, of Detroit; the well known Town family, W. T. Everson, of Union, and Hector McLean, of Rochester, N. Y.

AN AGED WOMAN.

Miss Rosina Bliss died May 16, 1895, at the unusual age of 97 years and 10 months, being one of the most aged persons who has ever lived in the county.

CHAPTER XIX.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF EDINBORO.

WHEN Erie county was created the territory now embraced in Washington township, together with portions of Waterford and Franklin since taken off, was given the title of Conneauttee, after its lake and principal stream. The name was changed to Washington in 1834, to correct the inconvenience caused by two very similar township names in the same county. In 1844, a large slice was cut out of the west side in the formation of Franklin township, and another reduction was made at a later period by taking a piece from the northeast corner and adding it to Waterford.

The township is bounded on the north by McKean, Waterford and Franklin, on the east by Waterford and LeBeuf, on the south by Venango, Cussewago and Cambridge townships, Crawford county, and on the west by Elk Creek and Franklin. It contains three small villages—McLane, McLallen's Corners and Draketown. The postoffices are McLane (sometimes known as Compton's Corners), McLallen's Corners and Itley (Draketown). The population of the township was 438 in 1820, 743 in 1830, 1,551 in 1840, 1,706 in 1850, 1,943 in 1860, 2,744 in 1870, 1,880 in 1880, and 1,790 in 1890. It is divided, for election purposes, into the East and West districts.

EARLY SETTLERS.

In 1796 Alex. Hamilton and William Culbertson, both of Lycoming county, visited the site of Edinboro and selected lands with the design of establishing a colony. They returned to their home in the fall and spent the winter along the West branch of the Susquehanna enlisting settlers. In the spring of 1797, they came back, and were soon followed by Job Reeder, Samuel Galloway, Simeon Dunn, John and James Campbell, Mathias Sippes, John McWilliams, Phineas McLenathan, Matthew Hamilton, James, John, Andrew and Samuel Culbertson, Mrs. Jane Campbell (a widow), two of her sons and daughter Hannah, and the wives of Alex. Hamilton and William Culbertson. Other parties arrived later in the season, making about fifty colonists during the year 1797. The widow Campbell retraced her way to the Susquehanna in the fall, and returned the next spring, bringing her other three children. She and her family took up over 1,000 acres, building several cabins so as to hold the land. James Culbertson located on the Hardman farm; John on the Lick, Webster and Giles places; Samuel on the old Perry farm, and William on the old Kinter farm. The latter soon changed to the tract now covered by Edinboro, and proved himself to be the most enterprising man of the party. He built the first house in Edinboro and the first gristmill and sawmill on Conneauttee creek. Mr. Culbertson's earliest residence was on the site of the Vunk house in Edinboro from which he moved to a building on the site of the R. C. McLaughrey store. Alexander Hamilton took up 600 acres, including the Martin Pratt farm; Phineas McLenathan settled on the west side of the lake, and Mathias Sippes near the Waterford road, not far from the center of the township.

Below are as nearly as can be ascertained the years in which other pioneers settled in the township: In 1798, Peter Kline; 1800, James Graham; 1802, Daniel Sherod; 1805, John Tanner and Davis Pifer; 1814, Simeon Meacham; 1816, Judah Wells; 1817, John C. Reeder; 1817 or 1818, Robert McLallen, James Port and Nathaniel Etheridge; 1819, Isaac Taylor; 1819 or 1820, Nathaniel Gardner; 1822, Samuel Reeder; 1824, Moses Reeder; 1825, Moses Gleeton; 1825 or 1826, Jesse Lewis; 1827, Davis McLallen and Henry R. Terry; 1828, Jacob Lefevre; 1830, Charles McLallen; 1832, Sherman Greenfield and L. B. Goodell; 1833, George Sweet, Evi Twichell and Willard Wellman; 1834, J. J. Compton, Benjamin White, Jesse Tarbell, Wanton Slocum, the Hawkinses and M. M. McLaughrey; 1835, John White, the Proudfts and the Potters; 1836, the Shieldses. Mr. Sweet was from Cayuga county, New York, and Mr. Compton from Delaware county, New York. Dr. J. C. Wilson made his location in 1856, coming from Bucks county. Among the early settlers in Little Conneauttee valley were Zopher Davis and John Sherwood (both of whom located in 1819), Walter Palmer, Henry Drake, Russell Stancliff, Ralph D. Phelps and Theo. Phelps.

Wm. Culbertson was the first and Jacob Lefevre the second Justice of the Peace—the first-named holding the position forty years.

The first marriage was that of Job Reeder to Nancy Campbell, March 1, 1800; the first death that of Mrs. William Culbertson in 1804. Jane Culbertson was the first female child, born in 1799, and John Augustus Culbertson the first male child, born in 1800, though this was disputed by William Boardman, of Union City, who claimed to have first seen the light in the Little Conneauttee valley in 1796.

CREEKS, LAKE AND LAND.

Washington township is well watered by Conneauttee and Little Conneauttee creeks and their branches. The East branch of Conneauttee creek rises near McLane, and the West branch in a cranberry marsh in Franklin township, about two miles from the Washington line. After coursing through the western and central portions of Washington township from the north, they unite their waters at the head of Conneauttee lake. Flowing through the lake, the stream continues some eight miles further to a point near Cambridge, where it joins French creek after a total length of about fifteen miles. Pratt creek unites with the East branch about a mile north of the lake, and Herbert creek runs into the main stream two miles below the outlet. The Little Conneauttee rises in McKean, perhaps a mile north of the township line, runs across the eastern portion in a southerly course, and empties into the Conneauttee a short distance above its mouth, having a length about equal to its more prominent namesake. Besides the above mentioned streams, the north part of the township contains the headwaters of the South branch of Elk creek, which joins the main stream near Middleboro.

Lake Conneauttee was originally about three-fourths of a mile long by half a mile wide, but was somewhat enlarged by the construction of the dam for Culbertson's mill across the outlet.

The lands of Washington township will average as well as any of the southern districts in the county. There are no abrupt hills or precipitous gullies, and nearly the whole face of the country is susceptible of cultivation. A broad, fertile valley extends from the McKean line across the entire township, along Conneauttee creek, and the valley of the Little Conneauttee, though narrower, is equally productive.

A high chestnut ridge, rising gradually from the valleys, lies between the two streams. There is another ridge on the west side of the township, extending from Franklin to the Crawford line, which is the exact counterpart of its eastern neighbor. The price of land is from twenty-five to $100 an acre, averaging perhaps thirty dollars.

COMMON ROADS.

The principal highways are the Erie and Meadville plank roads, the plank road from Waterford to Drake's Mills, Crawford county; the old Waterford road, the road from Cranesville to Waterford, the State road from Lockport through McLane to Waterford, and the Sherrod Hill road from Edinboro to Cussewago. The old Waterford road was established about 1802. The Erie and Edinboro Plank Road Company was formed in 1850, and the Edinboro and Meadville Company was organized the same year, thus making provision for a continuous route between Lake Erie and the county seat of Crawford county. Both roads (now known as one) were completed in 1852, and abandoned by the companies about 1868 or 1869. The plank road from Waterford to Drake's Mills, built about the same period, was allowed to fall into the hands of the township authorities when the others were abandoned. In all three cases, the plank was taken up or allowed to decay, and the thoroughfares, although still known as "plank roads," do not differ from other public roads, except that they have better grades than the average in the south part of the county.

There is no railroad in the township, and the nearest railroad station is at Cambridge, in Crawford county, where most of the freight to and from Edinboro is received and shipped.

VILLAGES AND CHURCHES.

The village of McLane lies upon the Erie and Edinboro plank road, at the crossing of the State road, on the summit between the head-waters of Conneauttee creek and the South branch of Elk creek, fourteen miles south of Erie and six miles north of Edinboro. The name was changed from Compton's Corners to McLane, in honor of Gen. John W. McLane, the gallant first colonel of the Eighty-third Regiment. There is a union cemetery at the village.

The Baptist congregation at McLane, until the erection of their church edifice, held services in McKean township. The organization was effected during the winter of 1838-9. Services were held in the South Hill and Branchville schoolhouses until 1866, when the church building at McLane was erected. It was dedicated January 29, 1867.

The Methodist Episcopal society at McLane was organized in 1863. The church building was erected in 1867.

McLallen's Corners (named from Wm. McLallen, who located there at an early day) is on the Little Conneauttee, at the crossing of the Waterford and Drake's Mills plank road by a road leading to Pollock's bridge in LeBœuf township.

The Christian church at McLallen's Corners was organized in the spring of 1828, holding services in the schoolhouse. A church building was put up some forty-five years ago, and overhauled and enlarged in 1893.

About a mile northwest of McLallen's Corners a religious body calling themselves "The Saints" hold services in a building erected during the summer of 1894. They are opposed to the regular church organizations and to secret societies.

Draketown (called after the Drake family in the vicinity), is on Little Conneauttee creek, about two-thirds of a mile south of the State road.

The Christian Church at this place was organized in January, 1877, and erected a building about the same time.

There is a Methodist building at Ash's Corners, north of Draketown, and another of the same denomination at Sherrod Hill, in the southwestern part of the township. The building at Ash's Corners was erected in 1867. An old society had previously existed in the locality and met for worship in various schoolhouses. The congregation at Sherrod Hill own a frame building.

The cemetery at Edinboro is the general burial ground of the township, but a number of graveyards are scattered about the country. The most prominent are those at McLane and Draketown.

SCHOOLS AND MILLS.

The first school in the township was on the west side of Conneauttee creek in what was known as the old Plank schoolhouse. About 1819, school was taught in a room in Isaac Taylor's cabin, located one and a half miles southeast of Edinboro. Soon after, a log schoolhouse was built on the east line of Mr. Taylor's farm. The northern portion of the township held its first school in the cabins of the pioneers. A large schoolhouse stood in Edinboro in 1821, and had been erected years previous. It was used for both educational and religious purposes. A schoolhouse was built at an early date on the Perry farm, east of Edinboro.

The factories and mills of Washington township are as follows: A steam sawmill and shingle and lath factory, north of McLane; a cheese factory on the Crane road, about two and a half miles northwest of Edinboro; a creamery and a butter and cheese factory at McLallen's Corners; a saw and feedmill near Draketown; a saw, planing, lath and shingle mill about three-fourths of a mile south of Edinboro; a sawmill further south; a factory on the Kinter road; a cider and jell mill west of Edinboro, and a general lumber cutting mill at McLallen's Corners.

[See Edinboro for list of public men.]

BOROUGH OF EDINBORO.

[SEE WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.]

Edinboro was incorporated as a borough by act of the Legislature in 1840, and includes some 500 acres of high, gravelly land at the foot of Lake Conneauttee, twenty miles south of Erie, seven miles north of Cambridge, and two miles north of the Crawford county line. The valley of the Conneauttee is about a mile wide at this point, and the country around the borough is one of the finest sections of Erie county. The corporate limits, which cover a portion of the lake, are about a mile from north to south, and about two-thirds of a mile from east to west. The population was 232 in 1840, 963 in 1850, 474 in 1860, 801 in 1870, 876 in 1880 and 1,107 in 1890. Wm. Kellison was the first Burgess.

The third gristmill in Erie county—each having been previously built at Union and Walnut creek—was erected on the outlet of Lake Conneauttee, nearly on the site of the present mill, in 1801, by William Culbertson, who added a sawmill in 1802. The property fell into the hands of Isaac R. Taylor and James Reeder some forty years ago, who built new mills. The establishment of the mills may be said to have laid the foundation of the town. By degrees a number of houses sprung up around them, and Mr. Culbertson finally concluded to survey the site into lots. The sawmill has gone down, but the gristmill remains. The borough contains a cheese factory, established in 1868, and three hotels. The old Robinson House was built in 1843, on the site of a hotel that burned down. The Butler House and Biggers House are of comparatively recent date.

CHURCHES AND CEMETERIES.

A Presbyterian congregation was organized in Edinboro prior to 1810, but the present one dates from 1829. A building was erected in 1836, being the first church edifice in the place. In 1837 or '38, the denomination split into Old and New School. The New School branch put up a building in 1854, and the ensuing year the Old School branch also constructed one. On the Union of the two branches one building served their purpose, and the Old School building was sold to the Baptist congregation.

The latter body was organized about 1838, and held services in the schoolhouse until 1871, when the building above stated was purchased.

The Methodist Episcopal society was organized about 1829, and put up a church building in 1838. This was sold for a Town House, and the present building erected in 1863.

The Advent Christian Church was organized in 1863, though irregular services of the denomination had been held for twenty years or more. The building was erected in 1864.

The old cemetery of the borough was a gift for the purpose from Wm. Culbertson. It has been in use about eighty years. The new cemetery, established two or three years ago, is much larger than the first one.

NEWSPAPERS—POST OFFICE—SECRET SOCIETIES.

In 1855, Edinboro boasted of three newspapers—the Native American, a monthly, and the Gem and Museum, weeklies. The Native American and Gem died in 1856, and the Museum was moved to Waterford. Henry Lick established the Express in 1859, which lived until December 29, 1860. The Edinboro Independent was started in February, 1880, by the Cobb brothers. It is now published by Chas. Cooper. The Conneauttee Wave was started in June, 1893. It is owned by the Wave Publishing Co., with A. F. Moses as editor and W. J. Britton as assistant.

The post route to Erie and the postoffice at Edinboro were established in 1837. Dr. Stranahan was the first postmaster.

Oasis Lodge No. 417, F. & A. M., was chartered March 4, 1868. Its hall was dedicated on the 12th of October, 1875.

The charter of Edinboro Lodge No. 80, A. O. U. W., was granted September 10, 1877.

The Edinboro Fair Association holds annual exhibitions, which are among the most successful in the county.

The new school building of the borough was erected in 1894, and dedicated March 4, 1895.

THE NORMAL SCHOOL.

The most conspicuous institution in Edinboro, and the one which has contributed most to its advancement, is the Normal School. The original Normal School structure was built by subscription in 1856, at a cost of $3,200, and used as an academy in 1857-59. Owing to the large attendance of scholars, two additional buildings, known as the Assembly Hall and the Ladies' Boarding Hall, were erected in 1858, at an outlay of $11,000, also raised by subscription. During the winter of 1859-60, $10,000 more were collected, and in 1860 a fourth building was erected, known as the Gentlemen's Boarding Hall. On January 26, 1861, the institution was formally recognized by the State Superintendent as a State Normal School, since when it has been steadily enlarged and improved. The last State report inventoried the school as follows: Buildings, $150,000; furniture, $10,000; libraries, $6,000; musical instruments, $5,000; apparatus, $4,000; other property, $2,000; making a total of $177,000. Prof. J. A. Cooper, who went to the school as an assistant in 1861, was made principal in 1863. He was displaced February 5, 1892, and Prof. Martin G. Benedict was chosen to the position on the 24th of February in the same year. A long and costly series of lawsuits ensued, and much bad feeling grew out of the controversy, which, for the welfare of the school and the town, it is to be hoped may soon pass away.

STATE AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

The following is a list of the public officers furnished by Edinboro and Washington township: Auditors, Russell Stancliff, 1834 to 1837; James H. Campbell, 1845 to 1848; Samuel Reeder, 1851 to 1853; John W. Campbell, 1856 to 1859; J. J. McWilliams, 1857 to '90. County Commissioners, Russell Stancliff, 1840 to 1843; William Campbell, 1846 to 1849; Josiah J. Compton, 1855 to 1858. Treasurer, Mortimer Phelps, 1855 to 1857. Prothonotary, C. P. CHAPTER XX.

WATERFORD TOWNSHIP—BOROUGH OF WATERFORD.

WATERFORD TOWNSHIP was established by the act for the organization of Erie county. The boundary lines are nearly the same as when the township was formed, the only exceptions being a small district annexed from Washington; and another from Summit. The latter is the jog or handle in the north-west, which has been at various times in McKean, Greene and Summit, and was finally attached to Waterford through the exertions of Capt. Martin Strong, who wished to close his life in the township of his original residence in the county.

Waterford is bounded on the north by Summit and Greene; on the east by Amity and Union; on the south by LeBoeuf and Washington, and on the west by Washington and McKean. The greatest breadth of the township from north to south is five and three-fourths miles, and the greatest width from east to west nine and one-half miles. Its population was 579 in 1820, 1,006 in 1830, 1,144 in 1840, 1,545 in 1850, 1,950 in 1860, 1,884 in 1870, 1,822 in 1880, and 1,537 in 1890. The township is divided into two election precincts, known as the east and west districts, and contains one postoffice, that of Juva, at Newman's bridge. Most of the mail is sent and received through the office at Waterford borough, which place is also the principal marketing point of the township.

LANDS, DONATION DISTRICT, RESERVATION, ETC.

The best valley lands in Waterford township lie below lake LeBoeuf, along its outlet. They are level and very fertile, and have an average width between the ridges of perhaps a mile and a half. Above the lake the flats range from one to two miles in width, and the land is of a good quality, but a great deal of it is swampy, though being gradually drained. Good valleys also exist along Benson, Boyd and Trout runs. The valley of French creek becomes narrow as it courses through Waterford township, not reaching more than half a mile in the widest place.

Aside from the valleys, which embrace but a small portion of the township, the balance of the land is hilly, though almost every part is capable of cultivation. The hill farms have a clay soil, and are more free from frosts than the valleys. The hills rise in some places to a considerable height, the loftiest elevations being at Strong's, in the northwest; I. Y. Lunger's, in the south; Robert Hood's, in the east; and at Oak hill and Cottrell's hill, in the southeast. A good deal of timber is still left in the township. The price of land ranges from thirty to $100, being most valuable in the vicinity of the borough.

The Tenth Donation District commenced in Waterford township about a mile east of the borough, and extended across Amity and Wayne townships to the Warren county line.

The Reserved Tract was a body of 1,800 acres in Waterford township, and 400 in LeBœuf, all lying south of the borough, which was set apart from the operation of the general settlement law for reasons elsewhere given. An act was passed in 1799 authorizing the land to be sold. The first sale took place in 1800, and most of the tract was disposed of by 1804.

In 1856, during the construction of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., a troublesome sink-hole was encountered on the Benson farm, about a mile northeast of Waterford borough. Tamarack swamp is about two miles long by 100 rods wide. About two-thirds of the swamp are in Waterford and the balance in McKean. The swamp is being ditched and drained, and will ultimately be one of the richest parts of the county.

CREEKS, RUNS AND LAKE.

The chief streams of Waterford township are French creek, which flows through its southeast corner for about three miles, from Amity to LeBœuf; the outlet of Lake Pleasant, which courses for about a mile through its northeast corner, from Venango to Amity; and LeBœuf creek with its branches. LeBœuf creek—known to the French as the River aux Bœufs, and named by them from the number of cattle discovered on the flats below Waterford—runs through the center of the township from Greene on the north to LeBœuf township on the south, where it joins French creek. It has two main branches, one rising on the edge of Greene and Venango, and the other in Summit, which unite near the Greene and Waterford boundary, almost at the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. bridge. Just below Waterford borough the creek enters Lake LeBœuf, and after leaving it is generally known by the name of "The Outlet." Its length in the township is not far from ten miles, and its total length about twenty. Boyd run and Trout run rise in the west part of the township, and empty into Lake LeBœuf on its north side, the first being about five and the second about two miles in length. Trout run is formed by the junction of Black run and Bagdad run, the one rising in Tamarack swamp and the other in the extreme western part of the township, the two uniting just west of the borough. Benson run, after a course of some two miles, falls into LeBœuf creek near the old Brother-ton mill. Davis run empties into French creek near the Newman bridge, and Moravian run joins the same stream in LeBœuf township. The first stream rises near the Colt's Station road, and is about four miles long. The second has its head in the Ormsbee settlement, and a length in Waterford of perhaps two miles. The valleys of Benson run and Moravian run form the route by which the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. crosses from LeBœuf creek to French creek.

Lake LeBœuf is about two-thirds of a mile long by half a mile wide, with an almost round island near its center. It receives LeBœuf creek and Boyd and Trout runs, and its outflow is apparently greater than its inflow, from which it is surmised that the lake must be fed by springs in the bottom.

French creek and the outlet of Lake Pleasant are described in the chapters on Amity, LeBœuf and Venango townships and in the General History of Erie county.

CHURCHES AND GRAVEYARDS.

The Free-Will Baptist Church at Newman's bridge was organized in 1832 or 1833, but was allowed to go down. It was re-organized in 1853. Until the erection of the present house of worship, the congregation held services in the neighborhood schoolhouses. The building was erected in 1860, and was dedicated in December of that year.

Robt J. Dalsman

Another Free-Will Baptist church is located in the northeastern part of the township. The building was erected in 1877. The congregation is nearly, if not quite, as old as the one above named and its history is almost identical.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Sharp's Corners was organized in 1838 or 1839. The church building was erected in 1868.

The Christian congregation at Oak Hill was organized in 1854. Its house of worship was erected in 1861.

The Roman Catholic congregation at East Waterford (or Waterford Station) dates from the building of the church edifice in 1878. The congregation is served by the pastors of the church at Union City. It is known as St. Cyprian's parish.

Most of the burials take place in the cemetery at Waterford borough, although there are graveyards at each of the above churches, except the Catholic. The Walker graveyard is about a mile south of the Greene line. The Catholics generally inter at Union.

SCHOOL HISTORY.

One of the early schools of Waterford township was held in a building which stood near the residence of Webster Hunt. School was taught there by Russell Stancliff about the year 1806 or 1807. Michael Hare taught a school about the year 1827, in the south-eastern part of the township. During the same year a schoolhouse was put up near the site of the present Hare schoolhouse, being probably the first regular building for the purpose in the township.

WATERFORD STATION, ETC.

Waterford Station, or East Waterford, on the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., a mile east of the Diamond in the borough, and eighteen and one-half miles by railroad from Erie city, consists of a station building, a hotel and grocery combined, a cider mill, a schoolhouse, a Catholic church, about two dozen good dwellings and a number of shanties for railroad employes. The railroad company have stockyards at this point, and it is one of the important stations on the line. Many spikes, bullets, cannon balls and other articles have been found in the vicinity of the depot, where the soldiers were encamped during the war of 1812-14.

In the southeast corner of the township, bordering on LeBeuf, are several quarries of sandstone, which have furnished some of the finest flagging in Northwestern Pennsylvania. Neither are operated at the time of writing.

RAILROADS, COMMON ROADS, BRIDGES AND MILLS.

The Philadelphia and Erie is the only railroad in Waterford township, entering it from Greene by the valley of the LeBeuf creek, and passing across into LeBeuf. Its only station is that of Waterford, or East Waterford, as it is often called, a mile east of the Diamond in the borough.

The leading public roads are the old Erie and Waterford turnpike, the Erie and Waterford plank, the Colt's Station, the Waterford and Wattsburg, the Flats road to Mill Village, the Waterford and Meadville pike, the old State road to the Ohio line, the Edinboro and Waterford, the Waterford and Meadville plank, the Waterford and McKean, the Waterford and Union, and the Station road from the borough to the railroad. Some of the above-named roads were among the earliest that were opened in the county. Their history will be found in the General Chapters and in the articles relating to Greenfield, Venango, North East, LeBeuf, Amity, Washington, McKean and Union.

The important bridges are as follows: Over French creek, the Newman covered bridge, on the Wattsburg and Waterford road. Over LeBeuf creek, the Himrod bridge, on the cross-road from Greene to the plank road; the Benson, near the sink-hole; the Lattimore, on the Colt's Station road; the two of the Pennsylvania and Erie R.R., one at the Greene line and the other near Waterford station; the Station, on the Station road; the Judson, on the Flats roads; the Outlet bridge on the Meadville pike; and the Brotherton, on the road leading to Union and Wattsburg.

The mills and factories are: A gristmill and a sawmill on LeBeuf creek; two sawmills on Boyd's run; a sawmill near the McKean line; a cheese factory each at Newman's bridge, Sharp's corners, Marsh's mill and the Forest Home (four in all); and a cider-mill each on Oak Hill, at East Waterford (or Waterford Station), and just west of the borough line (three in all). The cheese factory at Newman's bridge was started in the spring of 1871.

[For early history, etc., see Waterford borough; also General History of the county.]

WATERFORD BOROUGH.

[SEE WATERFORD TOWNSHIP.]

On the arrival of the French in Northwestern Pennsylvania they found an Indian village where Waterford now stands, traces of which remained some fifty years ago. The first French explorers regarded LeBœuf creek as the main stream of French creek, and called both by the same title. At a subsequent period they changed the name of the main stream to the river Venango (or Innungah) by which it had been known to the Indians, and called the smaller stream LeBeuf, from the number of cattle that roamed on the flats below the lake.

The French took possession of the country in 1753, their purpose being to establish a chain of forts between Niagara and New Orleans—along the south shore of Lake Erie, LeBœuf creek, French creek, and the Allegheny, Ohio and Mississippi rivers. That season they built forts at Presque Isle and LeBœuf, now Erie and Waterford. They also cut a wagon road between the two places, which is still known as the old French road. On the 11th of December, LeBœuf was visited by George Washington, to protest against the French invasion of the country. [See General History.]

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FORTS.

The French fort LeBœuf is described in Washington's journal as having been situated "on the West fork of French creek, near the water, almost surrounded by the creek and a small branch of it, which forms a kind of an island. Four houses comprised the sides; the bastions were of poles driven into the ground, standing more than twelve feet above it, and sharp at the top, with port-holes cut for cannon and loop-holes for small arms. Eight six-pounders were mounted on each bastion and one four-pounder before the gate. In the bastions were a guard house, chapel, surgeon's lodgings and commandant's private store." Tradition claims that Washington camped on the high land, just south of LeBœuf creek and the main business portion of the borough.

After the French retreated before the superior force or prowess of the English, possession of Forts LeBœuf and Presque Isle was taken by Maj. Rogers, with a body of English and Colonial troops, in 1760.

In 1763, by the eloquence and ability of the celebrated Pontiac, all of the Indian tribes west of the Alleghanies were united in a grand confederacy, whose purpose was to fall upon every English fort on the frontier upon a given day, and sweep them and their occupants out of existence. The plan was so far successful that by the middle of summer all the forts were taken and burned except Niagara, Pitt, Bedford and Detroit. LeBœuf was assaulted on the 17th of June, and its block-house fired at night. While the Indians were dancing around their camp-fire in fiendish glee, momentarily expecting the surrender of its garrison, the ensign in command and his handful of men crept through a drain leading to the creek, and hid themselves in the swamps until it was safe to venture across the country. The fort at Presque Isle was taken on the 22d of June. The drain above spoken of had its mouth on the side hill just below the house of Will McKay, and immediately adjoining the spring which supplies his residence. The spring is the same that was used by the French, English and American occupants of the fort. [See General History of Erie County.]

AMERICAN SETTLEMENTS.

Up to 1796, the settlement of this section went on slowly, almost all of the white residents being hunters and traders with the Indians. In 1785, David Watts and William Miles came on under the auspices of the Commonwealth, to survey the Tenth Donation District, returning to the East on the completion of their labors. A committee on the part of the State was sent out in 1790 to explore the route from French creek to Erie, as a result of whose labors an appropriation of $400 was made by the Legislature in 1791 to improve that stream from Franklin to Waterford, and a similar sum for building a road from LeBeuf to Presque Isle. The Pennsylvania Population Company was formed March 8, 1793, and immediately advertised an offer of 150 acres to each of the first twenty families who would settle on French creek, and of 100 acres each to the next forty.

April 8, 1794, an act was approved by the Governor to lay out towns at Presque Isle. LeBeuf and Venango (Franklin), its principal object being to establish a line of defensive posts for the frontier. William Irvine, Andrew Ellicott and Albert Gallatin were appointed to prepare the plans, and a part of their mission was to survey a road from Reading to Presque Isle. State troops reached LeBeuf in May, and built a second fort, where they remained until the spring of 1795.

The American Fort LeBeuf consisted of four block-houses surrounded by pickets, with a six-pounder on the second floor of each building, and a swivel over each gate. The exact site of the American fort is a matter of some dispute, one authority fixing it on the spot occupied by the old French fort, while some of the older citizens of Waterford contend that it was a little to one side, on the west edge of High street, south of the Eagle Hotel.

While the troops were delayed at LeBeuf in 1794, Mr. Ellicott laid out a town at that place, to which the name of Waterford was given. This was nearly a year previous to the laying out of Erie by the same gentleman. The plan made by Mr. Ellicott was confirmed by the Legislature in 1795. On the 25th of July, 1796, a sale was advertised to commence in Philadelphia of lots in Erie, Waterford, Warren and Franklin. During the same year, Elliott located the Susquehanna and Waterford turnpike, from Curwensville, Clearfield county, to Lake LeBeuf, by way of Franklin and Meadville.

The following prices were paid by the Harrisburg & Presque Isle Company for lots in Waterford, at the public sale held in Carlisle on the 3d and 4th of August, 1796:

In 1800, James Naylor was appointed Commissioner for the sale of lands in Waterford, in place of D. McNair, resigned. February 16, 1805, John Vincent succeeded Naylor, who had died. Charles Martin was appointed in the place of Mr. Vincent, on the 29th of March, 1809, and James Boyd followed Mr. Martin in 1811.

THE PIONEERS.

On the conclusion of peace with the Indians, a full account of the incidents leading to which will be found in the General History, some of the State soldiers who had come on to protect the frontier decided to settle in or near Waterford, and emigration began to flow in from Eastern counties and New England. Lieut. Martin, commander of the post, was among those who became permanent residents, as well as James Naylor, one of the Commissioners for the sale of lands. The former opened the first tavern, and the latter the first store. Capt. Martin Strong came on from Hartford county, Connecticut, in the spring of 1795, and eventually located on the crest of the ridge north of Waterford. Amos Judson migrated from New England in the same year and started a store. He and Col. Seth Reed came up Lake Erie together in a small coasting boat.

The arrival of other settlers was as follows: In 1796, John Lytle, from Northumberland county; Robert Brotherton, from Franklin county; John Lennox and Thomas Skinner; in 1797, John Vincent, from Northumberland county, and Wilson Smith, from Union county; in 1798, Aaron Himrod and the Lattimores; in 1801-02, Capt. John Tracy, William Boyd, sr., and son David, John and James Boyd, with their three sisters and James Anderson; in 1804 or 1805, James and William Benson; in 1809, Eliachim Cook, who had previously settled in McKeen township; in 1799 or earlier, Geo. W. Reed; in 1812, John Henry and Levi Strong; in 1813, the McKays; in 1814, Simeon Hunt; in 1816, William Smith, William Vincent and Judge Hutchins; in 1822, I. M. White; in 1824, Seth and Timothy Judson; in 1826, Daniel Vincent. The Boyds and Mr. Anderson were from Northumberland county; Mr. Hunt was from Orange county, Vermont; William Smith and wife came over from Wayne township; Mr. White was a native of Windham county, Vermont, and the Judsons were from Connecticut. Most of those whose places of nativity are not given, hailed either from the Susquehanna valley or the New England States. In 1815, Rev. J. Matthews, Dr. William Bacon, Henry Woodworth, Henry Colt, John Way and Archibald Watson were residents of the village, but the precise date of their arrival cannot be given. Dr. Ira Barton did not settle in Waterford until 1840.

John Vincent settled first on a small stream which flows into French creek in the eastern portion of the township, where he remained two years before becoming a resident of the village. On the completion of the turnpike, he took charge of the toll gate about a mile above Waterford, and afterward went into the salt trade, which made him wealthy.

INCIDENTS OF THE EARLY DAYS.

The first death was that of a boy named Rutledge, who died of wounds received in the Indian troubles of 1795, and was buried just outside the fort. The first white child was John R., son of William Black, who was born in Fort LeBoeuf, August 8, 1795. The second birth was that of Katharine, daughter of Aaron Himrod and wife, in 1799. Robert Brotherton built the first sawmill in 1797, and the first grist mill in 1802, near Waterford Station. He also kept a tavern from 1815 to 1817, on the lot occupied by his son's residence. The second sawmill was set in operation by James Boyd on Boyd's run, west of the borough. Mr. Lattimore started a mill soon after Boyd's, the date of both having been very early. George W. Reed opened a tavern in 1810, on Union street, in the rear of the Judson's block, which burned down. Thomas King, who had kept a public house corner of First and Walnut streets, commenced building the stone hotel in 1826, and opened it in the winter of 1827.

Mrs. Smith, wife of William, is notable as one of the women in the county who lived to an unusual age. She died in Wayne township in 1875, in her one hundredth year. Mrs. Phelps, another venerable lady, died in August, 1879, aged 95 years.

Capt. John Lytle, father of John Lytle, jr., who rose to be prominent among the early settlers, was commander of Fort Freeland, on the West branch of the Susquehanna, in 1779. It was attacked by a body of British and Indians, and capitulated on the 30th of June of that year, among the prisoners taken being Capt. Lytle, William Miles and four of the Vincents. They were marched through the wilderness to Fort Niagara, in Canada, where they were detained until the acknowledgment of our National Independence. During the long absence of Captain Lytle his wife remained on the farm with her children, employing an unmarried man to do the work. In course of time this person made proposals of marriage to Mrs. Lytle, which she rejected. Determined to effect his object, the young man put letters in circulation, stating that the Captain was dead, and the unhappy woman became so well convinced of the truth of the report that she married the assiduous lover. On the Captain's return, he was so shocked and mortified to learn of what had happened that for awhile he refused to see his wife, but mutual friends having acquainted him with the facts, he was reconciled to her, took her again to his bosom and the miserable deluder was compelled to fly beyond the reach of the law. His son, John, was the originator of the Erie and Waterford Turnpike Company, and one of the leading men of the county.

Lafayette's visit in 1825 was one of the most memorable incidents in the history of Waterford. He was accompanied by his son, a companion and a servant, on their way from Pittsburg to Erie. The nation's distinguished guest arrived on the 2d of June, and remained over night at the hotel of George W. Reed, which stood just east of the Judson block, on First street. A barn still stands on the Meadville road which bore an inscription until recently signifying that it was built the year of Lafayette's visit.

The total tax assessed in 1813 was $410.25, and the militia fines, $384. Farm land was assessed at from $1.50 to two dollars per acre, inlots at twenty dollars to thirty dollars each and outlots at thirty dollars to fifty dollars each.

THE BOATING TRADE.

For years after the country began to settle, most of the supplies of iron, glass, flour, bacon, whisky, etc., came from Pittsburg, and nearly all of the freight was carried on boats poled up and down the Allegheny, French creek and LeBeuf creek. The flat boats were roughly built, and averaged about fifteen feet in width by seventy-five in length. They were sold at Pittsburg, loaded with coal, floated down to Southern ports, and broken up for fire wood after reaching their destination. It required about three weeks to make the trip from Waterford to Pittsburg and return. The keel-boats were of better construction, and were used for bringing freight up as well as carrying them down the streams, their propelling power being poles pushed by the crews.

The most important trade in the early days was the shipping of salt for the Southern markets. This article was brought to Erie from Onondaga, N. Y., hauled by teams to Waterford, deposited in warehouses there, and floated down the streams whenever they were in suitable condition. The trade began about 1812, and the last load was taken to Pittsburg in 1819. The village being without a church edifice, all religious services in those days were held in one of the warehouses.

During the second war with Great Britain, Waterford was a busy place, most of the supplies for the army and navy being brought there by boats, and hauled across the country to Erie. A brigade of Pennsylvania troops was organized in 1812, on land at or near the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. depot.

CREATED A BOROUGH.

The borough charter dates from April 8, 1833. The town was laid out on the same plan as Erie, with broad streets running at right angles, and a park or Diamond of some five acres near the center. The borough covers about 500 acres, and contained a population of 403 in 1840, 498 in 1850, 900 in 1860, 790 in 1870, 781 in 1880, and 838 in 1890. Measuring from the Diamond, half of which has been set out with trees, forming a beautiful park, the distance is fourteen miles south of Erie by the plank road, nineteen and a half by railroad, and one mile from the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. depot.

The town started along the creek, and, for a considerable period, in consequence of the boating business, Water street was its principal avenue. From there it worked back to First street, which contained all the stores and two or three taverns. At that date High street, now the business thoroughfare, was nothing more than a common road. In laying out the streets, all were made sixty feet wide except High, Third and Water, which have a width of 100 feet. There was no church edifice until 1834, although several denominations had been organized, and worship was held either in the schoolhouse, one of the warehouses or in the academy. The earliest school building was a log structure on Walnut street, between Sixth and Seventh, and the second stood on High street about the center of the Diamond. The first structure for free school purposes was on a corner of the academy lot and was removed in 1840. Among the early stores were those of Holmes & Harriott, Samuel Hutchins and Hart & Thompson. The original log houses of the town have mostly passed away.

WATERFORD ACADEMY.

At the sale of reserved lands in 1800, 500 acres were set apart by the State near Waterford, Erie, Franklin and Warren for the benefit of schools and academies in the several places. The Waterford Academy was incorporated in 1811, and, besides the above named 500 acres, embracing the flats at the mouth of LeBœuf creek, was endowed with fifteen inlots, to which eight others were added in 1821. On the 24th of February, 1820, an act passed empowering the trustees to sell the 500 acres of the reserved tract at not less than ten dollars an acre, and to invest the proceeds in some productive fund for the compensation of teachers. They were disposed of about 1840. The old stone building was completed in 1822, the same year as the academy in Erie, and the first school was opened in 1826. A brick addition was added about 1859, and a boarding-house some ten years later. The time was when Waterford Academy was the most famous and prosperous institution of learning in the county.

WATERFORD CEMETERY.

The only cemetery or graveyard was at the southwest corner of Second and West streets until 1840, when the first part of the present cemetery was laid out by William Benson, sr., under the auspices of the borough, containing one and a quarter acres. The first burial in the latter was that of a child of Dr. Banning, in December, 1840. This section became filled up, and the borough in 1865 deeded the property to the Waterford Cemetery Company, which increased the cemetery to eleven acres. Within the cemetery, in a lot appropriated for the purpose, lie the bones of Michael Hare, the oldest man who ever lived in Erie county, and perhaps in Pennsylvania. He was born in Ireland on the 10th of June, 1727, and died in Waterford, after a long residence there, on May 3, 1843, at the almost incredible age of 115 years, 8 months and 22 days. Mr. Hare served in the French wars, was present at Braddock's defeat, fought all through the Revolution, and wound up his military career by taking part in St. Clair's expedition against the Western Indians. At St. Clair's defeat, he was left on the field for dead and lost his scalp, which did not seem to cause him much inconvenience in after years. Mr. Hare was one of the original settlers of Wayne township, from which he moved to Waterford. Besides Mr. Hare, two other Revolutionary soldiers are buried at Waterford—Capt. John Lytle and Neil McKay—and five soldiers of the last war with Great Britain—M. Himrod, H. Colt, James McKay, J. Benson and J. Lenox.

The enlistments from Waterford in the war for the Union were probably not exceeded in number by any community of equal size, and there are few of its families who did not mourn the loss of one or more near relatives in that bloody struggle.

CHURCHES.

The First Presbyterian society was organized in 1809. The church building was erected in 1834, at a cost of $5,000—a large sum for the time.

The United Presbyterian congregation dates from October, 1812, and their house of worship was started in 1835, but not completed until 1838. It was enlarged and improved in 1859 and 1868, and a chapel was added at a later period. Rev. P. W. Free became pastor of the congregation in 1870. Himself and wife celebrated the 25th anniversary of their marriage, and also of the beginning of his pastorate, on the 2d of July, 1895.

St. Peter's Episcopal congregation was started in February, 1827. The corner-stone of the church was laid in the fall of 1831. Bishop Onderdonk consecrated the building in November, 1832. The edifice was renovated in the fall of 1871-2. The congregation is supplied at present by the rector of the Union City parish.

The Methodist Episcopal congregation was not regularly organized until 1835, though occasional services had been held from as long back as 1814. The meeting place for some years was in an old building removed from near the Eagle Hotel to the corner of High and Sixth streets. The present structure was built in 1854.

PUBLIC MEN.

Up to forty years ago, Waterford borough and township shared equally with Erie in political influence, and there is hardly a position within the gift of the people of the county that has not been filled by one or more of their citizens, as the following list shows: Quartermaster General, Wilson Smith, 1812. Presidential Electors, John Boyd, 1824; Wilson Smith, 1832; Charles C. Boyd, 1872. State Senate, Wilson Smith, 1809 to 1812. Assembly, John Lytle, 1802 to 1805; Wilson Smith, 1806 to 1808 and 1819-20; Samuel Hutchins, 1838 and 1839; David Himrod, 1857; O. S. Woodward, 1865 and 1866. Associate Judges, John Vincent, December 23, 1805, to March 26, 1840; Samuel Hutchins, November 12, 1856, to November 23, 1861; William Benson, November 8, 1866, to November 8, 1872. Sheriffs, Wilson Smith, 1803 to 1805; Thomas B. Vincent, November 2, 1852, to October 28, 1855; John L. Hyner, October 24, 1873, to January 1, 1877; H. C. Stafford, January 1, 1880, to January 1, 1883. Prothonotary, E. L. Whittelsey, November 22, 1869, to December 28, 1875. Register and Recorder, Reuben J. Thomas Wilson, Congressman from 1813 to 1818, had been a resident of Waterford, but removed to Erie in 1805, and was living there when elected. Other citizens of Erie chosen to public positions, who were natives of Waterford borough or township, are: John P. Vincent, Additional Law Judge from December, 1806, to April 17, 1874, and President Judge from the latter date to January, 1877; James Skinner, State Senator from 1852 to 1855, and Prothonotary from November, 1857, to November, 1863; Alfred King, Prothonotary from November, 1854, to the same month in 1857; and John A. Tracy, County Treasurer from 1835 to 1838. Among professional and business men, her contribution to Erie includes William Benson, John Clemens, A. H. Gray, F. F. Adams, David Himrod, F. F. Farrar, Dr. P. Hall, Irvin Camp, B. B. Vincent, William Himrod, T. B. Vincent, Dr. L. Strong, O. S. Woodward, and others whose names cannot now be recalled. She has given the city two Mayors—F. F. Farrar and Alfred King. Mr. Tracy's career in Erie began as a clerk for Reed & Sanford in 1816. He was the father of John F. Tracy, the famous railroad man (deceased), and father-in-law of the late Wm. L. Scott.

BOROUGH POSTMASTERS.

The following is a list of the Postmasters of the borough, with the years of their commissions: Charles Martin, 1801; Samuel Hutchins, 1819; Joseph Derrickson, 1829; John Marvin, 1831; Henry Colt, 1840; Joseph L. Cook, 1841; Timothy Judson, 1844; John Curtis, 1847; Thomas B. Vincent, 1849; Hugh H. Whitney, 1852; Henry Colt, 1853; John Lytle, 1861; William Vincent, 1861; Andrew W. Tracy, 1865; William O. Colt, 1868; James P. Vincent, 1869; Sarah H. Vincent, 1875; I. Lloyd Benson, February 6, 1890; T. M. Judson, May 1, 1894.

NEWSPAPERS.

In 1851 or '52, Joseph S. M. Young started the Waterford Dispatch, which attained to a wide circulation by its sympathy with the "Rippers" in the railroad war. He removed it to Erie in 1856, and it became the basis of the present Dispatch establishment. B. F. H. Lynn, who rose to distinction as an Erie publisher, was employed by Mr. Young in Waterford, and came over with the office. Not long after the change, Mr. Lewis, who was running the Edinboro Museum, went to Waterford with his office, and printed a paper for a short time. In 1857, it fell into the hands of Amos Judson, who changed the name to the Enquirer. That paper suspended for a few months in 1858, but was re-established by Judson & Lynn, who were succeeded by C. R. H. Lynn, under whose administration it went out of existence. The borough was without a paper till May 7, 1874, when L. B. Thompson started the Waterford Enterprise. Not proving as successful as he anticipated, the office was moved to Union City in February, 1875. Dr. D. P. Robbins started the Waterford Astonisher on the 26th of January, 1878, and continued his connection with the same until December 16 of that year, when A. F. Moses took charge, changed the name to the Waterford Leader, and continued its publication until April 1, 1883, when it was purchased by W. G. Leffevre. Since then it has been owned and edited by H. L. Moore, Gillett & Van Alstine and the Bolard Bros., the latter of whom are printing it at present with more than usual success.

FACTORIES, MILLS, ETC.

The manufacturing concerns of the borough are a cheese factory (opened May 10, 1870); a tannery; a gristmill (built in 1894); two carriage and wagon factories; a marble works; a carpenter and joiner shop; a cooper shop; two sawmills; a shingle-mill; and four blacksmith shops.

The borough has an unusual number of good stores. It also boasts quite an extensive cold storage building.

The secret societies in 1894 included lodges or organizations of the F. & A. M., I. O. O. F., A. O. U. W., I. O. G. T., K. O. T. M., K. of S., F. & I., P. H. C., W. R. C., G. A. R., E. A. U., and P. of H. The Odd Fellows lodge, the first secret society in the borough, was established in 1846, and that of the Masonic order in 1868.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Waterford, for a place of its size, has had more than its due proportion of destructive fires. One of the largest occurred on the 5th of March, 1865, sweeping away the whole of the west side of High street, from Second alley to Judson's store, and running north from Second alley about one half the block. Another on the last day of December, 1873, destroyed the Union hotel, a large three story building, and two other structures. The Bryant & Hayes tannery has been burned down twice. Quite extensive fires took place on the nights of February 4, 1881, and February 22, 1883. The first destroyed buildings belonging to A. M. Carson, the heirs of David Boyd, T. W. Whitney, J. W. Willard and the heirs of A. Oliver; the second, A. M. Carson's store, P. C. Sedgwick's meat market, and Hiram Howland's grocery. A fire in the winter of 1883-84 burned down Wheeler & Dewey's grist, saw and latb mill and planing factory. The latest and perhaps the most damaging of all, broke out about five o'clock Sunday morning, March 3, 1895, and swept the entire square on the west side of High street, between First and Second streets, with the exception of one brick building, causing a loss of some $45,000. With an energy that is deserving of much commendation, the people went to work almost immediately to rebuild the burnt district, and by August, 1895, it was covered with brick store and office structures of a much better style than before.

The Erie and Waterford plank road was completed in 1851, and the Waterford and Meadville about 1852. In 1856, grading for the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. commenced, and it was opened to Warren in 1859. The first postal facilities would seem to have been granted to the town about 1801. From then to 1823, a mail was carried between Pittsburg and Erie once a week each direction, in the beginning on horseback and after the war by hack. In 1826, stages ran through the place three times a week, each way, carrying the mails. The number was increased to a daily stage and mail from both ends of the line, which lasted until the completion of the railroad.

The centennial of the founding of Waterford was celebrated on Tuesday, September 17, 1895, with interesting exercises, and attended by a large number of people from all points of the compass.

CHAPTER XXI.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

THE section of Erie county now embraced in Wayne and Concord townships was originally known as Brokenstraw, a name given to it in the act of organization. In 1821 the title was changed to Concord, through the influence of William Miles. Wayne was set off from Concord in 1826, and was named after Gen. Anthony Wayne, the Revolutionary hero. The township of Brokenstraw (of which Wayne formed a part) constituted with Union one election district until 1821.

Wayne is bounded on the north by Chautauqua county, New York, on the east by Columbus township, Warren county, on the south by Corry city and Concord township, and on the west by Amity and Union. It has been twice reduced in size, first in 1863 by the creation of Corry as a borough, and second in 1866 by the act elevating that place to the dignity of a city. The charters of Corry took off a strip about one mile wide by two and a quarter long, from the southeastern corner, but what the township lost in territory has been more than made up in the increased value given to the balance by the growth of the city. The south line of the township is nearly uniform with the straight portion of Smith street in Corry. Wayne has an average width of about six miles, and a length of about eight, with a regular line on the north side, two slight jogs on the east and west, and more considerable ones on the Concord and Corry sides.

The boundary between Pennsylvania and New York, which forms the north line of the township, was established by Commissioners on the part of the two States in 1785, who completed their work in 1787. They surveyed the entire boundary between the Delaware river and Lake Erie, marking each mile with stones on which figures were cut, showing the distance from the first named stream.

Wayne township contained a population of 197 in 1830, 788 in 1840, 1,122 in 1850, 1,224 in 1860, 1,295 in 1870, 1,906 in 1880 and 1,124 in 1890. The postoffices are Ovid (formerly known as Beaver Dam), Katan (formerly known as Carter Hill) and Wheelock, in the northeast part of the township. A large portion of the mail matter for the township is handled through the Corry postoffice. Before Corry grew to importance, Beaver Dam and Columbus, Warren county, were the trading places of the township.

LAND AND STREAMS.

Generally speaking, Wayne is a hilly township, but it contains some handsome valleys along the South branch of French creek and Hare creek, and Scioto, Beaver Dam and Spencer runs. The hills attain an elevation of 200 to 400 feet above the French creek valley, and are cut by deep ravines especially in the southern portion, which, however, have generally sloping sides, admitting of easy cultivation. The summits of the ridges are irregular, but there is little waste land in the township. The character of the soil adapts it best for grazing, and butter-making and cattle-raising are the staple industries. The principal timber is beech, maple and hemlock, though considerable tracts of pine, oak and chestnut once existed in the southern part of the township. The price of farming land ranges from fifteen to sixty dollars per acre.

The streams are Brokenstraw creek, with its tributary, Hare creek; Bear creek, Francis run and Scioto run, branches of the latter; and Spencer run, Baskin run, Slaughter run, Beaver Dam run and Spring brook, tributaries of the South branch of French creek. The Brokenstraw heads in Clymer township, Chautauqua county, New York, runs through the northeast corner of Wayne township into Warren county, and joins the Allegheny river at Irvineton, after a course of fifty to sixty miles, only a small part of which is in Erie county. Hare creek (named after Michael Hare, the oldest man that ever lived in Erie county and one of the pioneers in the township) rises in French Creek township, Chautauqua county, New York, flows across the entire width of Wayne township, and empties into the Brokenstraw in Columbus township, Warren county, about three miles east of Corry. It runs through the latter city for a short distance, and has a length of about fifteen miles. Bear creek falls into Hare creek within the limits of Corry, and Scioto run north of that city. Each stream has a length of perhaps five miles. Francis run rises about three miles northwest of Corry, and empties into Bear creek within the city limits, after a course of about three miles. Spencer run heads near Carter Hill, Baskin run near the New York line, Slaughter run in the northwest corner of the township, and Beaver Dam run in the southeast part of Amity, all uniting with the South branch in Concord, the first named a little west of Corry, the second at Lovell's station, the third about a mile above Elgin, and the fourth within that borough. The length of each of these streams is from seven to nine miles. Spring brook is a sparkling stream formed by a number of springs that burst out of the hillsides at the State Fish Hatching establishment, a short distance west of Corry, near the line of Concord and Wayne. It unites with the South branch after a course of probably half a mile. Two or three large beaver dams existed in early days a mile or so north of Elgin, which gave name to Beaver Dam run.

VILLAGES, POST OFFICES, CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

Beaver Dam (known as Ovid postoffice) is situated near the extreme southeastern corner of the township, on the run of the same name, at the junction of the Erie and Warren with the Wattsburg and Spartansburg roads, one and a half miles north of Elgin, six west of Corry, twenty-six by common road southeast of Erie, and thirty-four by the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. The valley of Beaver Dam run at this point is broad and beautiful, making one of the finest stretches of country in Erie county. The village is supposed to owe its origin to John Bunker, who started a store and ashery at the cross-roads at an early day. This was followed by another store by Mr. Foote, and the place about 1840, boasted, in addition, two taverns, one kept by Mr. Crook and the other by Mr. Ellis. The stages between Erie and Warren and Jamestown ran through the village daily. The building of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., and the growth of Corry and Union, had the effect of drawing all of the travel and most of the trade from Beaver Dam; the taverns were abandoned, and only one store is left. The village consists at present, besides the store, of one blacksmith shop, a cheese factory (opened in the spring of 1866), two church buildings, and some twenty or twenty-five residences. The village cemetery contains some handsome monuments.

An Associated Reformed congregation was organized at Beaver Dam about 1820, but was soon merged into the Presbyterian congregation. The latter erected a building in 1830 on the cemetery site, which was superseded by a new one in 1867. The congregation broke up some years ago; the building was moved to Elgin and is now used by the Methodists.

The United Presbyterian congregation was started in 1859, and put up a building in 1872. This edifice was injured by lightning, was never repaired and is not now in use.

The Methodist Episcopal society was formally organized in 1838, though services of the denomination had been held since 1832. A church was erected in 1859, and the present building in 1872.

A short distance north of Beaver Dam is "The Wayne Valley Church of United Brethren," organized in 1830. Their building was erected the same year.

A sawmill is in operation about half a mile from the village.

The earliest inhabitants at Beaver Dam were Samuel Smith and William Gray. The latter subsequently removed to Waterford. In the old Abolition times, the village was an important station of the "underground railroad." Mrs. Elizabeth Smith died at the residence of her son-in-law, James D. Smith, in Beaver Dam, on the 6th of August, 1875, in the 99th year of her age, being one of the oldest women known to have lived within the county. She emigrated to this country from the north of Ireland with her father, John Wilson, and sister, in 1798, the party settling in what is now Union township. In 1799, she was married to William Smith, of Wayne, their wedding being the first in the county south of the Triangle. About 1816, they removed to Waterford, where Mr. Smith died in 1855, after which she made her home as above. Mrs. Smith was the mother of three sons and eight daughters.

A temperance society was formed at Beaver Dam as early as 1832. No drinking place has been maintained in Wayne township, except in 1840, when one of the hotels of the village received a license.

Carter Hill (Katan postoffice) consists of a schoolhouse, a M. E. church, a butter factory and several farm houses, in the northern central part of the township. It derives its name from Elijah Carter, who moved there from Greenfield when the country was still a wilderness. The butter factory was started many years ago as a cheese factory, and continued as such until the latter business proved unprofitable. The postoffice was known as Carter Hill until it was abandoned in 1883, and has only recently been revived, under the name given above. A Methodist Episcopal society has been in existence some sixty years. The church building was put up in the fall of 1883.

Hare creek, four miles north of Corry, consists of a public hall, a Christian church, a sawmill, a schoolhouse, and a few residences. The religious society was established before 1880, and dedicated its building the latter year. The Dutton graveyard is near the church.

The first school instruction in Wayne was given by Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, wife of the pioneer William Smith. She taught her own and a few of her neighbors' children for several years, commencing about 1808. A private school was held for a term or two about 1822, near Beaver Dam, and the earliest schoolhouse in the township was built at the latter place several years later.

RAILROADS, COMMON ROADS, ETC.

The only railroad is the Western New York and Pennsylvania, better known as the "Cross-cut," which runs wholly across the township from Corry to Brocton, N. Y.

The main common roads are the Erie, Waterford and Sugar Grove turnpike, which passes through Corry, Beaver Dam and Union; the Erie and Warren road, which runs through Carter Hill and Wattsburg; the Corry and French creek, N. Y., up Hare creek; and the Corry and Clymer, up Scioto creek.

The township owns two good bridges, one across the Brokenstraw, in the northeast, and one across Hare creek, just outside the city limits of Corry. All the rest are ordinary structures.

The graveyards not previously named are the old Smith, near the Spencer farm, and the Jewish cemetery of Corry, on the Corry road near the north line of the city. Most of the burials take place in the cemeteries at Corry and Beaver Dam.

PENNSYLVANIA FISH HATCHERY.

The most important establishment in the township is the Western Fish Hatchery of the State of Pennsylvania, on the Elgin road, in the valley of the South branch of French creek, about a mile west of Corry. At this point a number of springs burst out of the hillside, furnishing a regular supply of cold, pure and healthy water. Several thousand fish of various kinds and sizes may be seen at all times, swimming about in the little ponds and lakes. The eggs are hatched under the care of the superintendent, and when the young fish attain a proper size they are sent to different parts of the State and put in streams to which they are adapted. The premises consist of nine and a half acres of land, embracing most or all of the springs, a dwelling house, a complete modern hatchery, and various troughs, etc., specially adapted for the purpose.

The hatchery was started as a private enterprise, in the fall of 1873, by Seth Weeks, the noted fish culturist, who purchased the property. He built a house on the premises and moved into it in the spring of 1874. In 1875 a bill was passed by the Legislature, through the efforts of Hon. W. W. Brown, of Corry, to establish a Western Fish Hatchery. The State Commissioners were prompt to see the advantages of Mr. Week's site, and bought the property in 1876. Mr. Weeks was appointed Superintendent and remained in that position until January, 1885, when he was succeeded by William Buller, the present incumbent. The hatchery is justly regarded as one of the most eligible sites and practical establishments of the kind in the Union.

PREHISTORIC REMAINS.

A little north of east of the hatchery, on a slight hill, the early settlers found traces of one of those pre-historic mounds, reference to which has been made in other township sketches. It has been plowed down, and no sign of it is any longer apparent. About half a mile west, on the right hand side of the road from Corry, is another, the outlines of which can be readily followed. It consists of a circular embankment, with a trench on the outside, from which the dirt was evidently dug, and embraces about three acres, being something like a third larger than the easterly one.

EARLY SETTLERS.

William Smith, who emigrated from the North of Ireland, is generally understood to have been the first settler in the township, but this statement is denied by an old resident, who says the earliest white inhabitants were Messrs. Hare, Rihue and Call. The first mentioned of these was Michael Hare, who died in Waterford at the age of 115 years, 8 months and 22 days, and was buried in the cemetery at that place. He and his wife lived in a cabin on the east side of Hare creek, about a mile north of Corry. Hare, Rihue and Call left before the country was cleared up, the former making his home finally at Waterford. [See Waterford.] Call's location was on the farm owned by Amos Heath, and Rihue's where Mayor Stanford has his brickyard in Corry. During 1797, a man by the name of Prosser went in. Joseph Hall settled at Beaver Dam, in the same year, but afterward changed to Elgin. The settlers in 1798 were William and Samuel Smith and Daniel Findley; in 1800, William Carson and John Kincaide, with his five sons, several of whom were grown; in 1806, William Gray, who changed to Waterford; in 1817, Joseph Grant (a native of New London, Conn.), who moved to Wesleyville late in life; from 1820 to 1824, Daniel Yeager and Messrs. Perkins, Childs and Doud. The Messrs. Smith were followed at an early date by their brothers, James and Robert. Samuel located originally opposite the Perkins' place, James in the valley of the South branch, near the fish establishment, and Robert on the hill near the Abbey place. John Heath, father of Amos, purchased the Spencer place, in 1827 or 1828, when Amos was a boy of four or five. A Mr. Miller had previously lived on the farm and built a sawmill on the run farther up, which was the first in the township. Matthias Spencer moved to what is known as the Spencer place in March, 1831. He was born in East Haddam, Conn., changed from there to Columbus, Warren county, and then to Wayne township. In 1865, he went to Erie to live with his son, Dr. H. A. Spencer, where he remained until his death. Isaac Kennedy, father of D. C., settled on the farm where his son resided for many years, in 1834. Chauncey G. Rickerson, a native of Windham, Conn., moved into the township in 1835. Robert Osborne, from Beaver county, located on the Miller farm in 1839. D. W. Howard made his location in 1840, and Philander Miller about the same time. The township did not fill up rapidly until after 1830. John W. Smith, son of William, was the first white child born in the township, the year of his birth being 1800. Joseph Grant commenced in the valley of Beaver Dam run, near the United Brethren church, where his son, Benjamin, the famous Erie lawyer, was born in a log house.

PROMINENT MEN.

The citizens of Wayne township who have been honored by election to State and county offices are few in number, as will be seen by the following list: Director of the Poor, John G. Kincaide, 1876 to 1879. County Commissioner, L. M. Childs, 1865 to 1871. Assembly, Samuel E. Kincaide, in 1876 and 1878, for two years each time. Jury Commissioner, O. S. Follett, elected in 1894. Amos Heath, Dr. Osborne and D. W. Howard have been frequently nominated by the Democrats for county positions, and D. C. Kennedy has been prominent in political and grange circles. Four of the sons of Matthias Spencer became professional men, viz.: Two physicians, Dr. H. A. Spencer, of Erie, and Dr. E. V. Spencer, of Mt. Vernon, Ind.; and two attorneys, John W. Spencer, of Rising Sun, Ind., and Elijah M. Spencer, of Mt. Vernon, Ind. Both of the latter were members of the Indiana Legislature, and John W. was a Judge at the time of his death.

THE GREELEY FAMILY.

The most eminent name associated with the history of Wayne township is that of Horace Greeley, the great editor and politician. Zaccheus Greeley, the father of Horace, commenced life as a farmer on a small scale in Vermont. Becoming embarrassed, his farm was sold by the Sheriff, and he worked for a time as a laborer in New Hampshire. In the year 1825, having saved a small sum of money, he started to search out a home in the wilds of Pennsylvania, making his way to Wayne township, near the New York line, where his brothers, Benjamin and Leonard, had gone some two years before. He there purchased 200 acres of land, to which he afterward added 150 acres more. Returning to New Hampshire, he brought his family on in 1826, the party consisting, besides Mr. and Mrs. Greeley, of Barnes, their eldest son, and three daughters. Horace, who had apprenticed himself in a printing office in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., did not accompany the family, although pressed to do so. During the ensuing four years, he visited them twice in their wilderness home, walking most of the way, and remaining about a month each time. In 1830, he came on again, and after remaining awhile, found employment for a short period at Jamestown, and, later, in the Gazette office at Erie. Some time during the summer of 1831 he left Erie, called to see his parents in Wayne for a few days, and then started on foot for New York, where he arrived on the 17th of August, with exactly ten dollars in his pocket. Years after, when he had made a reputation through the New Yorker, he again paid a visit to the township, remaining for a brief period only. Zaccheus Greeley and Mary, his wife, both lived the balance of their years on the farm in Wayne and were buried near by. Mrs. Greeley's death occurred about 1854. The father died in 1807, at the age of 87. Horace Greeley was born on the 3d of February, 1811, in Amherst, Vt., and died in Pleasantville, N. Y., November 29, 1872. He was the Liberal and Democratic nominee for President in 1872. Barnes Greeley remained on the homestead farm, where he died on the 11th of December, 1894, at the age of 82 two. He had some of the traits of his distinguished brother, but lacked ambition and energy.

CHAPTER I.

FOUNDING OF THE TOWN—THE EARLY SETTLERS—POPULATION AT VARIOUS PERIODS.

—[See Chapters VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, General History of Erie County.]

THE act of April 8, 1792, for laying out the town of Presque Isle, as Erie was then known, read as follows:

“SECTION 1. Be it enacted, etc.:

That the Governor be and is hereby empowered to cause to be surveyed the tract reserved at or near Presque Isle by the act entitled, ‘An act for the sale of the vacant lands within this Commonwealth,’ passed the 3d day of April, 1792; and at the most eligible place within the said tract he shall cause to be laid out and surveyed 1,600 acres of land in town lots of not more than one-third of an acre each; and also 3,400 acres adjoining the same, in outlots, not less than five acres nor more than ten acres each. Provided always, That the Governor shall reserve out of the lots of the said town so much land as he shall deem necessary for public uses; also, so much land, within or out of the said town as may, in his opinion, be wanted by the United States for the purpose of erecting forts, magazines, arsenals and dock yards.

“SEC. 2. That the first 200 persons that shall actually inhabit and reside, on or before the 1st day of January next, within the said town, shall each and every one of them be entitled to one unappropriated town lot, to be ascertained by lottery, for which they shall respectively receive a deed, clear of all charges. Provided, That such persons respectively, or their respective representatives, or assignees, shall inhabit and reside in the said town for a term of three years, and also, within the said town build or cause to be built a house at least sixteen feet square, and containing at least one brick or stone chimney, on the town lots to be granted in pursuance of this act.

“SEC. 3. That the Governor is hereby authorized to sell 200 of the town lots, exclusive of those granted by the next preceding section, and the whole of the other outlots in such a manner as he shall think most to the advantage of the State, and make conveyance of the same; excepting, always, such as shall be made upon this condition: that the respective purchasers shall and do, within the term of three years, erect and build one house, at least sixteen feet square, and containing at least one brick or stone chimney, on each and every town lot by them purchased, and no deed of conveyance shall be granted by the Governor to any purchaser, nor, after the expiration of the said term of three years, shall the said sale be deemed or construed to vest any title, claim or demand in any purchaser, unless satisfactory proof be first given that a house has been erected or built on the town lots sold as aforesaid; that the streets, lanes, and alleys of the said town shall be common highways forever, and that, previous to the sale or sales of the said town lots and outlots, notice shall be given of the same in at least three of the newspapers of the State at least ten weeks previous to such sale or sales.”

In February, 1794, the State provided for a detachment of soldiers to protect the settlement of Presque Isle. Through the duplicity of the English, who still coveted the post, the Indians were stirred up into opposing the establishment of a garrison by the Americans. For prudential reasons, which are explained in the General History of the county, operations were for the time suspended. The victories of Wayne inspired such a wholesome terror among the Indians that it hastened the treaties of 1795, through which all opposition to the settlement of Presque Isle was swept away, and the title of Pennsylvania unreservedly acknowledged by the red men.

ANOTHER LAW ENACTED.

On the 18th of April, 1795, the General Assembly passed an act somewhat differing from that of 1792, and repealing the latter. The Governor was authorized to appoint two Commissioners, who were instructed to survey 1,600 acres of land for town lots, and 3,400 acres adjoining for outlots, "at or near Presque Isle, on Lake Erie," "the said lands "so surveyed to be respectively laid out into "town lots and outlots, in such manner and "with such streets, not more than 100 nor "less than sixty feet wide, and such lanes, "alleys and reservations for public uses as the "said Commissioners shall direct; but no "town lots shall contain more than one-third "of an acre, no outlots more than five acres, "nor shall the reservations for public uses exceed in the whole twenty acres; and the "town hereby directed to be laid out shall be "called 'Erie,' and all the streets, lanes and "alleys thereof, and the adjoining outlots "shall be and forever remain common highways." The Commissioners were authorized to sell one-third of said town lots and outlots to the highest bidders, the purchasers to erect on each town lot, within two years from the date of purchase, a house sixteen feet square, containing one stone or brick chimney. Half of the purchase money of each lot had to be paid within three months from the date of sale, and the balance within one year, together with lawful interest. No sale was to be valid, and no patent was to be issued, until these terms were complied with.

Reservations were to be made of sixty acres on the south bank of the harbor and near the entrance thereof, thirty acres on the peninsula at or near the entrance to the harbor, and one other tract of 100 acres on the peninsula, for the use of the United States in erecting forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, etc. It was further provided, "That if "the mill sites on the creek running near the "ruins of the old French fort should fall within "the cessions hereby made to the United States, "the same shall nevertheless be and hereby "are reserved for the use of this State, with "the right of erecting mills thereon, but no "buildings (mills excepted), shall be erected "within 600 yards of the center of any fort "which may be erected by the United States "on either of the lots ceded to them as aforesaid."

By an act passed February 19, 1800, that portion of the law of 1795 which made it obligatory for purchasers of lots to erect houses thereon before becoming bonafide owners, was repealed; and lots previously forfeited on account of non-compliance with said law were allowed to be pre-empted by their former purchasers at the original price, provided application was made within twelve months from the date of the statute. The leniency here adopted was continued by subsequent enactments, thus making it easy for the first settlers of Erie to become owners of real estate.

FIRST AMERICAN SETTLERS.

The first permanent American settlement effected on the site of Erie occurred in the spring of 1795, when Thomas Rees, who had been appointed Deputy Surveyor of the land district, pitched his tent near the mouth of Mill creek. The previous year he had done some surveying in this portion of the State, but, on account of Indian threats, the undertaking was abandoned for the time being. On the 31st of March, 1796, he was appointed by Governor Mifflin Justice of the Peace for the district consisting of "the township of Mead, in the county of Allegheny," which then embraced all of the territory now comprising Crawford and Erie counties. Mr. Rees and Wm. Wilson, of Greenfield, appointed on the same day, were the first Justices in Erie county, their term of office being "so long as he shall live and behave himself well."

Soon after the arrival of Mr. Rees, a detachment of Wayne's army, under the command of Capt. Russell Bissell, landed at Presque Isle, and began the erection of two block-houses on the high point east of Mill creek. The work was completed during 1795-96.

Gens. William Irvine and Andrew Elliott, the State Commissioners appointed to lay out the town, arrived in June, 1795, accompanied by a corps of surveyors, and escorted by a company of State troops, commanded by Capt. John Grubb. This latter gentleman located permanently in Erie, and, though subsequently living on a farm, may be called the second settler of the town.

On the last day of June or 1st of July, 1795, Col. Seth Reed, with his wife Hannah, and sons Manning and Charles J., dropped anchor in the harbor and landed on the peninsula, thinking it more secure from Indian attack than the main land. The family had come from Buffalo, in a sail boat owned and operated by James Talmadge. Col. Reed built a rude one-story log cabin, covered with bark, near the mouth of Mill creek, and, concluding that the settlement needed a public house, put up a sign as the "Presque Isle Hotel." This was the first building erected in Erie, and though insignificant in appearance, was provided "with plenty of good refreshments for all itinerants that chose to call." Mrs. Hannah Reed was the first white woman to locate at Erie, and as such her name deserves perpetuation as the pioneer of her sex. In September, 1795, Col. Reed's sons, Rufus S. and George W., came on, and with them Mrs. Thomas Rees and Mrs. J. Fairbanks. The following year the colonel erected a two-story log house on the southwest corner of Second and Parade streets, which he placed in charge of his son Rufus S., who kept a tavern and store in it until 1799, when it burned down. The next year, Rufus S. Reed rebuilt it, and for a number of years afterward carried on business at that place.

The only settlers of 1795, besides those mentioned, were James Baird and family, and George and John T. Moore. The Moores went back to the east, but returned in 1798 to remain permanently. Doubtless a number of persons came and went, but investigation has failed to find the names of any others who located permanently during that year.

HOW THE TOWN WAS LAID OUT.

The town was laid out in three sections, each about one mile square, and extending from the bay south to Twelfth street. The First section ran from Parade to Chestnut; the Second from Chestnut to Cranberry; and the Third from Cranberry to West street. The outlots extended south to Twenty-sixth street, east to East avenue, west to the western boundary of the almshouse farm, and north to the bay of Presque Isle, thus embracing the front of the harbor from its entrance to within a short distance of "The Head."

The streets running east and west were laid off twenty rods apart, with State street running north and south as the center of the first section; those west of State, and parallel with it, being named after trees, and those east of it after nationalities, excepting Parade, which was so called on account of starting from the old French fort and parade ground, Parade street, which is almost identical with the French road to Fort LeBœuf, was for years the only avenue leading into the town, except the Lake road, from the east side of the county. The streets running parallel with the bay were numbered from one to twelve, though First street was called Front, and has since been known by that title. At the center of each section, a plot of land was reserved for public uses. That in the First section, now Central Park, was long occupied by the court house and market house.

The town was incorporated as the borough of Erie in 1805, having previously formed a part of Mill Creek township for official purposes.

In 1832, the Third section, both in and outlots, was donated by the Commonwealth to the borough, divided into fifty acre lots and sold to the highest bidder, excepting 100 acres located in the southwest corner, which were reserved for an almshouse farm. The money obtained from this sale was to be used in building piers and wharves, and constructing a canal basin in the bay of Presque Isle.

EXTENSION OF THE TOWN LIMITS.

In 1834, the borough limits were extended into the bay 1,300 feet, and four years afterward the sale of one row of water lots in the Second section was authorized, to pay the expense of grading and improving the streets in said section. By the act of March 10, 1848, the borough limits were extended so as to embrace the territory bounded on the east by Ash, south by Eighteenth, and west by Liberty streets, the northern boundary being the north shore of the peninsula, "the jurisdiction of the corporate authorities being extended to the island of Presque Isle."

The borough was divided into the East and West wards in 1840, State street being the dividing line.

On the 14th of April, 1851, a city charter was granted. In 1858, the city was divided into four wards, and so remained for twelve years. Under the act of February 25, 1870, a third extension of the city limits occurred, taking in the borough of South Erie and other territory. Two more wards were erected at that time. Since then, no change has taken place in the corporate limits of the city.

By a city ordinance of March 18, 1869, it was declared that "the northern boundary of all water lots in the bay of Presque Isle or harbor of Erie, lying west of the canal basin, shall be a line drawn from the northwest corner of the canal basin pier westward, parallel to Second street, to the western boundary of said water lots." The same ordinance provided that "all the streets of the First and Second sections of Erie that cross Second street at right angles are extended into the bay at the northern boundary of said water lots."

CITY BOUNDARIES.

The city limits extend on the east to about 1,750 feet east of East avenue; on the west to the center of Cranberry street; on the south from Cranberry to a little east of Holland street, about 1,950 feet south of Twenty-sixth street; and from a little east of Holland street to the eastern city limits, about 2,300 feet south of Twenty-sixth street.

SALE OF TOWN LOTS.

In addition to Erie, Irvine and Ellicott laid out the towns of Franklin, Warren and Waterford—the latter in the summer of 1794. On returning to the east, they were appointed State agents, in conjunction with George Wilson, for the sale of lots in the towns named. The following is a copy of their advertisement, printed in 1796:

"Agreeably to instructions from His Excellency, Thomas Mifflin, Governor of this Commonwealth, we shall offer for sale the following town and outlots of Erie, Waterford, Franklin and Warren, at the time and places hereafter specified, viz.: The sale of that portion of town and outlots of the several towns to be disposed of in the city of Philadelphia will commence on Monday, the 25th day of July next. That portion of the town and outlots of the several towns to be disposed of at Carlisle will commence at that borough on Wednesday, the 3d of August next; and the sale of that portion of the town and outlots of the said towns to be disposed of at Pittsburg will commence at that borough on Monday, the 15th day of August next.

"WILLIAM IRVINE,
"ANDREW ELLICOTT,
"GEORGE WILSON, Agents."

In all, 169 inlots and thirty-three outlots in Erie were disposed of at Philadelphia, Carlisle and Pittsburg in 1796, from which $4,165.20, in principal and interest, were realized.

In 1815.

Lot 753, the site of St. Peter's Cathedral, to John Gray, for twenty dollars.

ALSO OF OUT-LOTS.

There is even a greater difference between the prices paid for out-lots when originally purchased and the value of the same ground to-day than there is in regard to the inlots. For instance, outlot No. 375, located between Peach and Sassafras and Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, now the site of the Union Depot, was bought by David McNair, March 1, 1801, for twenty dollars. Mr. McNair also purchased on the same date, outlot No. 376, bounded by Peach, Sassafras, Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, at the same price; and outlot 407, comprising the block lying between Twelfth and Fourteenth and State and Peach streets, for twenty-five dollars. On the 23d of November, 1805, William Wallace bought for twenty-five dollars, outlot No. 406, extending from Twelfth to Fourteenth, and from State to French streets. Joseph Kratz purchased outlot No. 540, which lies in the eastern part, between Ninth and Tenth streets, January 23, 1806, for twenty dollars.

THE EARLY ARRIVALS.

In 1796 Capt. Daniel Dobbins cast his fortune with the little hamlet, followed in 1798 by William Wallace, George Moore and John T. Moore, and in 1799, by Jonas Duncan and John Teel. From the latter year until 1815 the following persons became residents of the place: Col. Thomas Forster, John Gillespie, Thomas Hughes, Thomas Wilson, Robert Irwin, John Gray, Richard Clementt, Judah Colt, Capt. John Richards, John Wilson, John Cummins, Mary O'Neill, Robert Knox, Stephen Wolverton, Giles Sanford, William Lattimore, W. W. Reed, John Dickson, Capt. William Lee, David Cook, P. S. V. Hamot, Gen. John Kelso, Barnabas McCue, Thomas Wilkins, George Gossett, Basil Hoskinson, George Landon, Holmes Reed, Hugh Cunningham, William Lamberton, Archibald McSparren, James Duncan, George Leninger, Willard Cotton, Thomas Laird, Joseph Kratz, Mrs. Silverthorn, Robert L. Rice, Amos Fisk, Peter Grawotz, George Buehler, Thomas Stewart, John E. Lapsley, John Hay, Rufus Clough, David McNair, Ezekiel Dunning, John Woodside, John Miller, James McConkey, William Bell, John C. Wallace, Thomas H. Sill, Jacob Spang and Rev. Robert Reid. There may have been others, but their names are "lost 'mid the rubbish of forgotten things." Many of the pioneers had families, and the children are often better remembered than the parents, whose energies were spent in building up homes for those who bear their names.

GROWTH OF THE TOWN.

The earliest settlements, as before stated, were at the mouth of Mill creek. From there the place grew westward, up Second, Third and Fourth streets, to French, which was long the main business avenue. For many years the town was almost wholly north of Sixth street, and the territory south of that was looked upon as being in the country. John Teel, who made his home at Ninth and Peach streets, used to relate that it was a common occurrence for strangers to stop at his house and inquire how far it was to Erie.

The comparative growth of the town, now city, is shown by the following figures from the United States census reports:

CHAPTER II.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF ERIE—ITS STREAMS, STREETS, BUILDINGS, ETC.—LOCAL DIVISIONS—CITY FINANCES.

ERIE CITY is beautifully situated on the south shore of Presque Isle bay, which forms its harbor, eighty-eight miles west of Buffalo, and ninety-five miles east of Cleveland, in the midst of the very garden spot of the Lake Shore region. The country immediately adjacent to the city is a famous fruit, grape, grain and berry section, and the climate is as healthful as can be found anywhere in America. The bluff on which the city stands is from fifty to seventy feet above the average surface of the bay, and from there the land ascends by gentle degrees to a height of over 200 feet in the southern portion. The location is an ideal one for a city, affording as it does, the best of facilities for drainage and sewerage, combined with easy access to all parts of the country, splendid markets and rare opportunities for business and pleasure.

The area of the city is given in Hanlon's Manual as nearly seven square miles, and it contains more than 4,426½ acres.

By official measurements, the elevation of the bluff along the bay front, beginning at Parade street and running west on Second, is as follows: Parade street, nineteen feet; German, fifty-eight; Holland, fifty-nine; French, fifty-eight; State, fifty-six; Peach, fifty-nine; Sassafras, sixty-three; Myrtle, sixty-three; Chestnut, sixty-seven; Walnut, seventy; Cherry, fifty; Poplar, sixty-one; Liberty, seventy. Starting at Second street and running south on State, the following are the elevations: Second, fifty-six feet; Third, sixty-five; Fourth, seventy-one; Fifth, seventy-five; Sixth, seventy-seven; Seventh, eighty-two; Eighth, eighty-five; Ninth, eighty-eight; Tenth, ninety; Eleventh, ninety-three; Twelfth, ninety-five. Crossing over from State to Peach street and following the latter southward, Thirteenth street has an elevation above the bay of 100 feet; Fourteenth, 104; Sixteenth, 120; Eighteenth, 126; Twenty-first, 144; Twenty-second, 157; and Twenty-fifth, 194; while the bottom of the reservoir on Twenty-sixth street is 210 feet.

STREAMS AND RAVINES.

The site is divided into two distinct watersheds by the stream of Mill creek, which flows through a ravine of considerable depth, extending the entire width of the city from north to south. Other streams within the city limits are: Garrison run, Cascade run, Little Cascade run and the Lighthouse run. All of these empty into the bay from the high lands in the south, and have cut quite formidable ravines in the bluff at and for some distance above their mouths. Mill creek received its name because it furnished water for the first mill in the county; Garrison run because it passed through the military reservation or garrison grounds; the two Cascade runs from the falls in their course just before entering the bay, and Lighthouse run on account of passing near the land lighthouse. Lee's run and Ichabod run, once sparkling little streams, have been taken into the sewers—the latter into the one which follows the line of the old canal, between Peach and Sassafras streets, and the other at Seventeenth street. Ichabod run, which was a tributary of Mill creek, furnished motive power for a brewery, distillery and woolen factory.

STREETS AND AVENUES.

The city has nearly 106 miles of streets opened and in use, of which 19,498 miles had been paved up to August, 1895. The material used in paving, not including the work done in 1895, was as follows: Stone, 6,951 miles; sheet asphalt, 9,274 miles; vitrified brick, 2,409.

The names of the thoroughfares within and adjacent to the city limits, as given on the map at the water office, are as follows:

BUSINESS AND RESIDENCE STREETS AND PUBLIC PARKS.

State street, including North and South Park Places, is the main business thoroughfare of the city. The next in importance are Parade street, in the German section, Turnpike street, and Peach street, from Twelfth to Twenty-sixth. State and Parade, being wide, straight, nearly level streets, are admirably adapted for the purpose to which they have been placed. A large business is also done on north French, west Eighth, west Eighteenth and a part of Sassafras streets.

The finest residence streets are Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh and Twenty-first, running east and west, and Sassafras, Myrtle, Chestnut and Walnut extending north and south, on which are some as handsome homes as can be found in any city twice the size of Erie. Elegant residences, however, are to be found on a number of other streets; and several of these bid fair to compete in course of time with the present favorites. The homes of the middle and working classes are generally neat, handsome and comfortable. Indeed, it is a subject of remark, that an untidy or unprepossessing home is the exception rather than the rule in Erie, and that the working people are better housed than many of the rich in other communities. On most of the residence streets pretty little grass plots line the outer edge of the sidewalks, and there is scarcely a locality, apart from the business sections, that is not bountifully shaded.

The city contains four parks within its limits, proper, viz.: Central, at the intersection of Sixth and State streets; Cascade, at West Sixth and Liberty streets; Lakeside, on Front, between German and Sassafras streets; and the park surrounding the water-works. All of these will be treated of at more length in another chapter.

STREET NAMES CHANGED.

A number of the street names have been changed from what they were originally. These are as follows—the first being the present name and the last the original:

STREET NUMBERS.

The city ordinance relating to the numbering of streets, provides as follows:

"Beginning on Front street on the north, and extending to the city limits on the south, the numbers shall be placed on each separate dwelling and business place, and shall begin at Front street with No. 101, and all even numbers shall be placed on the west side, and all odd numbers on the east side of streets running north and south, and each square on a street shall include 100 numbers, so that the first number on each square shall be the beginning of hundreds corresponding to the number of the street on the north side of the square or block, and for the purpose of so numbering twenty and seven-twelfths feet shall be considered a lot on all the streets in said city.

"All buildings on streets running east and west shall be numbered beginning at State street and numbering east and west therefrom to the limits of the city; even numbers shall be placed on the north side and odd numbers on the south side of said street and shall begin at State street with No. one, and each square shall include 100 numbers."

STREET LIGHTING.

The streets and public grounds of the city of Erie were lighted on August 1, 1895, by 478 gas lamps at $21.50 each per annum, and by 276 electric arc lamps each of 2,000 candle power at $62.05 per annum. The electric lighting has been furnished from the beginning by the Edison company, Chas. H. Strong, president. The contract for 1895 requires the lights to be supplied from dusk to daylight every night in the year.

SEWERAGE.

The city is well sewered, and is steadily being improved in this respect. Up to 1894 more than thirty-six and one-half miles of sewers had been built, over ten miles of which were brick and the balance tile. This was increased in 1894-5 to the extent of 2.876 miles, making a total length of sewerage in August, 1895, of nearly thirty-nine and one-sixth miles. The cost of the sewerage has been $607,200.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, CHURCHES, ETC.

The main public edifices are the United States building, at State street and North Park row (used as the postoffice, collector's office, etc.); the old Custom House on State street near Fourth, the Court House, the City Hall and the County Jail.

Of church buildings there are three Baptist, six Lutheran, five Methodist Episcopal, four Presbyterian, one United Presbyterian, four Episcopalian, ten Roman Catholic and two more projected, one Universalist, one Church of Christ, (known as the Tabernacle), one Christian and one Hebrew synagogue. The Young Men's Christian Association have a good building at Tenth and Peach streets.

The structures used for charitable purposes are the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, the Home for the Friendless, the Hamot Hospital, St. Vincent's Hospital, St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum and the Old Folks' Home.

There are three academy buildings: Villa Maria, St. Benedict's and the Erie academy.

The principal places of amusement are the Opera House and Wonderland, but there are numerous halls for public entertainment. Among these are: Music Hall, Wayne, Gabel's, Penn, Liedertafel, Maennerchor, Walther's, Grand Army, Jarecki's and the East Erie.

The public school buildings are unusually large and well-planned, and the Central School building is one of the most imposing in the United States.

The city contains four very fine market houses, owned by private companies or corporations.

In the vicinity are numerous pleasure resorts and club houses, some of which have a wide reputation. The bay and lake, the well-paved and shaded streets, the splendid roads, the pure atmosphere, and the rich surrounding country, combine to make the city one of the most delightful residences that can be imagined. No person need leave Erie in order to secure health, comfort or pleasure.

RAILROADS, TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES, ETC.

With five important lines of railroad—the Lake Shore, the New York, Chicago and St. Louis, the Philadelphia and Erie, the Erie and Pittsburg, and the Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie—reaching east, west and south; and with the advantages of lake navigation seven to eight months in each year, Erie has transportation facilities that are almost unrivalled. These, and the convenience to the coal regions, render it a profitable point for manufacturers, and the city has become one of the leading manufacturing centers in the Union. The manufacturing interests are of such wide diversity and the business facilities so unusual that Erie is never affected by panics or hard times as places are that have to depend on a single industry or limited means of transportation.

The city is supplied with an abundance of pure water, has an excellent electric motor system, and is lighted with both gas and electricity. Natural gas is brought in from the mountain regions of Pennsylvania, and nearly every store, office and house has the benefit of this great convenience. It has live newspapers, an able bar, an earnest pulpit, and a social, intelligent and refined population. Take it all together, few places have the advantages that Erie possesses, and the person who cannot content himself within its limits will never be satisfied this side of Paradise.

LOCAL NAMES.

In early years the outside territory now included within the city or adjacent to it was divided into various small settlements, each of which had a local title that in some cases still adheres to it. The names which are most frequently heard now-a-days are Cloughsburg, Stumptown, New Jerusalem, or Jerusalem, Kingtown, Federal Hill, Marvintown, South Erie, Warfelltown and Weigelville.

Cloughsburg was named after Rufus Clough, who located on the southwest corner of Sixth and Parade streets, opened a blacksmith shop and subsequently a grocery. The house of Col. Charles M. Lynch was the residence of Maj. Clough during the latter part of his career.

Stumptown grew up during the last war with Great Britain, when troops were called to Erie in January, 1814. A number of cabins were built by them for quarters, extending from Peach street to the gully of Lee's run, and that part of Erie became known by the name above given.

New Jerusalem was christened by William Himrod, sr., who, in 1828-29, bought a tract of land west of Sassafras and north of Sixth street. At that time there were but two families living west of Lee's run and north of Sixth street, except upon the bank of the bay, where a few scattering houses had been erected. Mr. Himrod, who resided at French and Second streets, called his own home "Jericho," because, as he said, it was on the side of a hill, and, upon laying off his new purchase, he named it "New Jerusalem." A veteran lady of the city says, jokingly, that it received the title "because it was so hard to get to," there being a deep ravine—that of Lee's run—between the settlement and the rest of the town, with only one or two rickety bridges crossing the stream. One of the conditions made by Mr. Himrod in selling lots was that each purchaser should build and occupy a house, the result of which was that quite a village sprung up in a few years.

Kingtown was laid out by Alfred King, on some outlots owned by him a little southeast of the Garrison ground, now occupied by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home.

Federal Hill was the summit of the ridge at Peach and Twenty-sixth streets. The name was given to it by George Moore, on account of the number of "Federalists" who resided there. It was quite a settlement as early as the war of 1812, and several public houses and stores were located at that point. One of the hotels was the "American Eagle," from which it also came to be known as Eagle Village. The settlement was a great stopping place for travelers, being the terminus of the Waterford pike and Ridge road. It was long the voting place of Mill Creek township. Sixty years ago a mile of woods lay between Federal Hill and Erie, from the business part of which the village was nearly two miles distant. Among those who resided on "Federal Hill" were George Moore, Capt. John Justice, Ira Glazier, Dr. P. Faulkner, John Sweeney, Simeon Dunn and Dr. Plara Thayer.

Marvintown was the home of Elisha Marvin, who lived at the "Sennett place," near the junction of Parade street and the Wattsburg road, and owned most of the land around. Being the intersection of two roads, a small village sprang into existence, and in 1852-53 Mr. Marvin employed Samuel Low to lay out the land in lots. The lots were sold principally to Germans, and finally Mr. Marvin disposed of his home to Pardon Sennett.

South Erie grew up in consequence of the building of the Lake Shore R. R., which was finished to Erie January 10, 1852. The place was incorporated as a borough in 1866, and became a part of Erie by the extension of the city limits in 1870. The borough limits included the territory bounded by Eighteenth, Twenty-sixth, Parade and Cherry streets.

Warfelstown, a recent cognomen, embraces the farm of M. Warfel, sr., on the southeast side of the city, along the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. It was laid out into lots by Jacob Warfel, and has grown with surprising rapidity.

Weigelstown or Weigelville, as it is variously called, at the intersection of Brown's avenue with the Ridge road, was named after George Weigel, sr., who bought fifty acres in 1833, and laid out the Ridge road front into building lots. The hotel at Weigelstown was long a famous stopping place for parties coming to and driving from Erie. The village was then a mile and a half from the original borough limits.

CITY FINANCES.

The city debt December 31, 1883, was $1,114,584, of which $685,677.00 were incurred in constructing the water system. This had been reduced on August 1, 1895, to $841,700. The interest on the debt for the year 1882 was $81,872; that on the present debt is only $34,360, or less than half of what it was twelve and a half years ago. This reduction is due, in part, to the refunding of a large portion of the debt at a lower rate of interest.

Below are the tax rates in Erie for a period of twenty-seven years, beginning in 1869 and ending in 1895. The higher rates in 1860 and '61 are explained by the statement that valuations since that time have been presumably made on a cash basis:

The Mayor was first elected for one year, and served as president of the Select Council until 1860, when the law was changed so that each branch selected its own presiding officer. From 1879 to 1888, inclusive, the term of the Mayor was two years. By the law of May 23, 1889, under which the city is acting at present, his term was extended for three years, and he is ineligible for re-election to the next succeeding term. Up to 1888, the

CHAPTER IV.

WATER, FIRE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS.

THE earliest step towards securing a public supply of water for Erie was in 1835, when the borough was authorized by act of Assembly to borrow $50,000 for the purpose. The project was never carried out, and the town continued to depend for fire protection, as it had for a number of years, upon wells or tanks sunk at the intersections of the principal streets. In dry seasons men with carts sometimes supplied the citizens with water from the springs, streams, bay or lake, according to the use it was intended for.

In 1840 or '41 the city constructed its first "water works," if such they can be called. They consisted of lines of pump-logs laid in some of the most thickly built-up streets. The supply was taken from a large spring on the Reed farm, south of Eighteenth street and west of Parade. Though comparatively insignificant, these simple gravity works were very useful in their day. They gradually ceased to be used, and were totally discontinued when the supply of the Reed House was taken from the present works.

THE SECOND STEP FORWARD.

In 1853 a movement was made in Councils to supersede the pump-log system with something more in accordance with the demands of the people. After making a preliminary survey, the matter was allowed to rest until 1865, when, by an act of the Legislature, John W. Shannon and certain other citizens, were incorporated under the name and style of the "Erie Water and Gas Company." The company shortly afterward organized in accordance with the provisions of the general law of the State relative to the formation and organization of gas and water companies, approved March 11, 1857. By their charter the Erie Water and Gas Company were privileged to have a capital of $100,000, to build and maintain gas and water works, to increase the capital to an amount sufficient to cover the cost of erecting works, and to furnish and contract to furnish water and gas to individual persons, corporations, etc. The Mayor and Councils of the city of Erie and the Commissioners of Erie county were authorized to contract with said company for supplies of water and gas.

On the 16th of July, 1866, the City Councils appointed a committee to engage the services of a competent engineer "to examine and report plans for both sewerage and water." H. P. M. Birkinbine, of Philadelphia, was secured, and made a report February 23, 1867, which put the cost of erecting water works at $850,000, the supply to be taken from the bay. March 9, 1867, the Erie Gas Company, then, as now, supplying light to the city, secured an act supplementary to their charter, authorizing them, in conformity with the provisions of the general law of March 11, 1857, to introduce water wherever they were authorized to introduce gas. This was done as a sort of checkmate to the new company.

A CONTRACT AUTHORIZED.

Two days after this act had been approved by the Governor, the City Councils passed a resolution directing the Mayor to enter into a contract with the Erie Water and Gas Company to supply the city with water for fire purposes for twenty years, from July 1, 1868, or as soon thereafter as the works could be completed, provided it should not be later than two years from the date of said contract; if not completed within that period the contract to be null and void. By this contract it was to be stipulated that the city should pay a yearly rental of $9,000 for fifty fire plugs, and the contract was to be further subject to the following conditions, viz.: that the said water and gas company should commence building within one year from the date of contract; and that, if within one year from the date thereof, the city should begin the construction of water works of sufficient capacity to supply the wants of the community, said contract should be annulled. The city was to have the right at any time within five years to purchase the works of the company on certain specified terms. The contract thus proposed was duly entered into, but was never carried out.

DIFFERENCES OF OPINION.

The scheme of taking water from the bay was strongly opposed by a large number of citizens, who advocated a resort to the springs on the ridge south of Erie, and other streams rising on the same ridge or near it, or to Mill creek, or to the head waters of French creek, or to Lake Pleasant. It was argued that the water of the bay, on account of its liability to contamination from the inflow of sewers and of the canal, then in operation, was not fit, or at least not likely long to remain fit, for use for drinking and culinary purposes, and it was further urged, as a great objection to the plan, that the cost of pumping would be large and continuous.

The other side contended that there were no springs of sufficient size to give an adequate supply; that the nearby streams were no purer, or would not be for any length of time, than the bay water; that Lake Pleasant was a small body, which would be exhausted as the city grew in size, and besides, would require a pumping station, the same as if the supply were taken from the bay; and that the pumpage from the bay would cost no more in the long run than would the dams, reservoirs, etc., which it would be necessary to construct in order to bring in and render available by gravity, at a head sufficient to serve all purposes, the water of the various sources named.

The strife about these, and questions of paving, sewerage, etc., was carried on with considerable feeling, and several public meetings were held to discuss the points in dispute. The Mayor's election of 1867, when Orange Noble was chosen, was made to turn mainly upon this issue. It resulted in the triumph of the party in favor of immediate and extensive city improvement.

NEW LEGISLATION SECURED.

Strengthened by the verdict of the election, the friends of the present system of water works immediately applied to the Legislature for an act authorizing their construction. The act of April 4th, 1867, followed. It is entitled "A further supplement to the charter of the city of Erie, to provide for the appointment of Water Commissioners, and to define their powers and duties." This act made it the duty of the Judge of the Court of Common Pleas to appoint three persons as Commissioners of Water Works—one to serve one year, one two years, and one three years—and one to be named annually thereafter at the May term of Court. The first appointees were William L. Scott, Henry Rawle and William W. Reed. On June 29, 1867, the Board was permanently organized by the election of William W. Reed as President, and the appointment of William Brewster as Secretary. Mr. Birkinbine was selected as the engineer to plan and superintend the construction of the works. After examining the plans used in several cities, the Commissioners adopted that in operation in Detroit, Mich., but in September it was abandoned for the present system.

WORK BEGUN.

The location of the works at the foot of Chestnut street was agreed upon in November, and in the same month a contract for a pair of "Cornish Bull" engines was made with the West Engine Company, of Norristown, Pa. In December the contract for the stand-pipe was awarded to the Erie City Iron Works, and early in 1868 contracts were let for the buildings, including the stand-pipe tower, to John M. Kuhn, and for the crib work of the inlet or conduit from the bay, to James Dunlap. The excavation for the foundation was commenced April 7, 1868, and from that time the work of construction made steady and rapid progress. The raising of the iron stand-pipe, a straight wrought-iron tube five feet in diameter and 217 feet high, was a feat worthy of special record. It was accomplished in a way suggested by George Selden, of the Erie City Iron Works, by the use of heavy blocks and tackle rigged on a derrick. The top of the pipe was first raised a short distance and stayed. The next lower section was then put on, and so, section by section, until the full height of the pipe was reached. Around this pipe the brick tower was afterward built. It rests on a very heavy foundation of stone, octagonal in shape, which extends with tapering sides to a height of thirty-one feet above the level of the lake. Its base area is a circle of twenty-four feet. Forty-five feet above the top of this foundation—the intervening distance being built of brick—is a belt course of stone five feet high, and from thence the stand-pipe is a circle, inside of which is a spiral staircase to the top of the platform, which is fourteen feet in diameter, enclosed by a substantial iron railing for the safety of visitors. The tower is lighted by nine windows. It is claimed that the stand-pipe is the highest for its purpose in the world. By additions made since the original stand-pipe was erected, its height above the zero level of the bay is nearly 260 feet.

A RESERVOIR ASKED FOR.

In 1870 the Commissioners called the attention of the City Councils to the immediate necessity of purchasing a site for a reservoir. This recommendation resulted the next year in the purchase of about seven acres of land from the Cochran estate, on the south side of Twenty-sixth street, between Chestnut and Cherry. The work was completed in 1874. The bottom of the reservoir is 210 feet above the surface of the bay; the height of its sides is twenty-eight feet perpendicular, and it holds about 84,000,000 gallons, or enough for six days' supply to the city, under average conditions, with the present population. The water is forced to the reservoir from the pumping station through two pipes, one twenty inches and the other thirty inches in diameter.

THE OLD ENGINES AND THE NEW.

The first engines purchased—two in number—were of the kind known as the "Cornish Bull Engine," originally designed by the celebrated inventor, James Watt. Their pumping capacity is, single, 2,500,000 gallons per day; double, 4,000,000.

In 1885 the Commissioners became convinced that the limit of safety in the matter of water supply had been almost reached, and that an additional pump must be provided. The following year a contract was made with the Holly Manufacturing Company, of Lockport, N. Y., for a Gaskill engine of 5,000,000 gallons capacity per diem. The contract price was $24,850 for engine and foundation. The work of building a new engine house and placing the new pumping engine in position was completed early in 1887, and the machine accepted June 11 of the same year. The engine is one of the most wonderful in existence, having performed a duty that has seldom or never been surpassed.

In 1892, the demands upon the works requiring more pumping capacity, the Commissioners contracted for a Worthington horizontal compound condensing high duty engine, of 12,000,000 gallons capacity, the price, set in place, to be $46,300. An additional engine house, to accommodate the new engine, was built in 1893, and the engine itself was accepted January 6, 1894.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The original intake pipe extended but a short distance into the bay. In the fall and winter of 1895 a new and larger pipe was laid to deep water in the bay, with the ultimate purpose of carrying it through the peninsula into the open lake. It is made of wrought iron and laid in a trench, dug by steam dredges, in the bottom of the bay. The size of the pipe is sixty inches interior diameter, and its length will be 8,200 feet, to twenty-three feet of water in Big Bend.

The improvement of the grounds around the works, resulting in a beautiful little park, was begun in 1883, under Commissioners Liebel, Sherwin and Whitman.

The cost of constructing the works, up to December 31, 1894, inclusive of street piping, fire hydrants, house connections, etc., was $1,311,781, of which $685,677, in bonds, were advanced by the city, which were subject, when sold, to a considerable discount. The balance of the cost has been paid from the net earnings of the works.

The gallons of water pumped each year were 384,062,415 in 1873; 815,939,685 in 1883; and 1,816,596,518 in 1894.

The receipts from water rents were $25,500 in 1873; $48,269 in 1883; and $111,822 in 1894—the latter sum being collected, with slight changes, under the rules and regulations adopted by the Board in 1885.

The length of water mains in the streets of the city was a little over 89 miles in 1894, and the number of fire hydrants set in place 479.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The earliest movement of which there is any record to secure fire protection in Erie was on February 22, 1826, when the Active Fire Company was organized. Its roll of membership included nearly all the grown male residents of the borough. R. S. Reed was president and chief engineer; Daniel Dobbins, second engineer; E. D. Gunnison, secretary, and John Riddell, treasurer. The company was first furnished with buckets, but subsequently the town purchased a small fire engine, which did service for some years. Its supply of water was taken from wells and tanks sunk at the street intersections.

Other companies of later date were as follow: Red Jacket Fire Company No. 1, organized in 1837; Perry and Eagle Fire Companies, in 1839; Mechanics, No. 3, in 1844; Vulcan, in 1848; Phenix Hook and Ladder Company, in 1852; Parade Street Company, in 1861.

The first city fire organization with general officers was formed in 1851, but was not very effective. As the population increased and fires became more numerous, the people grew clamorous for a more efficient fire organization. In 1861 the steamer "Keystone," a third-class Amoskeag, was purchased and used for a period of twenty years when it was sold to parties in Conneaut, Ohio. Some time afterward the steamer "McLane," named after Erie's gallant soldier-citizen, Col. John W. McLane, was procured. This was ultimately sold to the Silsby Manufacturing Company, of Seneca Falls, N. Y., in part payment for the steamer "D. T. Jones," of that make.

THE PAID DEPARTMENT.

The fire apparatus of the city was operated under a volunteer system until March, 1871, when the latter was replaced by a paid department, which has been growing in efficiency ever since. Under the system then adopted, it has increased its facilities until it embraced the following apparatus in 1895:

STEAMERS.

No. 1.—Style, New American; located on Fifth street, between State and French. Accepted October 12, 1894.

No. 2.—Amoskeag; located on Parade street, between Eleventh and Twelfth. Accepted September, 1893.

No. 3.—Silsby; located on Peach street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth. Accepted June 2, 1882.

No. 7.—LaFrance; located at the southwest corner of Twenty-sixth and Peach streets. Accepted January 12th, 1891.

Two steamers in reserve—one a remodeled Silsby (the old D. T. Jones), accepted February 1, 1894, and the other a Manning, accepted April 19, 1895, are located temporarily on Nineteenth street, between Myrtle and Chestnut.

HOSE WAGONS.

One located on Fifth street, between State and French.

One located on Parade street, between Eleventh and Twelfth.

One located on Peach street, between Twentieth and Twenty-first.

One located on Nineteenth street, between Myrtle and Chestnut.

One at the northwest corner of Fifth and Chestnut.

One at the southwest corner of Twenty-sixth and Peach.

HOSE REEL.

One located on Peach street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth.

HOOK AND LADDER TRUCK.

One located on Peach, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets.

CHEMICAL ENGINE.

One of Holloway's make, located on Peach street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth.

Two six gallon Babcock fire extinguishers and a twenty-five-foot splice ladder have been placed on each of the hose wagons, and an extinguisher of the same size on the hose reel.

ENGINE HOUSES.

The department owns six brick buildings, the locations of which are sufficiently indicated above. The house on Peach, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, is the department headquarters. The first floor in each building is used for the apparatus, and the second for dormitories, etc. The rooms are neatly furnished with comfortable beds; also with tables, chairs and other necessary articles. The men sleep in the houses and are ready at any moment for an emergency. When an alarm of fire is sounded the firemen do not wait to reach the stairs, but spring to a man-hole in the second floor, and, grasping an iron rod, slide to the ground floor. The poles of the steamers, etc., are elevated with the harness attached. The intelligent horses are so well trained that they rush to their places under the harness before the cart or engine, and by the time the driver reaches the floor they are in position. The touch of a spring fastens the harness and throws the door wide open at the same time, and in less than twenty seconds they are on their way to the fire at full speed.

The several engine houses were built as follows: No. 1 about 1862 (remodeled in 1870); No. 2 in 1876; No. 3 in 1873; No. 4 in 1872; No. 5 in 1870; No. 6 in 1881; No. 7 in 1890.

FORCE EMPLOYED, ETC.

The department as now organized is composed of sixty-five officers and men, thirty-two being uniformed and regular members, and thirty-three minute or call men. The force is made up as follows:

One chief, salary.....	$1,300
One assistant chief.....	750
Four steamer engineers, each.....	900
Four steamer stokers, each.....	250
Nine captains, each.....	720
Thirteen drivers, each.....	720
One extra man.....	720
Three regular men (chemical engine) each.....	720
Twenty-nine minute men or call men, each.....	200

The salary list for 1895 amounted to $29,730, and the total expenses of the department for the year were expected to be about $35,000. The department has thirty-five horses and 12,600 feet of two and one-half inch cotton-jacket, rubber-lined hose in fair condition.

FIRES AND INCENDIARIES.

As an illustration of the need of an efficient fire system, it may be stated that in 1894 alone there were 108 fire alarms, and that the loss by conflagration within the city limits was $63,728.18. That the damage would have been much greater had it not been for the prompt and skillful efforts made by the firemen, no one will question who knows the workings of the department.

The city has been troubled on several occasions by the malignant or mischievous acts of incendiaries. One of these periods was in the spring and summer of 1870. Fire after fire occurred, and a general reign of terror prevailed. A large reward for the detection of the incendiaries was finally offered, which led to the arrest and conviction of several members of the volunteer department, who were sent to the penitentiary. It turned out that the fires were started in order that the company to which the men belonged might have the glory of being first upon the scene.

Another run of incendiary fires in 1888 led to the offering of a reward which was never claimed. Still another occurred in September, 1894, which caused the mayor to appoint "twenty special officers to patrol the city at night, and engage the services of two detectives from abroad. The extra men were on duty about two weeks, and the expense entailed amounted to over $900." The summer of 1895 was marked by an unusual number of fires, principally barns and unoccupied buildings, and there is little question but that they were caused by the torch of the incendiary.

FIRE ALARM SYSTEM.

A fire alarm system was introduced in March, 1879. This did not prove satisfactory, and the Gamewell system, replaced it in the fall of 1886. The latter is still in use. The numbers of the boxes on July 1, 1895, ran from three to ninety-one.

BOARD OF FIRE COMMISSIONERS.

The affairs of the Fire Department were managed by the Mayor and Councils until April 7, 1884, when they were placed in charge of a Board of Fire Commissioners, created by city ordinance:

The members of the Board are appointed by the Mayor and Select Council for terms of three years, the term of office of one member expiring annually on the first Monday of April. The Clerk of the Common Council is ex-officio Secretary of the Board of Fire Commissioners. The names of the members of the Board of Fire Commissioners from its organization in 1884 to 1895 inclusive, are as follows, the first named for each year being the Chairman:

1884—J. R. Sherwood, W. W. Pierce, Otto Germer.

1885—W. W. Pierce, Otto Germer, J. R. Sherwood.

1886—Otto Germer, Charles Jarecki, J. R. Sherwood.

A. H. Conkey was Assistant Chief for many years. The present Assistant is M. J. Duerner.

FIRE LIMITS.

The fire district is embraced within the limits described below, inside of which no building is permitted to be erected or placed, except such as are constructed of brick, stone, iron or other incombustible material. Veneered buildings within this district are permitted to be erected only for dwelling house purposes:

"State street, from Front street to Seventeenth street; Peach street, from Front to Twenty-first street; French street, from Second to Twelfth street; Sassafras street, from Fifth to Twelfth street; Second and Third street, from French to Peach street; north side of Fourth street, from French to Sassafras street; south side of Fourth street, from French to a point 165 feet east of Sassafras street; north side of Fifth street, from French to Sassafras street; Sixth street, from Holland to Chestnut street; Eighth street, from a point 165 feet west of Holland to Sassafras street; Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh and Twelfth street, from French to Sassafras street; North and South Park row and Turnpike street, and extending back from said streets 165 feet, except on Peach between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, where it extends westwardly from said street 330 feet."

POLICE DEPARTMENT.

Although a Police Department has been kept up since 1855, it did not assume much consequence until the outbreak of the last war, when the number of rough characters who flocked to the city called for increased protection to the general public. Prior to that period the slight amount of police duty that was required was mainly done by the constables and specials, the former of whom were quite formidable officers in their day. The first man to bring "order out of chaos" was Thomas Crowley, a giant of a man, appointed Chief in 1863, whose very appearance was enough to strike terror to evil doers. The police force is named by the Mayor, with the consent of Select Council, and consisted in 1895, of one Chief, at a salary of $1,000 per year, one Captain at $840, and twenty-eight patrolmen, each of whom receive $720. During the year 1894, 1,775 arrests were made, 826 of which were commonwealth, and the balance so called city cases, a large share of which were for vagrancy. "An average of twenty tramps are lodged nightly at the police station, none being refused lodging, as it is thought better to have them under lock and key than roaming the streets. The amount of fines and costs collected in city cases during 1894 was $1,544."

The patrol wagon was introduced in the spring of 1891, and the Gamewell police call system in the fall of the same year.

CHIEFS AND CAPTAINS OF POLICE.

Below is a list of the Chiefs of Police:

1855—S. L. Foster.

1856-'58—Willard Braley.

CHAPTER V.

THE PENINSULA, BAY, HARBOR, DOCKS, LAKE TRADE, FISH AND FISHING INTERESTS, PLEASURE BOATS, ETC.—[See Chapters VI and XVI, General History of Erie County.]

THE Peninsula, named by the French Presque Isle, or "nearly an island," is a low, sand formation of about six miles long, varying in width from 300 feet "at the neck, which is nearly two miles long and joins the body of the peninsula to the mainland at its western end, to one and one-half miles at its widest part." Inside of this and between it and the mainland, is the bay of Presque Isle, forming the harbor of Erie, a body of water "about four and one-half miles in length by one and one-half miles in width, affording a land-locked anchorage area of about one and one-half by two miles, with eighteen to twenty-eight feet of water." The harbor thus created by nature is probably the finest on the entire chain of lakes. It is entirely land-locked, protected from the heaviest gales, and has the best character of bottom for anchorage.

As the safety and welfare of the harbor depend upon the maintenance of the Peninsula, much money has been expended by the Government in closing breaches and protecting it from heavy seas. No one has a right to live on it, save the watchman, the keepers of the light-houses and the crew of the life-saving station. It is covered with a dense growth of timber, shrubs and vines, which are not allowed to be cut down, and is penetrated in every direction by small lakes or ponds connected with the bay by channels usually navigable for small boats.

In 1833, when the Peninsula was under the jurisdiction of the State, and incidentally of the Erie authorities, R. S. Reed was appointed Superintendent for five years, and a fine of $500, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, was fixed as the penalty for cutting timber or setting fire to the shrubbery. In 1835, the borough resolved to proceed against any one who might erect buildings upon it. The Legislature passed an act, in 1841, imposing a fine of not less than ten dollars, nor more than twenty-five dollars, on any person who should gather cranberries on the peninsula between July and October. The 1st of October was "cranberry day," a great event in olden times. Large parties would cross the bay the night before and remain until morning. The marshes produced cranberries to a larger extent than at present.

HISTORICAL ITEMS.

The ruins of a large brick house or fort, erected near the east end of the peninsula, long prior to American occupation, were still to be seen in 1795. In 1813 a block-house was built at Crystal Point, just west of Misery Bay, to defend the harbor entrance. This bay was so named by Lieut. Holdup, in 1814, on account of the prevailing gloomy weather and the comfortless condition of the vessels anchored in it at that time. Two of Perry's ships, the Lawrence and Niagara, were sunk in its waters—the latter remaining there, and the former having been raised in 1876, and removed to Philadelphia, to be exhibited at the Centennial. It is said that in 1821 the peninsula was covered with timber, from the mainland, at the head, to its southeastern point.

PROTECTING THE PENINSULA.

The first breach recorded in the peninsula appears to have taken place near "The Head" during the winter of 1828-29. Its extent is not reported, but the entire appropriation of $7,300 was used in closing it. In the winter of 1832-33, another breach occurred at the same point, and during the summer of 1833 Lieut. Col. J. G. Totten, by direction of the chief of engineers, examined the condition of affairs. He submitted an elaborate report, in which he suggested the possibility of maintaining entrances at both ends of the harbor, but recommended that the effect of the breach should be studied for a year or two before any complete plan was decided upon.

In 1835, Lieut. T. S. Brown submitted plans for an entrance at the west end of Presque Isle Bay through the peninsula. The breach which had commenced in 1832-33 had greatly widened, so that where trees thickly stood when work began in 1824, there was in 1835 an opening nearly one mile wide and daily increasing, so that the whole peninsula was threatened. Lieutenant Brown's plan provided for partially closing the breach by crib-work, but left a channel 400 feet wide, so that vessels might enter or depart from either end of the bay. In 1836, work was commenced upon the plan of Lieutenant Brown; 420 feet of crib-work break-water was completed, strengthened by piling and partially filled with stone; barracks were erected for workmen, machinery purchased, and arrangements made for a vigorous prosecution of the work. Work was continued in 1837, 1,920 feet of crib-work being completed, making in all 2,340 feet. The progress thus far in partially closing the breach was reported as very satisfactory.

In 1838, under Capt. Williams, of the Topographical Engineers, 1,035 linear feet of crib-work was built, 570 feet being north of the proposed new channel piers and 465 feet south of them. In 1839, work was continued; the break-water on the south side of the proposed new channel was prolonged 600 feet, and 150 feet of the work built in 1838 was strengthened; 300 feet of crib-work was placed in position on the low ground at the northeast end of the work, north of the proposed new entrance, to prevent the lake from cutting through at that point.

No appropriations were made nor work done during the years 1840, 1841, 1842, 1843. In 1841, an official report stated that the lake was making rapid encroachments upon the peninsula north of the works and threatened the destruction of the harbor. The proposed channel for vessels at the west end of the bay seems by this date to have been abandoned. During the time the channel was open a number of vessels passed through it. Among these, as shown by official records, were the steamer Ohio, drawing about seven and one-half feet of water, on July 3, 1831, and the brig Virginia, drawing some five and one-half feet of water, in 1833 or '34. Capt. John Fleeharty, who is good authority on lake matters, says he saw the revenue cutter Erie, which drew fully five feet of water, go through the channel about 1838 or '39.

FURTHER OPERATIONS.

In 1844, the gap in the peninsula had been reduced to a width of 3,000 feet, with a depth of from five to six feet. The erosion in the vicinity of the barracks built in 1836 threatened their destruction, and 470 linear feet of crib-work were built for their protection. Nothing further was done at this locality until 1852. An examination made at that time by Maj. William Turnbull of the Topographical Engineers, showed that the breach in the peninsula still existed, and that the crib-work protection built in previous years had been almost destroyed. In 1853 and 1854, efforts were made to prevent further erosion by protecting the shore with brush and stone. Operations were continued during 1855-56, with such success that there were strong prospects of restoring the original water line.

In September, 1857, Maj. J. D. Graham reported the suspension of work through lack of funds, and nothing further was done until 1864, in which year Col. T. J. Cram was assigned to the charge of the harbor. His report stated that the breach at the west end of the harbor was entirely closed, nature having completed the work during the interval of seven years of suspended labor, although about 500 feet of the peninsula was so low that high seas broke clear across it. This weak spot was strengthened in 1865, but a breach occurred during a heavy gale in November, 1874. This was soon closed, under the superintendence of Colonel Blunt, the officer then in charge, by what he termed "a bulk-head protection," constructed of piles and plank, the experiment of planting young trees on the neck of the peninsula resorted to in 1871-72 having entirely failed, nearly all of them being destroyed by the heavy winter gales. Since that time Colonel Blunt's mode of protection, together with an abatis of brush and stones, has been generally followed, but it has taken constant vigilance to keep the work in repair. There are two places where the neck of the peninsula is quite narrow and the crest only a few feet above the level of the lake, and where at times of very high seas, the water of the lake rolls across into the bay.

DAMAGE AND WORK DONE IN RECENT YEARS.

The winter of 1881-82 was an open one, and the beach was deprived of its usual revetment of heavy ice. A number of furious gales occurred during the fall and winter, and upon the opening of the season of 1882 the old bulkheads were found to be seriously damaged, and the beach to have suffered more or less from the heavy seas. The water of Lake Erie was unusually high during the spring of 1882, and on March 21, the level of the lake was the highest recorded at Erie for a number of years. A strong northwest gale was blowing at the time, and the heavy seas rolled clear across the lowest portion of the peninsula into the bay. The erosion at the time was still not sufficient to excite apprehension of immediate danger, but some steps were absolutely necessary for protection during the coming fall and winter. The engineer in charge submitted a project for the protection of the beach line with piles and plank, but afterward amended it upon the recommendation of the local engineer, Capt. Adams, and concluded to drive short intermediate piles between the old piles still standing, which formed a portion of the bulkhead protection.

A severe westerly storm on October 28-29, 1892, caused seas to wash over the neck from the lake into the bay. Gullies from two to ten feet wide and one to two feet deep were cut through the sand on the crest of the neck formation, and a few small trees and bushes uprooted. The gullies were, however, soon filled up by drifting sand and the neck practically restored to its normal condition. The remaining sheet piling and walings of the shore protection along the neck were carried away. Another westerly storm, on August 28, 1893, did some damage, which was soon restored by the drifting of the sand.

NO MATERIAL CHANGE IN GENERAL FEATURES.

The earliest chart in possession of the government is that of Maj. Anderson, made in 1819, which shows that the peninsula then occupied about the same general location and direction that it does at the present time. A comparison of Maj. Anderson's map with

Maj. McFarland's map of 1878 indicates that for about three miles from Massasauga Point the outer shore line has receded some 1,500 feet. Some errors are noticed in the map of 1819, however, and it may not be entirely reliable. A comparison of Lieut. Woodruff's map of 1839 with McFarland's map of 1878 shows a similar retrograde movement of the shore line, while that of the lake survey map of 1865 with McFarland's map of 1878 and Maj. Wilson's map of 1879 shows little or no variation in the position of the outer shore line. These maps seem to prove that from 1819 to 1865 there was a general recession of the outer shore line, while from 1865 to 1895 there has been but little change. A comparison of Woodruff's map of 1839 with McFarland's of 1878 shows that the mass of this part of the peninsula has materially increased during the interval of time between these surveys, for the distance from the twelve-foot or fifteen-foot curve outside the peninsula to the curve of corresponding depth inside was in 1878 about double what it was in 1839, while no very great change appears to have taken place in that part of the neck which lies above the water level. This increase in width appears to have come chiefly from the shoaling of the water inside the peninsula, but, from whatever cause it may arise, it indicates that the danger of the formation of a breach at this point has not increased, but has rather decreased in the last forty years.

REPORTS OF THE GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

The following are extracts from the reports of the government engineers for 1893 and '94:

"The preservation of the peninsula is of vital importance to Erie harbor, and it is for the purpose of preserving the harbor that the protection of the weak parts of the peninsula formation has been deemed necessary. The weak portion is the long narrow neck at the western end. The object for which all the works of protection have been constructed is the prevention of a breach through this narrow neck. This danger exists during severe storms from the westward.

"Former attempts to propagate a growth of trees on the barren neck of the peninsula did not prove satisfactory. In order to obtain some knowledge of the feasibility of tree-planting, a lot of seventy small willow and cottonwood trees and cuttings were set out early in May, 1893, some being planted in the sand soil, with an enrichment of vegetable mold, and others planted directly in the sand, without enrichment. At the close of the fiscal year the cuttings were all dead and the small trees showed little promise of living. The experiment does not necessarily prove that tree propagation is not feasible. It does prove, however, that cuttings will not readily grow and that planting should be done much earlier in the spring.

"In a report, made in 1885, it was recommended that the neck of the peninsula be protected by a breakwater, and the movement of sand around the eastern end of the peninsula, which threatens to close the harbor entrance, be arrested by the construction of jetties perpendicular to the shore of the peninsula, at an estimated cost of $173,044.50.

"Work under this project was in progress until October, 1889, when it was abandoned, it having been found that the structures built would not stand against the violence of the storms. No further work is at present (1894) contemplated, but the sum of $20,000 has been reserved from the appropriation for the improvement of Erie Harbor, to be used, in case of necessity, in closing any breach which may occur."

Capt. James Hunter, appointed by the U. S. authorities, has been custodian of the peninsula since 1886.

THE TITLE TO THE PENINSULA.

In the fall of 1895, a proposition to use the peninsula for railroad and manufacturing purposes led to some discussion over its control and ownership. The question was submitted by the editor of the Evening News to Judge Galbraith, who answered in the following clear and conclusive letter:

ERIE, Nov. 19, 1895.

"Answering your question as to the ownership of the peninsula of Presque Isle, I find, on a careful examination of the various acts of Assembly and other records, that while the right of occupancy and control is vested in the government of the United States, the title and actual ownership remain in the State of Pennsylvania.

"On February 4, 1869, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act 'supplementary to the act incorporating the Marine Hospital at Erie,' which, after a preamble reciting that 'the Councils of the city of Erie have so neglected the management and supervision of the peninsula, which forms the northern boundary of the harbor of Erie, as to prevent any adequate revenue arising therefrom, therefore, be it enacted, etc.' That section 14 of the act of April 2, 1868, entitled 'A further supplement to an act to incorporate the city of Erie,' be so amended as to place the supervision and control of the said peninsula in the power of the Board of Directors of the Marine Hospital of Pennsylvania, * * * * and the said Board of Directors are hereby empowered to exercise such supervision, disposition and control of same by leasing, or otherwise, as to them shall be deemed for the best interest of said hospital.'

"In 1871, by the act of Assembly, passed May 11, of that year, an appropriation of $30,000 was made to the Marine Hospital at Erie, but only on the condition that that corporation should convey to the State all the lauds granted by their act of incorporation in 1867, and on the further condition that said Marine Hospital 'shall convey to the United States of America all title it may have to the peninsula of Presque Isle, * * * * to be held by said United States, as near as may be, in its present condition, and only for the purposes of national defense, and for the protection of the harbor of Erie, but in all other respects, to be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania; and the consent of the State of Pennsylvania is hereby given to such transfer of title only for the purposes and under the limitations herein before mentioned.'

"An act of Congress was passed in the same year, 1871 (U. S. Statutes, vol. 24, page 312), by which the Secretary of War was directed to receive and accept title under the act of May 11, 1871, just recited, and on May 25, 1871, a deed was duly executed by the Marine Hospital officers and directors, and accepted by the Secretary of War, and possession was taken by the United States government, which has ever since had the custody and control of the same, although the actual title and ownership still remain vested in the State of Pennsylvania.

"This condition need not hinder, however, the use of a portion of the peninsula on the bay front for manufacturing purposes, as it will no doubt be easy to secure such concurrent legislation by Congress and the State Legislature as may be necessary, in case public opinion should favor the same, as it no doubt will, should there be a strong demand for this particular location by those seeking eligible sites for the manufacture of iron, as now appears very probable.

"The popular error and confusion of ideas as to the ownership of the peninsula of Presque Isle has no doubt arisen from the official letter from the chief clerk of the Interior Department, where he speaks of the 'title' to said peninsula being tendered to the United States; and in another place he refers to the deed conveying title being accepted, etc.

"In fact, the United States government did not acquire any title, but only, as you see, by referring to the language of the acts, the right of possession and occupancy, and that for a distinctly limited purpose, namely, 'national defense and for the protection of the harbor of Erie,' and in all other respects to be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania.

"Truly yours,
"WILLIAM A. GALBRAITH."

THE BAY AND HARBOR.

Immediately after the war of 1812-14 the Government asked Commodore Perry for his opinion as to the feasibility of removing the sand-bar which blocked the entrance to the harbor, and he reported favorably on the project. In 1819, a survey was made by the general government, but nothing further was done at that time. The State of Pennsylvania, in 1822, appointed Thomas Forster, Giles Sanford and George Moore, of Erie, a committee to survey the bay and ascertain the depth of water on the bar, and the anchorage outside the bar, and expended $15,000, toward improving the harbor. The project was then taken in hand by the general government, which has since continued the work.

A general plan of harbor improvement was adopted in 1823, and amended from time to time, as the demands of commerce called for an increased depth of water. It provided for closing all of the eastern end of the harbor by means of a breakwater, in which should be left an opening 200 feet wide, and for extending to deep water in the lake two parallel piers, one on each side of the opening. This project is substantially in force at the present time, excepting that the piers are 350 feet apart. The total sum expended at Erie harbor by the general government, up to June 30, 1894, was $826,732.38, including the work done in the protection of the peninsula.

EFFECT OF THE IMPROVEMENTS.

When this undertaking was entered upon the channel at the entrance was narrow and tortuous, with a depth of only six feet, and the depth on the present line of channel was only two feet. By 1827 vessels of ordinary draft were able to enter the harbor; by 1829, the depth of the entrance was from seven and a half to fifteen feet; and in 1833 there was a good channel with a depth of twelve feet from the lake into the bay. This depth was maintained to 1839, when operations were suspended. In 1844, the piers were going to ruin; there was a depth of eighteen feet between them, but shoals were forming at each end.

The original project contemplated the extension of the piers to the sixteen-foot curve in the lake, and the maintenance of a channel of navigable width sixteen feet in depth from the harbor inside to the lake outside. The channel, as secured, was, in 1894, 275 feet wide and not less than 18 feet deep, and is successfully maintained throughout its entire length of 7,150 feet. The latter distance is made up as follows:

	Feet.
From 18-foot contour in lake to the east or outer end of the north pier, outer channel.....	1,000
Between piers	2,750
From west or inner end of piers to 18-foot contour in harbor, inner channel.....	3,400

The length of channel lying between the piers is kept thoroughly scoured by the strong currents which run in and out, and thus maintain it in good condition at all times. The outer and inner channels require repeated dredging in order to maintain them at the required depth. Since the bar formation began to threaten the channel, in 1875, the pier has been extended three times, viz: in 1880, 242 linear feet; in 1891, 452.15 linear feet, and in 1893, 801.4 linear feet. The pier work in all of the extensions is twenty-four feet wide and twenty-four feet high, the superstructure being eight feet high above water.

The existing project provides for the further extension of the south pier. To complete it will require an extension of 1,000 feet, at a cost of $65,000.

There is a strong current setting in and out of the harbor, according to the direction of the wind, which causes a variation of from one to three feet in the depth of water in the bay.

Mr. J. C. Quintus assumed charge of the Erie harbor work, under direction of the United States Engineering Department, October 1, 1886. His headquarters were in a private office until December 3, 1888, when he changed into the United States building. He was relieved on November 8, 1894, by Mr. C. M. Emmons, and transferred to Buffalo, N. Y.

[For an account of the interesting historical events that have happened in Erie harbor and vicinity, and other matters of interest, see the General History of Erie county.]

DOCKS AND LAKE BUSINESS.

The principal docks are those of the Anchor Line, the Hard Coal docks of the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., the Erie and Pittsburg docks, the Carnegie docks, Reed's dock, the Public dock and the Watson dock.

At the beginning of the town's growth all articles of commerce were landed on the sand beach near the mouth of Mill creek, where three storehouses had been erected as early as 1815. Rufus S. Reed was one of the pioneers in the lake trade, and, to facilitate his business, constructed a dock near the foot of Sasfras street, which has ever since been familiarly known as Reed's dock. The pier reached out from the shore to a depth of eight feet of water, which was sufficient to float the largest vessel on the lakes at that period.

In the early days of steam navigation boats landed freight and passengers at the light-house piers to avoid loss of time. As no coal could then be obtained, wood was the only fuel used, and an immense quantity was required for the round trip from Buffalo to Detroit and Chicago; this was "poled" out to the piers on scows. When a steamboat approached Erie a signal gun was fired on deck. As soon as the cannon was heard all was bustle and activity on shore until the transfer of passengers and freight was effected. When Mr. Reed engaged in the steamboat business he required all of his boats to come to his dock. As he was monopolizing the Erie trade by so doing, the captains of other boats trading here were compelled to land at the dock or relinquish the trade at this port.

The business at Reed's dock was greatly increased by the opening of the Erie Extension Canal, early in the forties. Long lines of canal boats and sailing vessels were almost constantly moored alongside the dock during the season of navigation, discharging and loading cargoes of bituminous coal. The dock was leased by W. L. Scott & Co. some years ago, when its facilities for handling coal were largely increased.

THE PUBLIC DOCK.

The opening of the canal led to the building of a series of docks, extending from the foot of State street, east and west, which, in connection with the roadway and dock leading thereto, became known as the Public dock. Inside of these was the canal basin, now nearly filled with sediment from the sewers, which was a very busy place for many years. The docks on each side of State street were owned in the main, if not wholly, by private parties, and, in the days of canal boating, were among the most valuable property in or about Erie.

HARD COAL DOCKS.

The water lots covered by the Anchor Line docks and the Philadelphia and Erie docks were a gift from the city to the latter corporation, or rather to its predecessor, the Sunbury and Erie Company. The contract for building the first docks was awarded to George J. Morton & Co. Cribbs were constructed, but not filled, until several years later.

David Burton & Sons (Andrew and A. P. Burton), who were the first shippers of anthracite coal from Erie, and also the pioneer shippers of that kind of coal to supply the home demand, utilized the docks in 1866. In 1868 David Burton withdrew, and the firm name became Burton Bros. & Co., S. P. Longstreet having been admitted as a member of the firm. The new company continued in business until 1874. Ever since the latter date W. L. Scott & Co. have been lessees of the dock, which has been greatly enlarged and improved. Another extensive and very convenient dock for handling hard coal has been added, east of the original one.

ANCHOR LINE DOCKS AND GRAIN ELEVATORS.

The "Erie and Western Transportation Company," better known as the "Anchor Line," commenced business in 1868, the nucleus being one small grain elevator, now known as elevator A, built by Messrs. Noble, Brown, McCarter and Shannon, which the corporation purchased. From this humble beginning the business has become of great magnitude. The company, which has a full-paid capital stock of $3,000,000, and an issue of $750,000 five per cent. bonds, secured by a mortgage on its terminal properties, is the Pennsylvania R. R. Company's lake and rail line between the Eastern seaboard and the West. It was incorporated June 21, 1865, under the laws of Pennsylvania. Besides operating chartered vessels in such number as the demands of business make necessary, the company owns, clear of incumbrance, a fleet of eighteen steamers on the Great Lakes, having an aggregate tonnage of about 25,000 tons. At Erie the company has forty acres of dock property, on which are three grain elevators, immense warehouses and every facility for the rapid and satisfactory transaction of business. The tracks on this property connect with the Pennsylvania R. R. system for all points East and South. At Buffalo twelve acres of dock property are owned, on which are erected a grain elevator and large merchandise warehouses, connecting with all railroads centering in Buffalo. At Chicago the Company's docks and warehouses constitute the most permanent, extensive and advantageously located terminal of any of the organized lake lines at that port. At Milwaukee and Duluth, also, valuable terminal facilities are possessed through lease or otherwise. The lamented John J. Wadsworth was the agent of the line at Erie for many years before his death. He has been succeeded by Charles W. Payne. The general manager of the "Anchor Line" is John E. Payne, a former citizen of Erie, whose headquarters are in Philadelphia.

ERIE AND PITTSBURG AND CARNEGIE DOCKS.

The Pittsburg dock No. 1, extending far out into the bay from the mouth of Cascade run, and No. 2, facing the bay, one mile west of the Public dock, at the foot of State street, and extending westward, were completed at the time of the opening of the Erie and Pittsburg R. R., in 1865. Although a small quantity of iron ore was received the same season, the shipping of bituminous coal was the principal business. The Lake Superior iron ore trade increased so rapidly that it became necessary to use the entire dock for that purpose and build a new coal dock a few rods to the westward, which was completed in 1867. In 1868 the docks were connected with Reed's dock by a railroad track built along the foot of the bluff, protected on the bay side by a wall of timbers nearly a mile in length, which was eventually extended so as to make a connection with the Philadelphia and Erie R. R. Since that time the docks and trestle work have been greatly extended, all the latest improvements for handling coal and iron ore added, and dredging done to an extent that enables the largest vessels on the lakes to lay alongside. The Carnegie company operates three wharves, which handle vast quantities of iron ore brought down the lakes in ore carriers and whalebacks, to be shipped over the Erie and Pittsburg R. R. to the furnaces and manufacturers of Pittsburg and the Shenango valley. The bituminous coal industry is represented by the W. L. Scott Coal Company and the Panhandle Coal Company. During the great coal famine of 1894 Erie was about the only station on the lakes where steamers could get fuel. The W. L. Scott Company was established by the wonderful ability and energy of the gentleman whose name it bears, and is perhaps the largest shipper of coal on the lakes.

The Watson dock was built by the Erie Blast Furnace Company, some time in the sixties, and leased in 1894 by the H. F. Watson Co., to be used in connection with the shipments to and from their extensive paper mills. They have been succeeded by the Erie Dock and Transportation Company, an outgrowth of the Watson enterprise.

OTHER FEATURES.

Lumber is brought to the port in large quantities by schooners and tramp steamers, for shipment south and for local consumption. This line of trade is represented by Carroll Brothers, Bauschard Brothers, Lyman Felheim, David Schlosser and others.

The Erie Dock and Transportation Company have gone into the carrying trade between Erie and New York to a considerable extent. They own a steamer and a number of barges. The barges convey coal to New York, via the Erie canal and the Hudson river, and return with paper stock, etc., mainly for use at the Watson mill.

In addition to the above industries, the trade in lime rock with Kelley's Island, by Messrs. Spooner & Rea, and the extensive importations of vegetables, fish and farm products from Canada, should not be omitted.

THE FISHING INDUSTRY.

Fishing, as a commercial pursuit, has always been large at this point, and at the present time probably excels any other port on Lake Erie. It is almost entirely controlled by the following firms: Erie Fish Association (Limited), Sandusky Fish Company, Toledo Fish Company, and W. G. Rainey & Co., all well equipped with outfits for the business. The Erie Fish Association is the most complete and perfect establishment of any like concern on the lakes, and the quantity of fish handled each day by this concern is accomplished with so much ease and celerity that to a looker-on it would appear that but little was being done, when, on the contrary, an enormous amount of work is being performed in all of its different departments.

In a paper prepared by Capt. John Fleeharty in March, 1893, for the Pennsylvania Fish Commissioners, for circulation during the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, the catch of the different varieties of fish taken at Erie was computed for the season of 1892 at 12,783,579 pounds, this having been the first time that accurate statistics had been made up. "The increase for 1894 was about 1,000,000 pounds. At that date the amount of capital invested was $250,000, which has been increased. The number of men employed was 500, with twenty-eight steam fish boats, fourteen sail fish boats, forty pound nets, boats, gear, etc. It is not unusual that fifty tons of fish represent a day's catch, and it frequently goes beyond that amount. In fact, to those who are unacquainted with the immensity of the industry, the details are astonishing.

"Prior to 1830 all fish were taken with hook and line. David Fowzier was the first to resort to seine fishing. About this time Thomas Horton, William Buckingham and Abraham Huntsbarger began drawing the seine.

"The first white fish taken in Lake Erie was in 1852 at Dunkirk, N. Y., by Capt. Nash, who came from Mackinac with two fish boats and a complete outfit as an experiment. The taking of these fish created considerable excitement and gave great impetus to the fishing industry. Sturgeon, prior to 1854, were considered useless, and when caught were taken to the Peninsula and buried. Thousands of them have been wasted there. Now, smoked sturgeon is thought to be fully equal to smoked halibut. The roe is very fine, making an excellent 'caviare.' Lake trout weighing sixty-five pounds are not uncommon, but the largest ever caught in this vicinity weighed seventy-five pounds. The largest white fish ever taken at Erie, as far as known, was twenty-one and one-half pounds."

A Fisherman's Paradise.

"Presque Isle Bay and vicinity abound in all varieties of small fish. Perch are found in abundance, are fine to the taste, and afford rare sport to those who seek them. Grass pike are found in the ponds of the Peninsula, as well as in the bay in large numbers. Herring are here in abundance, and during the winter season furnish food for a large number of families. Perch and herring are caught in great numbers through the ice, when the bay and lake are frozen over, and almost any day during the winter season hundreds of persons may be seen fishing for them. It has been estimated that during the winter of 1894-5, for over sixty days, there were caught through the ice on the bay over 1,200 pounds of perch, each day, without mentioning the amount of herring taken, which would probably be half as much as the perch."

"Black bass, rock bass, muscalonge and sunfish are not as plentiful as they once were, owing to the number of seines drawn in the bay of recent years by fish pirates, but, with the efforts that are making to enforce the fish laws, it is believed they will, in a few years, be as numerous as ever. Muscalonge have been caught here weighing sixty-two pounds, and six-pound bass have unquestionably been caught in the bay, but a four-pound bass will give a sportsman all the sport he desires, if he knows how to handle his fish, and fish of that size are common here."

The following additional information is gleaned from a very readable article in the Herald "Souvenir of Erie," published in 1888:

Gill-Net Fishing.

"In 1854 the gill-net fishing business was in its infancy. A fisherman named Hitchcock came from the 'Islands' at the west end of Lake Erie and set a few nets, making good hauls. The news of his success was heralded far and wide. Soon afterward Richard P. Burke and Mr. Terry embarked in the business, followed by Daniel Weeks, John Dash, sr., and his two sons, Adam and John Dash, jr., Larimer & Newton, Clark Jones and others. Heavy hauls of white fish and salmon-trout were often made. Frequently the boats brought in from ten to forty of the latter at a 'catch,' averaging fifteen pounds apiece.

"Owing to meager shipping facilities there was not much demand for fresh white fish, which could be purchased from the boats at one cent per pound. The surplus was salted for shipment. After railroads to the interior were built, a larger market was opened, but the supply was generally greater than the demand until the freezing process was adopted.

"The firm of Stancliff & Larimer, dealers in salt fish, who had a provision store on French street, between Fifth and Sixth, were also engaged in the gill-net fishing business in 1854.

Pound-Net Fishing.

"In 1872 Post & Durfee, of Fairport, Ohio., set the first pound-nets off the port of Erie for the purpose of catching sturgeon. Immense hauls were made, several tons being brought in daily. The roe was removed, salted, and sent to Germany, where it was prepared as an article of food called 'caviar,' regarded by epicures as a great delicacy. After the roe was removed the dead sturgeon, weighing from sixty to 100 pounds each, were taken out on the lake and thrown overboard. Of late years no more sturgeon are wasted, the demand being greater than the supply. They are salted and smoked, finding a ready market, often being sold for halibut.

"Post & Durfee were followed in the pound-net fishing business successively by Heidt & Wendall, Slocum & Stuntz, and Slocum & Meyers. As immense quantities of game and other fish were caught in the pound-nets, overstocking the markets, the business met with persistent and determined opposition by hook-and-line as well as gill-net fishermen. The Game and Fish Association secured the passage of an act by the Legislature prohibiting pound-net fishing in the waters of Pennsylvania, and no nets of this description were set for eight or nine years, until Captain M. E.

Dunlap engaged in the business in 1888. He was prosecuted for violating the fish law, and a running legal fight of three years' duration was the result, culminating in a victory for the Captain.

"The catch for April, May, November and December comprises principally blue-pike, herring and perch, with a few white fish; the latter being caught almost exclusively from June to October."

Introduction of Steam Fishing Boats.

"Although several steam fish-boats were in the business, none were owned at this port until 1882, when Captain M. Maher built and launched the steamer Frank Mattison. Gill-net fishing before the advent of steamers was an extremely hazardous business. The fishing grounds extend all the way from a half-mile off shore to a distance of ten or fifteen miles out. As the fish run in "schools" the nets are placed in different localities, with varying success until a school is "struck," when big hauls are made. Every boat has a range of its own, which by common consent must not be trespassed on by other boats.

"A complete history of the fishing industry at the port of Erie would chronicle a long list of disasters and an appalling loss of life. Sunday, September 17, 1876, five well-known Erie fishermen were drowned almost within reach of help. A tremendous sea was running at the time, and when less than half a mile from the harbor entrance the boats swamped, while hundreds of horror-stricken citizens stood on the shore unable to render any assistance.

"The wholesale dealers at Erie generally make a contract with the fishermen for the season's catch.

"The product of the Erie fisheries commands a ready sale in all the cities on the Atlantic coast, as well as in Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Louisville, St Louis and other markets in the southern and western states."

Local Amateurs.

"Erie has had and still possesses many enthusiastic anglers, who seldom went out without returning with good strings. Among them may be mentioned the following: Rev. Wm. Flint, Dr. H. A. Spencer, John Banyard, Tom Crowley, Wm. L. Scott, Tim Lynch, Alfred King, John P. Vincent, J.

Ross Thompson, Jake Graham, John C. Hilton, J. H. McCracken, Sam Woods, Frank Grant, John Dodge and Fred. Knobloch. All of the resident fishermen have favorite spots for fishing, the secret of which they guard jealously."

Pleasure Boats.

The bay is a great resort for pleasure seekers, and there are few points where so many sail and row boats are owned by private parties or kept for hire. On a pleasant day in the summer the water is fairly covered with these boats, and the enjoyment of a sail or a row on the bay is only equalled by its cheapness and healthfulness.

The Erie Yacht Club, which was organized in the fall of 1894, and has built a roomy and handsome club house near the water works, which was formally opened July 18, 1895, promises to still further popularize the pastime of sailing. Its members own some of the fastest and staunchest boats on the lakes. The club took part in the yacht races at Put-in-Bay in the early part of August, 1895.

(For a list of the Collectors and Deputy Collectors of the port, an account of the light houses, life saving service, and weather and signal stations, with a list of the parties in charge thereof, and other matter relating to the bay, harbor and peninsula, see General History of Erie county).

CHAPTER VI.

PUBLIC PLEASURE RESORTS—THE PARKS, THE HEAD, TRACY POINT, THE CEDARS, GROVE HOUSE, FAIR GROUNDS, ETC.

WITHIN the city limits are two squares, designed in the original plan of Erie for public parks—one at the intersection of State and Sixth streets, the other at the junction of Sixth and Liberty. The first, by city ordinance, has been given the name of Central Park, and the second that of Cascade Park. With the exception of some grading and the setting out of a number of trees in 1890, the latter remains unimproved. In addition to these, there is Lakeside Park, on the bay front, between Holland and Sassafras streets, and the park surrounding the water works, at the foot of Chestnut street. Work on Lakeside Park, which is handsomely laid out and quite attractive, was commenced in 1890, under the direction of City Councils. Charles H. Nunn has been its keeper from the start. The improvement of the grounds at the water works was begun by the Commissioners in office in 1883, and the plan then adopted has been carried out in a creditable manner by their successors.

CENTRAL PARK.

Up to the year 1808 the ground embraced in Central Park was covered with forest trees, as the site of nearly the entire city was originally. A deep ravine ran across the park, from the city hall to the old Brown's Hotel or Ellsworth House, and continued from there to the bay, on a line slightly east of State street. This ravine can yet be seen at Second and Third streets. People passed from one side of the town to the other by going into the ravine and crossing a foot bridge that spanned the stream which ran down to the bay. It was gradually filled up with the growth of the town, and the old court house was built over it, where the west park intersects State street, opposite the Exchange building. By one of those strange freaks that affect the human mind, it was decided in 1808, to cut down the forest growth, and the park was cleared of trees at an expense to the town of $42. The park remained bare until 1846, when it was resolved at a public meeting to replant it with trees. B. B. Vincent, Elijah Babbitt, W. C. Lester and Clark McSparran were appointed a committee to co-operate with the town authorities. The project was carried out, and June 2d of that year a meeting of congratulation over the event was held in front of the Reed House. The square had been previously known as the "Diamond," but at this meeting it was proposed to call it "Perry Square," in honor of the victor of Lake Erie. It was also suggested to erect a monument to Commodore Perry, but this and all other efforts in that direction came to naught.

For a number of years the parks were surrounded by a fence, which was removed in 1881. The walks were covered with asphaltum in 1881 and 1882.

MONUMENT AND FOUNTAINS.

In the west park and facing State street, is the monument erected "In memory of the soldiers and sailors from Erie county who gave their lives to save the Union." The bronze group consists of a soldier and sailor, standing side by side, mutually supporting the National flag, which hangs in graceful folds between them, the foot of the staff resting upon the ground, the right hand of the soldier grasping it, while his left is holding his rifle en traile. The sailor has his left foot upon a coil of rope; his right hand is on the pommel of his sword, the point of which is placed upon the ground, while his left hand carelessly rests upon the right. The scene represents the mutual relation of these forces in sustaining the one flag. This group occupies a granite pedestal, eight feet square by twelve feet high, from the noted works at Hallowell, Me. The statuary was executed by the Ames Company, of Chicopee, Mass., after a design by Martin Milmore, of Boston. On the west side of the pedestal is inscribed the memorable quotation from Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg: "We here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth." The monument was erected in 1872, at a cost of about $10,500, mainly collected by the persistent efforts of Miss Helen Ball, Miss Sarah Reed and Mrs. Isaac Moorhead. The foundation, which cost $500, was contributed by the city.

Immediately south of the monument is a handsome drinking fountain, presented to the city in 1888 by George D. Selden. The ornamental fountains—one in the center of each park—were erected in 1868. They cost $3,237.18, exclusive of the water connections, which were supplied by the water department, free of charge against the city. The drinking fountain in the west park was placed there in 1894 by the Water Commissioners.

Thirty to forty years ago the vicinity of the parks was the business center of Erie, and the stores on North and South Park Rows and along "Cheapside," as the blocks on the French street side were known, were the largest and finest in the city, with perhaps a few exceptions.

The keepers of the parks have been, in the order named, Cornelius O'Hearn, Michael Timon, Michael Gallagher, Stephen Gallagher and Patrick Donahue.

THE HEAD, OR MASSASSAUGA POINT.

This, for half a century, the favorite resort of the people of Erie, is located, as the name indicates, at the head of the bay, where the peninsula connects with the main land, about four miles west of the city, in Mill Creek township. It is claimed by some of the old residents that the bay does not extend as far west as when the town was laid out, the peninsula at the neck having gradually receded toward the east. They allege that a narrow sand beach commenced at the mouth of the run one mile above "The Head," and extended down the lake a similar distance, from which the peninsula jutted out. Much higher up than is now enclosed by the sand beach was a long, narrow pond, entirely cut off from the lake, into which scows frequently ran from the bay, as late as 1840, to gather wood for steamboats.

In 1796, some twenty or thirty Indian families resided at the head of the bay. The beach was larger then than it is to-day, and a heavy forest covered the low land nearest the shore. The Indians had corn-fields southwest on the farms owned by J. C. Marshall and the estate of E. J. Kelso. This was the last Indian village in Erie county. The Indians gradually disappeared, and after their departure the site was occupied for awhile by a half-breed negro named McKinney, who lived by fishing. The Indians were of the Massassauga tribe, from which comes the title, Massassauga Point.

It is due to the truth of history to add that some of the original settlers claimed that the Indians were not Massassaugas, and that the name sprang from a species of rattlesnake known as the Massassaugas—short, thick reptiles that were numerous when Captain Bissell erected the forts in 1795-96.

"The Head" was first taken up under the laws of the State, in 1800, by Eliphalet Beebe, a ship carpenter, who looked upon the site as an available one for a ship-yard. In the course of a few years, it passed into the hands of Thomas Laird, who died in April, 1833, and by whose heirs it was held until its purchase by William L. Scott at Sheriff's sale.

The first hotel at "The Head," a small frame structure, was built by Wilson Laird, a son of the original owner, in 1874. After Mr. Scott obtained possession of the property he made extensive improvements. A large hotel was erected in 1879, a better roadway built, the wharf extended, the grounds graded and beautified, and a gas well put down that proved to be one of the best in Erie county. The hotel burned December 1, 1882, while under the charge of Wm. B. Graham. It was replaced in 1885 by the present structure, which has been recently overhauled and made more attractive. There is a large dancing hall on the grounds, with other opportunities for enjoyment, and the place is pronounced by all strangers who visit it, one of the choicest summer resorts in the country. The motor cars from the city run almost to the door of the hotel, and the drive to "The Head" is over a broad, level road, lined with an almost continuous double row of trees, and past a series of farms that have few superiors.

In 1832, a bed of bog iron ore was discovered on the south line of the Laird farm, which was used at the blast furnace of Vincent, Hinrod & Co. for several years. A furnace at Conneaut, Ohio, fell short of ore about this time and sent an agent to quarry the ore and ship it at "The Head." The scow schooners Jack Downing and Olive Branch ran in the iron-ore trade for three seasons, or until the supply became exhausted. The road from the Lake road to the shore of the bay, which ran through the woods and down the side of the bank, was laid out for the purpose of hauling the ore to the vessels. The Jack Downing wintered in 1834-35 about fifty rods above where the Massassauga Hotel was built, and there tied up to a sycamore tree, where now the sand and sediment render the approach of a vessel impossible.

TRACY POINT.

The locality now known as Tracy Point, long went by the name of the "Lone Fisherman's Inn." As originally started, it consisted of a cheap frame building on the Tracy farm, at the mouth of a picturesque glen, down which tumbled a sparkling little stream of water. The only way to reach it was by boat or by a path through the woods or along the sand beach from the Head. In 1870, or thereabouts, "Jake" Graham, a hotel man of long experience and a favorite with the sporting fraternity, secured a long lease of the grounds and built a shanty in the then almost inaccessible ravine, appropriately naming the place "Lone Fisherman's Inn." The resort became popular from its inception, and was constantly crowded with guests, who enjoyed fishing and shooting, or were fond of a "fish supper," for which the "Inn" soon became famous. Mr. Graham served as "mine host" until 1875, when he sold out his interest to Louis Schumacher, who at once commenced the improvement of the premises. Among other work, he caused a carriage road, of easy grade, to be made from the Lake road to the mouth of the ravine, affording a safe "overland route" to the place in inclement weather. Owing to impaired health, he disposed of the premises to John Schaffer, who continued some time. The buildings were destroyed by fire in January, 1892. During the winter of 1892-3, Mr. Tracy, owner of the property, erected a fine new hotel, strengthened the wharf, and added other improvements which better adapted the place for the use of the general public. The property was run from the spring of 1893 by Max Raedisch, as lessee under Mr. Tracy, until April 1, 1895, when the latter gentleman leased it to the Sommerheim Association, a German social club, which now conducts it as a private resort for the families thereof and their friends. It was opened by the association on June 5, 1895.

The Sommerheim was organized in the fall of 1894, and has the following officers: President, F. Brevilier; Vice President, P. Henrichs; Secretary, P. A. Meyer; Treasurer, E. C. Siegel; Board of Governors, F. Brevilier, Chas. S. Marks, Wm. Reifel, E. C. Siegel, Wm. B. Flickinger, P. A. Meyer, P. Henrichs.

GLENWOOD PARK.

In 1891 an organization was effected for the purpose of buying a tract of land which would enable a park to be established on a more extensive scale than had yet been undertaken. The active men in the movement were W. H. Nicholson, F. F. Adams and J. F. Downing. These gentlemen secured subscriptions for the purpose to the amount of $27,000. With this sum in hand, a body of land was purchased in Mill Creek township, just south of the city limits, embracing about 105 acres. The tract includes the Evans place and portions of the John Eliot and H. C. Shannon farms. Probably no better site for a park could be chosen, being convenient of access, and combining every variety of stream, cascade, hill, ravine and meadow that is essential for the purpose. The Peach street motor line runs part way to the park and will undoubtedly be extended as the public demand warrants. Considerable improvement has been made on the park, and it is already a favorite resort. It is understood to be the object of the organization, as soon as their plans are completed, to present the tract to the city, on condition that it shall lay out the grounds as a public park and maintain it properly.

THE GROVE HOUSE.

The Grove House property, at the mouth of Four-Mile creek, embracing thirteen acres of the Crowley farm, was purchased early in the spring of 1887 by J. J. Lang and C. Rabe, with the object of building up a new summer resort. The place contained a large apple orchard, planted by Mr. Crowley in 1820. The shade afforded by the orchard, the fine outlook and the excellent fishing grounds off the mouth of the creek, had long made the site a resort for picnic and camping parties. After the purchase by Messrs. Lang and Rabe, a force of workmen was employed and a broad avenue was graded from the Lake road, along the east bank of the creek, to the lake; a pier was built from the shore northward into deep water, and the bank was cut down so as to afford access for visitors by boat. A dancing hall and a refreshment hall were built, and the place was opened to the public in June, 1887. The patronage given encouraged the building of a large hotel in the winter of 1887-8, which has since been in successful operation. The present manager is A. P. Lang, who has made a number of additions to the premises.

THE CEDARS.

The resort known as The Cedars, on the bluff overlooking the sandbeach, in the northeastern portion of the city, has been a public pleasure ground for many years. The property was bought of the Kelso estate about 1830 by William Newman, who built the house which is still occupied, and lived in it for a quarter of a century. He gave it the name of the Cedars, from the large number of trees of that species that grew on the premises. The fine shade and the beautiful prospect made it a popular picnic place, and Mr. Newman encouraged its use for that purpose. The property was bought by Rev. J. H. Whallon, in connection with his outside dock scheme, some time in the sixties, and through him it fell into the hands of Wm. L. Scott and Joseph McCarter, in whom the title still remains. Mr. McCarter owns three-fifths and the Scott estate two-fifths of the premises. The resort has been managed for some years by Joseph Herrman.

COCHRAN'S GROVE,

Once a great picnic place, adjoins the city reservoir on the south. It was part of the John Cochran farm, and has been owned by members of the family for nearly a century. The grove once contained a large number of very fine trees, but many of them have disappeared. It is often used for church and society picnics.

THE MAPLES,

Is the pretty name of a new summer resort for the public at Twenty-sixth and Poplar streets, on the premises which long went by the name of Uncle Sam's Garden. The place was re-fitted during the winter of 1894 and spring of 1895, and opened the same year, under the charge of S. E. Wilder. The building stands in a splendid maple grove, and affords a grand view of the city, bay and lake.

Walter Scott.

FAIR GROUNDS, RACE TRACKS AND BASE BALL GROUNDS.

The first ground regularly laid out in Erie county for fair purposes was part of the Ebersole tract, now owned by the H. C. Shannon estate, on the Buffalo road, a short distance west of Wesleyville. The premises were fitted up with a race track and a building for exhibiting agricultural products in a small way. County fairs were held there in 1859 and 1860. The excitement of the war caused the fair to be postponed in 1861, and none were held on the premises afterward.

On the organization of the Erie County Agricultural Society, in 1869, a large plot of high ground at the western terminus of Twelfth street, belonging to the Reed estate, was secured for its use, and continued to be occupied as long as county fairs were kept up. The State fair was held on the premises in 1872 and '73, and 1877 and '78. Some of the best races ever seen in Northwestern Pennsylvania have taken place on these grounds.

The fair grounds, last spoken of, were also long used as a base ball park, and have witnessed many interesting matches of this popular game. For some reason, the base ball managers changed their location a number of years ago, and the scene of their games is now in an inclosed space at Ninth and Cascade streets.

In 1893 and '94 Charles M. Reed laid out a private race track on the Reed farm, lying north of the Lake road, between the city and Four-Mile creek. Upon the organization of the Erie Fair Association in January, 1895, Mr. Reed tendered it the use of the grounds. It was the intention to hold a summer meeting in July, 1895, which, however, was postponed, and the place has not yet been opened to the general public as a race course. The track and conveniences are said to be unusually good.

PRIVATE PLEASURE RESORTS.

It being the object of this chapter to describe only resorts of a public nature, no mention will be made of the various club houses in the vicinity of the city—which are referred to elsewhere—nor of the numerous summer houses and camping places that line the bank of the bay and lake, both east and west. These are maintained specially for private enjoyment, do not depend upon general patronage for their support, and, as a rule, are carefully guarded against the intrusion of the public.

CHAPTER VII.

CITY BUILDINGS—SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME—CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS AND SOCIETIES.—[For United States, County and State Buildings, not described below, see Chapter XIX, General History.]

THE most important structure owned by the municipality is the City Hall, a large and handsome building at the southwest corner of Central Park, and having a frontage each on the Park, Peach street and Seventh street. Its dimensions are 124 feet on Peach street, and it has a width of sixty-four feet. The building is of pressed brick, three stories high, with a basement partially above ground. The main tower is 156 feet from the foundation to the top, and the main building is eighty-eight feet in height to the ridge of the roof. The basement is occupied by the police station, the health officer and the street and sidewalk superintendents. On the first floor, above the basement, are the offices of the mayor, city treasurer, city solicitor, controller and water and fire commissioners. On the second floor are the council chambers, the city clerks' offices and the engineer's department. The third floor contains two halls, one 56x56, and the other 32x38 feet in dimensions, and a number of committee rooms. The plans of the building were drawn by D. K. Dean, formerly a well-known Erie architect, and all, or nearly all of the work was done by home contractors and mechanics. The cost of the edifice has been in the neighborhood of $200,000. It may be mentioned, in passing, that the first and second stories are trimmed with brown-stone from Twinsburg, O. This stone is of superior quality, and the quarry from which it was obtained has been exhausted.

The corner stone of the City Hall was laid with Masonic ceremonies on July 31, 1884, during the administration of Mayor Becker, with whom the erection of a suitable municipal building had long been a pet project. The upper stories remained unfinished for a long time, until the crowded and inconvenient condition of the lower rooms became actually unbearable. A contract for the completion of the second floor rooms was made in the fall of 1894, and the building was formally dedicated to the public use on the 22d of February, 1895. It is safe to say that few cities of the size possess a handsomer or more convenient City Hall than Erie does.

The bell which hung in the Court House for many years was placed in the tower of the City Hall on September 6, 1895. It was cast in 1854.

CITY HOSPITAL.

A small building for the care and treatment of persons suffering with contagious diseases was put up on the bluff forming part of the Garrison grounds in 1870. It was placed under the care of Dr. E. W. Germer, who continued in charge until he died. When the State decided to convert the Marine Hospital into a Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, the "pest house," as it was generally called, had to be removed, and it was a long while before a site could be had for another, none of the citizens caring to have it in their neighborhood. A location was finally secured in 1890, at the junction of Twelfth street (extended) with the Fagan road, in East Mill Creek, where a good frame building was set up, capable of accommodating sixteen patients. Fortunately for the public, it has not had to be used to any extent, though it may prove to be very handy in case of the breaking out of a contagious disease. The hospital is under the direction of the City Health Officer.

PENNSYLVANIA SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME.

Those who have read the preceding chapters will remember that when Erie was laid out a tract of land was set aside for military purposes, overlooking the bay and lake, near the mouth of Mill creek, on its east side. This property became known as Garrison Hill, or the Garrison grounds. When Hon. Morrow B. Lowry was a member of the State Senate he secured a State appropriation for the establishment of a Marine Hospital on the site. This resulted in the erection of a large three-story brick building, which cost some $90,000, in addition to $10,000 contributed by the citizens of Erie. The structure was never occupied as a hospital, and was gradually falling into decay, though the State paid a keeper for looking after it.

At various times after the war for the Union, the Grand Army of the Republic called the attention of the State authorities to the fact that by the private contributions of the different posts many of the veterans were supplied with funds to keep them and their families from actual want. The Legislature finally acted on the suggestion, and on June 3, 1885, a bill which was introduced by Hon. Isaac B. Brown, of Corry, was approved by the Governor. It was entitled "An act for the establishment and maintenance of a home for the disabled soldiers and sailors of Pennsylvania," who, as citizens of the commonwealth, enlisted and participated in the war for the preservation of the Union. The location of the Home was left to the judgment of the Commission. This body was composed of Governor Robert E. Pattison, Hon. William Livsey, Hon. Jerome B. Niles, Hon. William F. Aull, Col. Thos. J. Stewart, Hon. Charles R. Gentner, General James A. Beaver (ex-Governor), Col. Robert B. Beath, Hon. Isaac B. Brown, Col. John M. Vanderslice and Gen. Louis Wagner. After considering various sites, they concluded to make use of the Marine Hospital—in truth, that may be said to have been the object of the movement from the start. The only condition they asked of the people of Erie was that they should secure and make a gift to the State of a small piece of land which lay between the Garrison tract and Third street, in order that the premises of the Home should front directly on the latter thoroughfare. This was done through private subscriptions.

By energetic work, the building, which required a great deal of repair, was ready for inmates on the 22d of February, 1886, the date set for its dedication. The occasion was a gala day in Erie. All of the Commission were present, with a number of other prominent citizens. The G. A. R. Posts turned out with full ranks; the companies of militia acted as escort for the Governor, who presided and made the opening address. General Gobin delivered the dedicatory address, and was followed by Judge Galbraith, Judge Souther, Hon. James R. Burns, Gen. Louis Wagner, Hon. I. B. Brown, Senator Walling, J. F. Downing, Esq., and others. The officers of the Home had been previously appointed, and on the day of opening eight veterans presented themselves and were admitted. Maj. W. W. Tyson, one of the very best men for the place that could possibly have been chosen, has been the principal officer in charge from the beginning.

Since the institution was opened, the building has been much enlarged and improved, the grounds beautifully ornamented, an infirmary added, and everything done that could be asked or expected to make the Home a comfortable dwelling place for the aged and indigent veterans of the late war. There are 107 acres connected with the institution, sixty of which are on the bluffs and forty-seven on the "sand beach." The "sand beach," however, is such no longer. A road has been made all around the edges of the old swampy grounds, and where there used to be good duck shooting, crops of hay, corn, potatoes and garden stuff are growing. The grounds of the Home are daily visited by throngs of people who are justly proud that such an institution is maintained by the State, and located in its only lake city.

The Home has accommodations for about 450 inmates, and is kept constantly full. Numerous applications remain on file, waiting their turn for acceptance. "In no sense, though, is it proper to speak of the place as a charity institution. It is a 'home' in reality, such as was included in the implied promise made by the State when she called "on her citizens to rally in defense of the Union. The men gathered under its roof are worthy of care and protection, and a study of its record book shows that the services rendered to the government were such as ought to be rewarded in a fitting manner. Inside the Home the general appearance is that of a good hotel; carpets or rugs are on the floors; the rooms hold from two to six persons; the beds are made of woven wire springs, with fifteen-pound mattresses of pure South American hair. The temperature of the rooms in winter is kept at a pleasant warmth, and in summer the cool air of Lake Erie keeps away malaria. The beds are made for one person only, and each man is provided with a bureau in which to keep his linen and extra clothing. Each inmate is provided, when he enters the Home, with an outfit, which includes everything necessary for his comfort. Very few have been discharged for offenses against the rules of the Home. By far the largest number of those who have left did so because they had regained their health, and, not wishing to be a burden to the State, when they could procure their own livelihood, asked for and received an honorable discharge, and took their places again in the ranks of bread-winners."

"Each inmate is placed on his honor, and is expected and required to so conduct himself as to bring no reproach on the Home. Services are held in the chapel, the ministers of the different churches in Erie taking turns in preaching each Sabbath afternoon. On Sunday, church passes are distributed, and every inmate is given the liberty to attend the church of his choice, whatever it may be. There are no guards around the place—no high fences to keep the men in, but they are expected to conform to the rules. Intoxication is one, among other things, that is prohibited, and while no punishment is inflicted, if the inmates will not conform to the requirements they are discharged from the Home."

The block-house on the bluff, north of the Home, was built by the State to commemorate the memory of Gen. Anthony Wayne and his soldiers, and occupies the spot where he was buried.

A short distance east of the main structure is the little cemetery, where those who die in the Home are buried by their living comrades, with the honors of war.

Capt. N. W. Lowell was appointed Quartermaster of the Home March 1, 1888; Dr. S. F. Chapin has been Surgeon since October 1, 1889; and Dr. David Reinhold was appointed Resident Physician in the fall of 1895.

HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS.

Although the establishment of a Home for the Friendless had been talked over at various times by some of the generous-hearted men and women of the city, the first practical step in that direction was taken at a meeting held in the residence of Mrs. James C. Marshall on the 17th of October, 1871. This resulted in an application for a charter, which was granted by the Court of Erie county on the 29th of November ensuing, the following ladies being named as incorporators: Mrs. Gen. Reed, Mrs. M. B. Lowry, Mrs. I. B. Gara, Mrs. W. A. Brown, Mrs. W. W. Dinsmore, Miss A. C. Kilbourne, Mrs. W. S. Brown, Mrs. William Bell, Mrs. Henry Jarecki, Miss Laura G. Sanford, Mrs. W. L. Scott, Mrs. J. H. Neill, Mrs. S. P. Longstreet, Mrs. G. W. Starr, Mrs. W. A. Galbraith, Mrs. Bernard Hubley, Mrs. P. Metcalf, Mrs. S. S. Spencer, Mrs. I. W. Hart, Mrs. J. P. Vincent, Mrs. S. A. Davenport, Mrs. J. C. Marshall, Mrs. E. W. Pollock, Mrs. D. S. Clark, Mrs. L. W. Shirk, Mrs. P. Crouch, Mrs. Miles W. Caughey, Mrs. Robert Evans, Miss Parkinson and Miss Sarah Reed. The first officers were as follows: Mrs. C. M. Reed, President; Mrs. I. B. Gara, First Vice President; Mrs. W. A. Galbraith, Second Vice President; Mrs. W. W. Dinsmore, Secretary; Miss Kate M. Mason, Treasurer; Mrs. Mary Chalfant, Matron.

Gen. C. M. Reed having tendered the use of the old family residence, on the southeast corner of State street and South Park Row, where the Federal building now stands, it was first occupied by the "Home" November 2, 1871. In February, 1872, the Marine Hospital Board offered the managers the use of their building until such time as the State authorities should require it for other purposes. The offer was gladly accepted, and in the early part of May, 1872, the "family" removed to that building, where it remained until the occupancy of the "Home" on the corner of Twenty-second and Sassafras streets November 2, 1875.

After serving about a year, Mrs. Reed resigned the presidency, and Mrs. I. B. Gara was chosen to fill that position, which she held until May 2, 1876, when she, too, resigned, and Miss Kate M. Mason was elected. The latter held the position until her death, April 1, 1890, when she was succeeded by Miss Sarah Reed, who still continues.

On the 16th of September, 1875, Hon. M. B. Lowry presented the management with the Gaggin property, located on the southwest corner of Twenty-second and Sassafras streets. The original building on the premises included in the gift, not being large enough, there still remained the necessity of raising a fund sufficient to make the needed improvements. This task was undertaken by Mrs. Gara, the president, and it is largely due to her untiring zeal that the money was pledged. Ground for the addition to the building was broken September 25, 1875, and the corner stone laid on the 18th of October following. The family removed to the property November 2, 1875, and on the 25th of March, 1876, the addition was finished, free of debt, at a total cost of $6,820.48. Mrs. Gara was efficiently aided in procuring subscriptions by Mrs. J. C. Marshall, Mrs. J. R. Saltzman, Mrs. W. S. Brown, Miss Kate M. Mason and Miss Sarah Reed. Since that date the building has been further enlarged and improved.

Among other liberal gifts to the institution was one from Hon. Prescott Metcalf of a lot fronting fifty feet on Sassafras street, adjoining the Gaggin property, and an endowment of $5,000, tendered by Hon. William L. Scott as a Christmas gift in 1880. When the tenth anniversary was celebrated in November, 1881, the result of ten years' work was shown in a fine property worth some $18,000, free from debt, and in a building planned to accommodate seventy-five children and a dozen or more adults.

A special building for old people was contemplated from the start, but lack of funds prevented the accomplishment of the plan for some years. With this in view, the house and lot of Mr. Dunning, at Sassafras and Twenty-fourth streets, were purchased in 1884. The ladies were able to pay only a small portion of the $5,000 purchase money, and while they were asking each other who was going to be brave and strong enough to go out and solicit the amount necessary to pay for and improve their last venture, Col. Ellsworth came to the rescue, and, unknown to the board of managers, raised and placed in the treasury of the building fund over $3,000. The work of improving was at once commenced, and on the afternoon and evening of September 8, 1887, the completed building was thrown open to the public.

The Home is strictly supported by the gifts of the charitable, but it has been fortunate in securing several liberal appropriations at the hands of the State. About 1,200 children have found shelter under its roof, and from it many have gone to private homes, where they have been tenderly cared for, while many others have been put in the way of earning an honest living. Quite a number of old ladies have found it a safe haven for their declining years, and have been saved from that horror of respectable poverty, the poor-house.

As a provision for future contingencies, the managers, in the spring of 1895, bought the house and lot on Twenty-fourth street, adjoining the Home grounds on the west, at a cost of $2,000.

The matrons have been as follows: Children's department—Mrs. Chalfant, Miss Meyers (afterward Mrs. Wm. Bell), Mrs. Aiken, Miss Miller. Old ladies' department—Mrs. Seymour, Mrs. Perrin.

HAMOT HOSPITAL.

The Hamot Hospital Association, organized mainly through the efforts of Rev. J. T. Franklin, of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, was chartered February 7, 1881, and the first meeting of its board held on the 28th of the same month. It occupies the old home of P. S. V. Hamot, on the bank of the bay, at the intersection of State with Front and Second streets, which was deeded to the institution by his heirs, free from charge and liabilities, on the 9th of April, 1881. The deed contained certain conditions for insuring the perpetuity of the hospital, which met with the entire approval of the association. The land thus generously donated embraced 216 feet on State street by 165 feet on Front street, and 105 on Second street, which was given for the sole uses of a general hospital, open to all sects, races and conditions of men. At the time of the gift the property was valued at $12,000. Certain alterations were made in the Hamot homestead to fit it for its future use, and the hospital was formally opened on the 1st day of July, 1881. It received its first patient on the 10th day of the same month.

The original structure has been much enlarged and improved. An extensive addition was made in 1888, and formally opened August 23d of that year. The contract was let in June, 1895, for another addition, which will cost $30,000. The late George Selden, in his will, directed the executors to turn over to the Hospital Association $15,000, providing the charter was amended to make the institution non-sectarian. The Board took satisfactory action upon this requirement in 1894, and the money was applied to the erection of the last mentioned addition. The sum left by Mr. Selden not being sufficient to carry out the plans of the management, the family of the late Wm. L. Scott generously stepped forward and contributed an equal amount to that bequeathed by Mr. Selden.

The corporators of the hospital are: Geo. W. Starr, Chas. H. Strong, W. W. Reed, Wm. Spencer, Jno. W. Reynolds, Chas. C. Shirk, Jno. H. Bliss, Jno. S. Richards, Geo. P. Colt, R. T. Williams, Geo. R. Metcalf, M. H. Taylor, W. A. Galbraith, Chas. Jarecki, H. F. Watson, Frank Gunnison, Geo. D. Selden, E. Camphausen, E. E. Matthews, Henry Shenk, M. Griswold, F. Brevillier, Julius Levi, John Scarlet, Emil A. Becker, Jos. M. Force, R. S. VanCleve, J. F. Walther, Martin Strong, D. D. Tracy and C. Kessler.

The institution has had from the beginning, as superintendent, a graduate of the New York Hospital School for trained nurses, aided by competent and experienced assistants. The present superintendent is Miss Maude Ardagh.

An auxiliary society of ladies, representing every Protestant church in the city, is an important adjunct to the regular Board of Managers, and has rendered very effective aid in furnishing and constantly looking after its internal wants. Of this society Mrs. Geo. W. Starr is president.

The present medical board consists of Dr. Charles Brandes, consulting physician and surgeon; attending physicians and surgeons, Drs. James H. Montgomery, D. H. Strickland, J. E. Silliman, J. J. Seward; surgeon in charge of the eye and ear department, Dr. D. N. Dennis; surgeon in charge of the Marine Hospital service, Dr. Wallace Hunter.

Over 3,000 persons have been treated, of whom many have been charity patients, and the demands are constantly beyond the capacity of the hospital. With the exception of an annual income of $500, accruing from the gift of a generous citizen, and small appropriations by the State, the hospital is supported in part by fees from patients able to pay, who seek admission for the special care afforded; but principally from the voluntary subscriptions of societies, business firms and individuals. The good it has done and is doing is a silent but constant appeal to the better feelings of all classes. Minor differences are forgotten in a friendly rivalry to furnish help and hope to the sick, the injured and the suffering.

The payment of fifty dollars at one time constitutes a life membership in the association, and exemption thereafter from the payment of yearly dues.

ST. JOSEPH'S ORPHAN ASYLUM.

St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum had its inception in 1864, when the Sisters of St. Joseph occupied a small frame building on Fourth street, close to St. Patrick's schoolhouse. In April, 1866, they regularly opened an asylum in a house on Second street, between French and Holland, purchased for the purpose by Bishop Young, and while there they had, generally speaking, care of sixty orphans. Land was purchased in 1870, on Third street, between German and Holland, and in 1871-2 the present commodious brick building was erected at a cost of about $50,000. It is three stories high, with basement, and is heated throughout by steam.

The institution has an average of about 175 orphans, who are tenderly cared for and instructed in the precepts of the Catholic faith, while at the same time they receive the benefits of a common English education. Whenever pupils develop a special talent for music they are instructed in that branch, and all are encouraged to cultivate and practice industrious habits. Ten or a dozen Sisters are connected with the asylum, and perform all of the duties thereof. The institution is supported by the industry of the Sisters, voluntary contributions and an annual collection taken up throughout the diocese. All classes are received, irrespective of creed or color, and the grand work which the Catholic Church is so silently performing for the little ones, under this noble band of Sisters, deserves the highest commendation and the most generous encouragement. Being under the exclusive control of the Catholic Church, the asylum is barred by the Constitution from any bounty on the part of the State.

The noble Sisters have found good homes in families for many helpless waifs, now growing up to careers of honor and usefulness, who, if neglected, might have become moral lepers in society. Sister Eugenia Quirk has been Superior of the asylum since 1880. On August 6, 1895, the asylum has 185 children in charge.

OLD FOLKS' HOME.

Not content with their work for the orphans, the Sisters above spoken of have established at Ash and Twenty-sixth streets a home for aged and indigent persons of both sexes, which is one of the best for its purpose in the country. The building, a large three-story brick, was erected in 1884-'5, and is surrounded by extensive grounds. Its capacity is for about 100 inmates, but the Sisters hope to enlarge the structure in the near future. A number of venerable persons, once in better condition in life, are cared for. The institution, aside from small sums advanced by persons who are admitted, depends solely upon the voluntary contributions of its friends. It is in charge of Sister Jerome, as Superior.

ST. VINCENT'S HOSPITAL.

Another of the very creditable benevolent institutions founded by the Catholic Church was erected in 1874-'5, on a large, dry and elevated piece of ground at the corner of Twenty-fourth and Sassafras streets, overlooking the main portion of Erie and the bay of Presque Isle. It is a handsome three-story brick building, with a high basement. The edifice cost about $7,000, is well furnished, and is in charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph, a number of whom devote their time to the institution. St. Vincent's is open to all classes, irrespective of creed, color or previous condition. It is airy and finely lighted throughout, and fitted with all the modern appliances and furniture needed in such an institution. The hospital was opened for the reception of patients in September, 1875, and soon became popular. Dr. J. L. Stewart was physician in charge until his death in 1890, when he was succeeded by Dr. J. E. Silliman. On the resignation of the latter, he was followed by Dr. C. W. Stranahan, in January, 1895, who is assisted by Drs. Foringer, Hunter and De-laney. All other physicians in good standing have the privilege of treating patients in the institution. The hospital is in charge of Mother Superior Sister Ambrosia. The average number in care of the institution is 121.

Being sectarian in its management, the hospital was deprived of any State appropriation, and had to depend entirely upon voluntary contributions, aside from the limited amount received from patients. This made the cost of supporting it a heavy burden upon the church, and, in order to remedy the difficulty, the Board of Directors was reorganized in 1894, so as to include citizens of various religious faiths. As a consequence, the State granted the hospital a liberal appropriation in the spring of 1895, the first it ever secured.

The hospital has cared for a large number of inmates, about equally divided as to religious belief, and is highly regarded by all who are familiar with its operations.

Hon. W. L. Scott, shortly before his death, placed $10,000 in the hands of Bishop Mullen, with the understanding that it is to be used in building an addition to the hospital. This is soon to be commenced, and pushed to an early completion.

ERIE BUREAU OF CHARITIES.

This popular and useful association was organized on March 18, 1893, with the following officers: President, Mrs. Wm. Brewster; First Vice President, Mrs. Chas. H. Strong; Second Vice President, Mrs. C. M. Briggs; Secretary, Mrs. Frank Kepler; Treasurer, Mrs. F. A. Mizener; Executive Board, Mrs. Geo. P. Griffith, Mrs. F. Burton, Mrs. C. W. Brown, Mrs. H. C. Dunning, Miss Ida Briggs, Miss Julia Crouch and Miss Emma Carroll. Sixty-five ladies were appointed as district visitors, each having several city squares to look after. The rooms of the society are at 609 and 611 French street. Its objects are:

"1st. To systematize and bring into harmonious co-operation the charities and alms-giving of the city of Erie.

"2d. To reduce and prevent pauperism in the city.

"3d. To detect and guard against impostors and unworthy applicants for assistance, street beggars and persons who receive charitable aid from two or more distinct sources.

"4th. To promote by all lawful means social and sanitary reforms and habits of thrift, saving and self-dependence among the poorer classes."

The first active work of the society was done directly after the flood in Mill creek, in 1893 (elsewhere referred to), which called for all of its energy and resources. Its receipts and expenses have been as follows:

Receipts.

From May 17, 1893, to April 17, 1894.....	$9,058.62
From April 17, 1894, to April 23, 1895.....	750.56
Total.....	$9,809.18

Expenses.

From May 17, 1893, to April 17, 1894.....	$ 5,810.87
From April 17, 1894, to April 23, 1895. ...	2,467.32
Total	$8,278.19
Balance on hand April 23, 1895.....	$1,530.99

The above does not include the net receipts from the Elks' Charity Herald, published April 23, 1895, which amounted to $2,420.50.

Miss Emma Brevillier, who followed Mrs. Kepler as Secretary, was, in turn, succeeded in the spring of 1895, by Mrs. F. H. Schutte.

THE NORTHWESTERN PENNSYLVANIA HUMANE SOCIETY

was organized January 10, 1891, and chartered by the Court on the 14th of November, 1892. Below is a list of its first officers: President, F. F. Adams; Vice-Presidents, J. F. Downing, R. J. Saltsman, L. M. Little; Secretary, W. B. Flickinger; Treasurer, Mrs. F. V. Kepler; Attorney, F. A. Billa; Agent, Dr. Geo. W. Bell. The objects of the society are "to protect children, aged persons and the lower animals from cruelty, and to enforce all laws for their protection." The association has done a good work and deserves the hearty support of the public. Dr. Bell served as agent until October 7, 1895, when he resigned. He was succeeded by Dr. R. T. Marks November 14, 1895.

LOCAL BOARD OF PUBLIC CHARITIES.

The object of this organization is to keep an oversight of the alms-house, jail or any institution under the supervision of the State Board of Public Charities, and to call the attention of the latter body to any derelictions in duty on the part of the officers of the same and to any cases of insane persons needing their attention. Its members are appointed by the State Board. The present members for Erie county are Joseph M. Force of Erie and H. G. Sweet of Union City.

ERIE DAY NURSERY.

The Erie Day Nursery was organized October 26, 1892, at the house of Mrs. C. V. Gridley, its object being "to provide at a reasonable charge, shelter, care and instruction for the children of working women, during the hours they are employed elsewhere than in their homes." Its first officers were: President, Mrs. C. V. Gridley; First Vice-President, Mrs. W. T. Black; Second Vice-President, Mrs. John T. Boyd; Secretary, Mrs. Wm. Brewster; Treasurer, Mrs. Chas. W. Davenport, with managers representing the different Protestant organizations of the city. The nursery was originally established on East Sixth street, and has been removed as circumstances required. During the year ending November 1, 1893, the society received $831.29, and during the year ending November 21, 1894, $1,415.26, including a balance of $163.87 on hand, which left a very small sum with which to begin the new year. The nursery is open daily from 6:30 A. M. to 6:30 P. M., and five cents per day is charged for each child. A school was organized March 1, 1894. The charge for membership in the society is one dollar per year, and any person who pays twenty dollars or upward becomes a life member.

In September, 1894, a free kindergarten, with trained teachers, was established, Miss Kate Spencer being Superintendent, and Miss Ophelia Pierce assistant. A kindergarten year consists of thirty-eight weeks, and the age of children admitted is from 3 to 7 years. A kindergarten training class is also sustained, which is organized annually on the 2d Monday in September.

The officers of the association in 1895 were Mrs. Gridley, President; Mrs. Black and Mrs. F. M. Crane, Vice-Presidents; Miss Jennie Pressley, Secretary; Mrs. Dr. Baker, Treasurer.

ERIE EXCHANGE FOR WOMEN'S WORK.

The Erie Exchange for Women's Work was established in 1882, at 129 West Sixth street. The object was to conduct a place where the productions of women's handiwork could be seen and exchanged or sold. Mrs. Addison Leech was President, with Mrs. W. L. Scott, Mrs. General Reed and Mrs. Judge Souther as Vice-Presidents. The Recording Secretary was Mrs. Douglas Benson and the Corresponding Secretary was Mrs. John Fleeharty. A large advisory board and board of managers assisted the principal officers. The Exchange opened April 15, 1882, and closed in April, 1888. During its continuance it did good service in creating a field for women's work.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL.

A charter for a Homœopathic Hospital, Training School and Free Dispensary was granted in 1894, the corporators being twelve well-known physicians. Up to this date the objects of the organization have only been realized to the extent of establishing the Free Dispensary, which is temporarily located in a room on French street, opposite the Reed House.

CHAPTER VIII.

CHURCHES, SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.—[See Chapter XVIII, General History of Erie County.]

PRESBYTERIAN.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

An effort to establish a Presbyterian congregation in Erie was made as early as 1802, but failed of success. The first Presbyterian minister who preached within the city limits was Rev. Johnson Eaton, who had settled at the mouth of Walnut creek, in charge of the Fairview Church. An extract from his journal reads thus: "Preached three months to "the congregations of Erietown, Springfield "and Mill Creek, beginning July, 1803, at "ninety dollars per quarter." After this there is no account of regularly sustained services at Erie for several years. A church was organized in September, 1815, and an engagement entered into with Mr. Eaton to give one-third of his time to the service of the congregation, the remainder of the year being divided between Fairview and North East. Services were then held and for awhile subsequently in the old court-house, which was the general rendezvous for public exercises of all kinds. Judah Colt, a member of the church, and one of its Elders, had erected on Sassafras street, where Wm. Bell afterward resided, a frame building, which was used in part for school purposes. This became the first regular place of worship, and was familiarly known for many years as "the yellow meeting house."

Among the early members and attendants of the church were Judah Colt, Giles Sanford, Thomas Laird, George Kellogg, John Evans, John Grubb, William Arbuckle, George Selden, Samuel Hays, George A. Eliot, Thomas H. Sill, Joseph M. Sterrett, the McClellands, Thomas Rees, Samuel Low, Robert, George and Arthur Davison, Warren and Calvin Foot, Benjamin, Giles and Hamlin Russell, Adam, Joseph and Pressley Ar-

Lowry and Julius Morton. The first elders were Judah Colt and George Selden, sr.

From 1818, for five years, Mr. Eaton gave one-half of his time to the Erie church. He was succeeded October 29, 1824, by Rev. David McKinney, who was ordained and installed as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Erie April 13, 1825. Meantime, a brick church building had been erected on the site of the present structure. The date of its construction was 1824, and it was dedicated September 1, 1825. The pastoral relation of Mr. McKinney was dissolved, at his own request, in 1829, and, on the 29th of September of the same year, Rev. George A. Lyon was installed in charge of the congregation, a position he continued to hold for more than forty years. Under his energetic ministry large accessions were made to the church during 1831-'32, years which were marked by great religious interest throughout the country. In 1857, more than a hundred were received at one time, as the fruits of a revival, and, in 1865, ninety were added in the same manner. At the great division of the Presbyterian Church in 1888, the First Church attached itself to the New School Assembly.

The corner-stone of the present church building was laid on June 14, 1859, but the edifice was not completed until nearly three years later. The basement lecture room was ready for occupancy on March 25, 1860, and was used for the regular services of the congregation until the dedication of the main audience room on February 26, 1862.

The Selden Memorial chapel, a gift from the lamented George Selden, in memory of his wife, Mrs. Anna L. Selden, was erected in 1891, and dedicated in February, 1892, the cost being $15,000, exclusive of the ground and furnishings, which were supplied by the congregation.

A new organ was placed in the church proper July, 1894, at an expense of $8,000.

Rev. Dr. Lyon died on March 24, 1871, at Avon, N. Y., where he had gone for the sake of his health, and was succeeded by Rev. A. H. Carrier, who had been called as an associate pastor a short time previous. The latter began his services April 30, 1871, was installed December 7th of that year, and resigned in the fall of 1879. His successors have been as follows: Part of 1879-'80, Rev. T. C. Easton; fall of 1880, Rev. William S. Fulton; summer of 1889, Rev. J. H. Selden; December 5, 1889, Rev. Herbert C. Ross, the present incumbent. Rev. C. C. Kimball was assistant pastor of the church for a period previous to the death of Dr. Lyon.

At the semi-Centennial Celebration of the church held in 1875, Rev. A. H. Carrier, thus spoke:

"This church—we say it in no self-glorying spirit—has been by force of its position, at the foundation of the present religious life of this city. The Associate Reformed, now the United Presbyterian, shares with it this pre-eminence. This church, however, has been fruitful in colonies. In the organization of the Episcopal Church you meet with many of the same names which you had before met with upon the subscription roll and church records of this congregation. In the organization of the Baptist Church the same fact is in some measure true. * * *

"The church in East Mill Creek or Belle Valley was a child of this.

"Upon the rolls of Park Church, organized in 1854, recorded there as its founders, are the cherished and honored names of many who had been for years in the front rank of supporters and workers here, or who had been baptized at its font, been taught in its Sabbath-school and had grown up under its influences.

"The Central Church, organized February, 1871, was a transplantation at once of officers from its session, an associate pastor from its pulpit, workers from its Sabbath school, and members from its community."

The societies of the church are:

Women's Foreign Missionary Society, organized in 1870.

Women's Home Missionary Society, organized in 1888.

Pastor's Aid Society, organized in 1885.

Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, organized in 1887.

Junior Society of Christian Endeavor, organized in 1892.

The Sunday-school of the church was established in 1825, and has always been well attended. The church maintains a Sunday-school mission in the eastern part of the city.

PARK PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Previous to the spring of 1855 several unsuccessful attempts had been made to establish an Old-School Presbyterian Church in Erie. Park Church dates its commencement in that year. The first service was held in a room in the fourth story of Cadwell's block (now Baker & Osteimer's), on State street, April 29, 1855, by Rev. William Wilson and Rev. S. J. M. Eaton. About thirty persons were present. The next meeting place was in Gensheimer's hall, where, on the 28th of June, 1855, the church was organized by a committee appointed by the Presbytery of Erie. From there the congregation moved into a new building erected by Myron Sanford, expressly for their use, on the east side of French street, between Sixth and Seventh, known as Park Hall, where they remained until the erection of a church building as hereinafter stated. The names enrolled as members were William Arbuckle, S. S. Spencer, D. B. McCreary, Dyer W. Fitch and wife, Mrs. Mary Shattuck, Miss Sarah Ward, Mrs. Mary W. Fleury and Miss Kate M. Mason.

A Sabbath-school was organized on July 15, 1855, with twenty-five or thirty scholars, S. S. Spencer, Esq., being elected superintendent. Rev. William Wilson supplied the pulpit till May, 1856, when Rev. William M. Blackburn was invited to become "stated supply" of the church for one year. Mr. Blackburn began his labors May 25, 1856. The church then numbered only twenty-four members. During the following year the church and Sabbath-school grew rapidly; a large Bible class was organized; the congregation increased; benevolent operations were carried on with regularity and energy. May 27, 1857, Mr. Blackburn was installed pastor of the church, which had increased to thirty-five communicants. During the summer and autumn of 1857 the present house of worship was erected. It was dedicated December 22, 1857, with a sermon by Rev. Frederick T. Brown, of Cleveland, O. In 1858, forty-six persons were added to the church upon a profession of faith—the largest increase, with one exception, which Park Church has yet enjoyed.

Mr. Blackburn resigned after seven years of labor, and on the 22d of February, 1864, Rev. George F. Cain was chosen to be pastor. The call was accepted and Mr. Cain was installed May 11 of that year. At that time there were 127 communicants. In April, 1872, the parsonage on the corner of Sassafras and Seventh streets, was purchased. The year ending April, 1866, ninety-two communicants were added to the church, of whom sixty-eight professed for the first time their faith in Christ.

March 29, 1870, the pastoral relation between Mr. Cain and the church was dissolved, in order that he might accept a call to Philadelphia. The organization at the close of his pastorate numbered 242 communicants. The pastors following Mr. Cain have been as follows, the figures being the dates of their installation: February 8, 1871, Rev. J. O. Denniston; May 28, 1873, Rev. Thomas Fullerton; April 20, 1886, Rev. J. G. Patterson; January 27, 1891, Rev. J. C. Chapman. The latter resigned February 3, 1895, and was succeeded by Rev. B. Canfield Jones in November of the same year.

During Mr. Denniston's pastorate the congregation built a chapel costing over $3,000, at Seventeenth and Chestnut streets, which has since grown into the Chestnut Street Presbyterian Church.

In 1877, while Dr. Fullerton was pastor, the home chapel, fronting on Seventh street, and connected with the main church edifice by a corridor, was erected at a cost of $5,500; largely through the generosity of Elihu Marvin. It was dedicated December 22, 1877, being the twentieth anniversary of the dedication of the church.

The interior of the main building was frescoed in 1882-3, and an organ put in, the entire cost being $9,000.

The church erected a mission chapel in 1889 on Eighteenth street, between German and Parade, the congregation of which is in a flourishing condition. The chapel cost nearly $5,000, inclusive of the land, and the money was wholly contributed by members of Park Church. It was dedicated by Rev. Dr. Patterson, in September, 1889. Connected with the mission is a Sabbath-school and a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, the latter organized in April, 1895. The Sabbath-school was started in 1884, five years before the mission was established.

Mr. Spencer continued as Superintendent of the Park Church Sunday-school—with the exception of two years, when it was under the care of H. S. Jones and C. F. Allis—until 1891, when he resigned and was succeeded by L. M. Little.

Mr. Cain, pastor from 1864 to 1870, after leaving Erie, had charge of churches in Philadelphia, Springfield, O., and Albion, N. Y. He dropped dead in his pulpit at the latter place, in the middle of his morning service, on September 21, 1890.

The first elders and trustees of the church were as follows:

Elders—Samuel S. Spencer, David Agnew.

Trustees—Giles Sanford, Joseph Arbuckle, Ira W. Hart, Wm. C. Curry, J. C. Spencer, John Moore, D. W. Fitch.

From its organization until 1891 the congregation raised for various church and benevolent objects the large sum of $257,436.

The societies of the church are:

Ladies' Aid Society, organized in 1871.

Foreign Missionary Society, organized August 22, 1871.

Women's Home Missionary Society, organized in 1885.

Young People's Christian Endeavor Society, organized in March, 1886.

Junior Y. P. S. C. E., organized July 21, 1895.

CENTRAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This congregation, the second offshoot from the First Presbyterian Church, was formally organized on February 23, 1871, services then and for a brief period afterward being held in Walther's Hall. The original membership consisted of fifty-four persons. David Shirk and Joseph A. French were chosen Elders. Shortly afterward, the church extended a unanimous call to Rev. Charles C. Kimball, which he accepted, and May 11, 1871, was installed by a committee from the Presbytery. After the installation, the regular services of the church were held for two years in Temperance Hall, on the third floor of the present Wayne block, State, near Eighth street.

During the first year of the church's existence a lot on the northeast corner of Tenth and Sassafras streets was purchased for $9,000, and on the 2d of August, 1872, ground was broken for the erection of a stone church edifice. This building was opened for worship Sabbath morning, June 8, 1873, with impressive ceremonies, and formally dedicated on the evening of the same day. The ceremonies commenced with an anthem, followed by prayer and the reading of the twenty-fourth Psalm by Rev. Dr. Stever. The pastor then gave a sketch of the history and cost of the building, after which brief remarks were made by Rev. Mr. Stone, Rev. Dr. Wheeler, Rev. Mr. Grassie, Rev. Capt. Kitwood, Rev. Dr. John H. Vincent and Rev. Dr. Fullerton. The building, as then completed, was designed for Sabbath school purposes, the congregation intending to add a main church structure. It was of Ogdensburg blue limestone, trimmed with Amherst sandstone, and cost about $25,000. Within the first eleven months, the number of communicants was doubled, and in December, 1872, was 157. The Sabbath-school had a similar rapid growth; it was organized in Walther's Hall February 11, 1871, with an attendance of thirty-five scholars. On May 14 of the same year, it removed to Temperance Hall, which was occupied until the completion of the chapel. In less than one year, it reached an average attendance of 227, and contributed for its own purposes and benevolence the handsome sum of $1,069.47.

The chapel building above mentioned burned down on the 27th of January, 1888, inflicting a severe loss upon the congregation. May 22 of the same year a contract was let for a new structure, being the one now in use, which was completed on November 17, 1889, at a cost, inclusive of the organ, of some $42,000.

October 12, 1878, Rev. Mr. Kimball was dismissed from the pastorate, at his own request, to accept a call to a church in Kansas City, Mo. He preached for the congregation until the first Sabbath in November of that year. His successor in the pastorate was Rev. Solon Cobb, of New Bedford, Mass., who was installed on the evening of December 26, 1878. The latter gentleman filled the place until January, 1895, when he resigned to take charge of the Point Breeze Church in Pittsburgh. Rev. Hugh L. Hodge assumed the pastorate October 15, 1895.

This congregation is notable for the unity, harmony and cordial fellowship that have marked all of its meetings and activities. Constant increase of membership at each and every communion season has been as unvarying as the seed time and harvest of the natural world.

The Sabbath school has been under the care of the same Superintendent, Charles C. Shirk, ever since its organization. The church sustains two mission schools: The Central (average attendance 120), on West Fourth street, near Cascade, organized in 1888; and the Glenwood (average attendance ninety-seven), which meets in Fronce's hall, near the southern limits of the city, organized in 1892.

The membership of the church, in August, 1894, was 711, and of the Sabbath-school 556. During the twenty-three years of the church's existence, up to the above date, it had paid out about $226,000 in the different lines of religious work, of which nearly $8,000 were collected in the year 1893-4.

The societies of the church are:

Women's Foreign Missionary Society, organized in 1882.

Women's Home Missionary Society, organized in 1883.

Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, organized in 1887, succeeding the Young People's Union, organized in 1875.

Junior Society of Christian Endeavor, organized January 16, 1895.

CHESTNUT STREET PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A Sabbath-school was opened early in July, 1870, in the house of C. W. Brown, on Eighteenth, between Chestnut and Walnut streets, through the efforts of three lay members of the First Presbyterian and Park Presbyterian Churches. On the first Sabbath but one scholar was present. Two Sabbaths later, the attendance increased to seventy-five, and, as a result, a school was organized in a room fitted up for the occasion near the present house of worship. From this date to the 1st of December following, the school was nominally under the care of the Y. M. C. A., when it was taken under the charge of Park Presbyterian Church. At the end of the first year, the school numbered over 200 members. In order to put in some practical and useful form their quota of the $5,000,000 memorial fund which the Presbyterian Church in the United States had agreed to raise as a thank-offering to God for the cordial re-union of its dissevered branches, the people of Park Church resolved to build a house for this school. A building on the corner of Seventeenth and Chestnut streets, was completed in July, 1871, and dedicated on the 2d of August following.

Rev. J. R. Wilson began to preach in the spring of 1872. A church was organized in January, 1873, and Mr. Wilson was installed as pastor in the next September. He was very successful in his ministry—the church increasing within the first three years from nine to fifty-six members, and the Sabbath-school to 225. Mr. Wilson remained with the church till the summer of 1879, when he resigned to accept the chair of Greek Professor in Parson College, Iowa. He was succeeded by Rev. A. C. Wilson, who was installed as pastor December 30, of that year, and remained until July, 1880. From February, 1881, until June, 1883, the pulpit was filled by the Rev. J. D. Kerr, as stated supply. He was followed in the latter year by Rev. W. J. Hazlett. The latter was succeeded by Rev. J. H. Edwards, who filled the pulpit for three years. In November, 1886, Rev. R. S. VanCleve assumed the pastorate, but was compelled by ill-health to resign in the fall of 1888. Rev. Geo. F. Reichel then served as a supply for fifteen months. In January, 1891, Rev. Mr. VanCleve again assumed charge of the congregation, as acting pastor, preferring that arrangement, for personal reasons, rather than to be formally installed.

A new brick church building took the place of the original structure in 1891, which cost about $10,000. It was dedicated on October 29th of the last named year.

The societies of the church are:

The Ladies' Missionary Society, organized in March, 1879.

The Young People's Literary Union, organized in May, 1883.

The Young Ladies' Missionary Society, organized in June, 1885.

The Pastor's Aid Society, organized in June, 1886.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, organized in September, 1887.

The Aaron and Hur Society, organized in March, 1895.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

About thirty families, members and adherents of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, had settled in Erie and the immediate neighborhood previous to 1811. They were chiefly Scotch-Irish and the descendants of Scotch-Irish, from the counties bordering on the Juniata and Susquehanna rivers. In 1811, the Monongahela Presbytery appointed Rev. George Buchanan (pastor of a congregation at Steubenville) "to preach two Sabbaths in the borough of Erie before the next meeting of Presbytery." Mr. Buchanan filled his appointment, probably in July or August, 1811, and at the next meeting of Presbytery, held September 4, 1811, a petition "for a supply of sermons" was received "from persons residing in and near Erie and Waterford." He returned to Erie county and preached in these places in the fall of 1811.

being accompanied by the Rev. Samuel Weir, a licentiate of the same Presbytery.

At the next meeting of Presbytery, a petition for the moderation of a call in the borough of Erie and at Waterford was presented. Mr. Galloway was appointed to preach in Erie on the third Sabbath of January, 1812, "and preside on the following Monday on that business." The result was, that a unanimous call was made for Rev. Robert Reid to officiate as pastor, which was accepted, and October 21, 1812, Mr. Reid was installed in charge of the churches at Erie and Waterford. The number of members when organized was about seventy. Mr. Reid preached one-fourth of his time in Waterford and the remainder in Erie, until 1841, after which his entire service was given to the work in Erie. April 12, 1813, Archibald McSparren, Thomas Hughes and David Robinson were ordained, and Alexander Robinson installed, ruling elders of the Erie Church, and James Dumars was ordained a deacon. The first communion was held October 29, 1813, and forty-nine members participated.

The congregation at first met for worship wherever it could find accommodation, some times in the old courthouse, some times in a log house on the north side of Fifth street, between French and Holland, and oftener in a log schoolhouse on the corner of Seventh and Holland streets, upon the ground now occupied by school No. 2. A church building was erected in 1816, on Eighth street, a little west of the present building. It was a frame structure, 33x45 feet, and was removed in 1837 to State street, between Eleventh and Twelfth streets. The present building was completed and ready for occupancy in 1837, and the basement was fitted up as a lecture room, etc., in 1862.

An incident which occurred at the distribution of pews in the new church, in 1837, is worthy of record. Rufus S. Reed, whose wife was a member of the church and himself a liberal contributor to its funds and an attendant quite regularly upon its services, came in after considerable progress had been made in the selection of pews. He inquired if there was a pew for him, and he was informed that they supposed that one of the two square pews on each side of the pulpit would be his choice, and that one had been assigned to the pastor and the other reserved for him. He inquired the price, which, when named, was satisfactory. The building committee then said: "Mr. Reed, we owe you about $300 more than your pew amounts to, and we would like to turn the old house over to you for as much of the debt as you can afford to allow for it." He replied: "I will take the house and give you a receipt in full." He sold it, to be removed, for $100, and gave the money he received for it to the Rev. Robert Reid, the pastor, as a present. The basement of the new building, containing lecture room, session room, infant class room, etc., was finished in 1862.

September 12, 1814, seventy-four members communed, and June 9, 1825, 107 members, the greatest number up to that time of any one year. The largest number of new members in any one year, up to 1876, was thirty-seven, which occurred in 1874. In 1866 and in 1872 thirty-one new names were added to the membership. These years of unusual accessions to the church resulted, in 1866, from general interest in religious matters awakened by the efforts of some revival preachers who visited Erie that year; in 1872 and 1874, from earnest work by the pastor and members in prayer meeting held every evening for two weeks before the communion, in July, 1872, and in January, 1874.

The pastors of the church have been as follows: Rev. Robert Reid, installed October 21, 1812—died May 15, 1844; Rev. Jos. H. Pressly, installed August 20, 1845—died November 3, 1874; Rev. J. C. Wilson, the present incumbent, installed May 1, 1876.

Shortly after Mr. Reid became pastor, a Union Sabbath-school was opened. It was held variously in the old courthouse, and in a house on French street, near the corner of Fifth street. Mr. Reid was the Superintendent at first, but some of those interested in the school, from other churches, insisted upon introducing into the school hymns and other matters which Mr. Reid could not approve, and he withdrew. Subsequently he organized a school in his own church, which was discontinued after a few years, and there was no successful attempt to revive it until after the installation of Mr. Pressly. The school opened on the first Sabbath of January, 1846, and the teachers were John Hughes, James E. McNair, James L. Gray, Miss Mary Warren, Miss Mary A.

Lamberton and Miss Elizabeth Reid. Fifty-one scholars were present. During the month, George W. Barr, Edward A. Mehaffey, James C. Reid, George Hughes, Miss Margaret McSparren, Miss Maria Kennedy, Miss Margaret A. Pollock, Miss Celia Miles, Miss Mary Jane Mehaffey and Miss Eliza McSparren were added to the list of teachers. Dr. Pressly acted as Superintendent until 1872.

The societies of the church are:

Women's Missionary Society, organized November 23, 1875.

Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, organized May 31, 1887.

Junior Society of Christian Endeavor, organized February 1, 1895.

Young Women's Missionary Society, organized April 2, 1895.

The parsonage of the church was commenced in the fall of 1876, and occupied in June, 1877.

The mission Sabbath-school, for quite a while under the care of this church, was located on Eighteenth street, east of German, and continued there about five years. After that it was removed to Seventeenth street, midway between German and Parade, being under the direct charge of the congregation for ten years. It was conducted independently of the congregation for a year and a half more, and then handed over to the care of Park Presbyterian Church. The date of the beginning of this school was May, 1874.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

ST. PAUL'S P. E. CHURCH.

The first services of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Erie were held in the old courthouse, in 1826, by Rev. J. H. Hopkins, afterward Bishop of Vermont, and at that time rector of Trinity Church, Pittsburg. The records show that seven persons were baptized by him before the year 1827, but the dates are not given. The organization of the parish was effected at a meeting held at the house of P. S. V. Hamot March 17, 1827. Rev. Charles Smith was appointed rector, and Messrs. Thomas Forster, P. S. V. Hamot, George Miles, George A. Eliot, Tabor Beebe, Charles M. Reed, Thomas Forster, jr., D. C. Barrett, William Kelley, Gilbert Knapp and John A. Tracy were elected vestrymen for the ensuing year. Col. Thomas Forster was chosen Church Warden; Tabor Beebe, Rector's Warden; and P. S. V. Hamot, Secretary to the Vestry. The male members of the original vestry and congregation who were Episcopalians, were Col. Forster and Capt. George Miles. Mrs. Hamot, and perhaps two or three other ladies were members of the church. Several of the men were previously Presbyterians.

At a meeting held on July 22, 1827, Rev. Mr. Smith's resignation was tendered, and accepted December 8, ensuing. Rev. Benjamin Hutchins ministered to the congregation for a few months. It appears from the records of a meeting, December 24, 1827, that Mr. Hutchins had been acting as assistant for Mr. Smith at Erie and Waterford, and that he desired an independent charge at St. Paul's, but without success.

At a Diocesan Convention held in Philadelphia in 1828, an application was made to the Society for the Promotion of Christianity in Pennsylvania for help to the Erie church, which was granted. Messrs. Reed and Wallace, the Erie delegates to the convention, must have found, or heard of, the Rev. Bennett Glover, at Philadelphia, for a correspondence was opened with him July 17, 1828, with a view to his coming as rector. The wardens were instructed "to ascertain from Mr. McConkey his terms for boarding, and, if Mr. Glover will remain here some time, to make the lowest and best boarding terms; also, that Messrs. Kelley and Knapp make a bargain with some person to keep the house clean and ring the bell for church." Mr. Glover was called during the year. A new election of wardens and vestrymen, held at the rooms of Rev. Mr. Glover, November 22, 1830, resulted as follows: Thomas Forster, George Nicholson, Tabor Beebe, John A. Tracy, William Kelley, George A. Eliot, Thomas Forster, jr., Elijah Babbitt, George Miles and Alexander McKee, Vestrymen; Thomas Forster and George Nicholson, Wardens; George A. Eliot, Treasurer; P. S. V. Hamot, Secretary. Thos. Forster, Tabor Beebe, P. S. V. Hamot and Elijah Babbitt were appointed a committee to procure a plan for a church. At the next meeting (December 1, 1830), it was—

"Resolved, That we accept of the purchase made by John B. Wallace, Esq., of James Moore, of Lot No. 1729 at $250, the said Moore subscribing twenty-five dollars, and that the Treasurer be directed to pay fifty dollars and receive the deed and give the bond and mortgage."

The deed for the church lot was made to George A. Eliot, Charles M. Reed and John A. Tracy in trust. Among those making proposals for the building were C. G. Howell and Mehaffey & Hoskinson. B. Tomlinson, John Teel and John Dunlap also submitted bids for parts of the work. The contract for a building was made with Mehaffey & Hoskinson for $3,300, they being required "to use brick from Dunn or Sawtel's yard," and also to "take an account of subscriptions in brick, stone, masonry and lime." The church was duly completed, the slips sold "free of tax," and the debts gradually paid off. An organ was bought and paid for, and a bell weighing four or five hundred pounds. No aid was received from abroad except a subscription from J. B. Wallace, and one of $150 from Rev. Mr. Hopkins.

The church was dedicated by Bishop Onderdonck in 1834. A burial ground west of Myrtle street, between Seventh and Eighth streets, had been previously purchased, and paid for by subscription. A small lecture room was built in the rear of the church in 1836, for use chiefly of the Sunday-school. The school had been organized in the court house, before the church was built, by Mrs. William A. Brown, Mrs. Hamot and others.

The church was enlarged in 1847, and old residents describe the pulpit placed in the building at that time as a curiosity. "It was very high, and the preacher entered it from a flight of stairs opening from the vestry room in the rear. When in it his head was in an arch in the wall, in shape like a brick oven. The altar and reading desk on the top of it remained till the Rev. Mr. Abercrombie had a new desk and altar made. Rev. Mr. Carstensten induced the vestry to abolish the 'three decker' arrangement on taking charge of the parish. A lecture then took the place of the pulpit, and the altar was put in its proper place."

The present stone church edifice, located on the south side of West Sixth, between Peach and Sassafras streets, was completed in 1866, and dedicated in 1869, clear of debt. Its cost was something over $60,000. While the building was in course of erection Sunday services were held in Farrar Hall (now the Opera House), and week-day meetings in private houses.

Rev. Mr. Glover continued to serve the parish on a small salary, with the aid of the Society for the Promotion of Christianity, till his death in 1838, when Rev. P. Teller Babbitt became rector, serving until 1840. He was succeeded by Rev. Henry Tullidge, who continued until 1846. The next rector was Rev. William Flint, who served several years. Rev. Charles Arey succeeded Mr. Flint in January, 1853, and served the parish two years. The vestry not agreeing upon a successor, Bishop Potter sent Rev. John A. Bowman as missionary, who remained as a temporary supply for a year or more. Rev. D. C. Page was rector of the parish for a short time after Mr. Bowman's removal. Rev. James Abercrombie became rector in the summer of 1857, and was followed by Rev. John F. Spaulding April 1, 1862.

Mr. Spaulding was elected Missionary Bishop of Colorado and Wyoming in October, 1873, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Church December 31 of that year. The next rector was Rev. W. H. Mills, who remained until March, 1880, when he resigned to accept a call to St. Paul's Church, Yonkers, N. Y. He was succeeded by Rev. James T. Franklin in April, 1880, who died two years later. Rev. G. A. Carstensten assumed the rectorship July 1, 1882, and remained until 1889. In June of the latter year Rev. John Huske became rector and continued until after Easter, 1893. The present rector, Rev. Edward E. Matthews, was sent here by the bishop of the diocese, to act temporarily, soon after Mr. Huske resigned, and was regularly called to the charge of the parish in October, 1893.

August 11, 1881, St. Paul's narrowly escaped destruction by fire, the south end being damaged to the extent of $10,000. The building was promptly restored and greatly improved. A fine organ was presented to the church at the time by Hon. William L. Scott.

Services are held regularly by the rector of the parent church. A Sunday-school is attached to the mission. Trinity Guild takes charge of the mission services.

Grace Mission.—Established by St. Paul's congregation at Third and German streets has been abandoned. The chapel, erected in 1874, was sold in May, 1894, to the congregation of the Luther Memorial Church, and moved to Tenth and Wayne streets, where it is in use as a mission chapel of the latter body.

A mission under the direction of the rector of St. Paul's Church is maintained at Wellsburg, in this county. It is known as Lundy's Lane Mission, from the name of the postoffice.

ST. JOHN'S P. E. CHURCH.

During the winter of 1866 Rev. J. F. Spaulding, rector of St. Paul's Church, held services once in two weeks, on week day evenings, at the houses of some of his parishioners and of friends of the church in the neighborhood of, and a little south of the depot.

In March, 1867, a parish organization was formed, with David T. Jones, William Nicholson, Samuel B. Barnum, William Bush, R. A. Fancher and A. W. VanTassel as Vestrymen. The vestry elected Rev. J. H. Black, Rector; George Burton and David T. Jones, Wardens; S. H. Metcalf, Secretary, and W. G. Gardiner, Treasurer.

On the 1st of April, 1867, Urban's Hall, on Peach street, was secured, and regular church services and a Sunday-school commenced, which were both continued with increasing interest and attendance during the year. A year later, the parish lost the services of their rector, he having removed from the city. Sunday services were, however, continued by the reading of morning service and a sermon by the wardens. Evening service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Spaulding, of St. Paul's. In May following, Rev. Calvin C. Parker was elected rector, who accepted the call and entered upon his duties the first Sunday in July. The parish was duly incorporated and admitted into union with the convention of the diocese June 2.

In July, plans and specifications were prepared for a church edifice, which was erected on a lot on Sixteenth street, between Peach and Sasfras. The corner-stone was laid on Tuesday afternoon, July 28, 1868, at 6 o'clock, by Bishop Kerfoot, of the Diocese of Pittsburgh.

The building was consecrated June 20, 1871, by Bishop Kerfoot and Bishop Cox, of Western New York, the latter preaching the sermon.

Rev. Mr. Parker remained as rector of the church until September, 1872, and in the following November was succeeded by Rev. S. D. McConnell, who resigned in April, 1874, to take charge of a church in Philadelphia, where he has become one of the leading men in the denomination. The next rector was Rev. S. H. Hilliard, whose term of service began in September, 1874, and terminated in June, 1876. The following August he was succeeded by his brother, the Rev. F. W. Hilliard, who served the congregation until August, 1878. Rev. J. M. Benedict became the next rector, entering upon his duties in February, 1879, and severing his connection with the charge in November, 1881. Mr. Benedict was succeeded in April, 1882, by Rev. L. C. Rogers, whose rectorship extended until July, 1883. The rectors since have been as follows: 1883-5 Rev. W. M. Cook; 1885-92, Rev. Andrew Fleming; 1892-94, Rev. Chas. M. Kimball; 1894, Rev. Henry B. Jefferson; June, 1894, Rev. Geo. Winthrop Sargent.

The societies of the church are:

Parochial Society, organized early in the history of the church.

ST. VINCENT'S P. E. CHURCH.

In May, 1868, under the direction of Rev. J. F. Spaulding, of St. Paul's, a small Sunday-school of six teachers and eight scholars was organized at the public schoolhouse on East Tenth street, near Wayne, and placed under the superintendence of Boyd Vincent, then making preparation to enter the ministry. The neighborhood was thoroughly canvassed for scholars from house to house, and a men's Bible class soon started. In October following, lay services on alternate Sundays, with the reading of a sermon, were begun, and attended by a dozen or fifteen persons. These and the Sunday-school were soon found to be mutually productive of benefit. At Christmas, there was an average attendance in the school of sixty scholars and eleven teachers. Soon after a woman's Bible class was added, and mainly from the members of this and the men's Bible class the attendance at the weekly church services was increased to thirty or forty persons.

About this time the work was given fresh character by assuming the name of "The Cross and Crown Mission." By May 24, the first anniversary of the school's organization, the average attendance of scholars was eighty. In June, the lay services were superseded by an afternoon clerical service by Rev. Mr. Spaulding.

From the beginning the expenses of the mission had been partly met by the contributions of the members themselves, though they were mainly defrayed by donations from St. Paul's Sunday-school and from a few interested friends, as also by subscriptions in the mother parish. But, in October, 1869, only eighteen months after the mission was started, the number of adult members in the congregation and Bible class was such that they spontaneously proposed and proceeded to make the work actually self-supporting, although still formally connected with St. Paul's parish. In November, the original Superintendent being called from the city, William T. Smith was elected to fill the place.

In January, $217 had been raised by subscription for the purchase of a cabinet organ and a small library, and soon after steps were taken for the erection of a chapel. Out of five lots generously offered for the purpose, that of William M. Watts, of Carlisle, situated at the corner of Twelfth and Ash streets, was accepted. The corner-stone of a building was laid in July, 1870, and in February, 1871, the edifice, ready for use and free from debt, was consecrated. The building cost $4,000, of which $800 were contributed by the members of the mission, and the balance by members of St. Paul's parish.

In July, 1872, Rev. Boyd Vincent, as assistant minister of St. Paul's Church, was placed in charge of the work at the Cross and Crown. The same month the church was admitted into union with the convention of the diocese as an independent and self-supporting parish, Mr. Vincent becoming its full rector. His rectorship of the charge was dissolved in the spring of 1874, he going to Pittsburg, from which city he was elected to be Bishop of Southern Ohio.

His successor was Rev. Bernard Schulte, who remained until June, 1876, when he was followed by Rev. S. A. McNulty, whose stay with the church was less than one year. In July, 1877, Rev. John Graham became rector and served for a period of two years. The pulpit was then vacant for some months. In January, 1880, the next rector, Rev. W. H. Rogers, entered upon his duties. The term of his rectorship lasted until August, 1881, from which time until April, 1882, the church was without a rector. At the date last named, Rev. L. W. Rogers became the rector and remained until July 1, 1883. The rectors since have been as follows: 1884, Rev. Robert H. Neide; 1884 to '88, Rev. David Moer; 1888 to '93, Rev. Wm. Price; 1893 to date, Rev. Wm. Johnson.

The name of the church was changed to St. Vincent's in August, 1894, when it became an incorporated body.

The societies are:

The Ladies' Parochial Society.

The Young People's Guild.

The Altar Guild.

On the evening of November 22, 1895, arrangements were perfected for the consolidation of St. John's and St. Vincent's parishes into one organization, to be known by the latter name, and to be under the joint charge of their respective rectors, Revs. Wm. Johnson and Geo. W. Sargent. Vestrymen were chosen as follows: D. T. Jones, J. S. Scobell, L. F. White, A. A. Aldrich, of St. John's; and Walter Nunn, James Gaskell, John Burgess, J. H. Bennett and George Gardner, of St. Vincent's. D. T. Jones was chosen Senior Warden, Walter Nunn Junior Warden, and J. H. Bennett Secretary. A new church building is to be erected, and the two old ones disposed of. The new organization comprises 165 communicants from St. Vincent's and 180 from St. John's.

ST. ALBAN'S P. E. CHURCH.

This, the latest Episcopal organization, was established as a mission in February, 1894, under the lead of Rev. H. B. Jefferson, rector in charge. A charter was granted in September, 1894, and the following executive committee chosen: Geo. P. Colt, President; John A. Beebe, Treasurer; Reed Caughey, Secretary; George Burton, Frank L. Armstrong, Charles D. Herron, A. A. Freeman, John Fleeharty. The present rector, Rev. Wm. Wirt Mills, was called in February, 1895. Meetings were held in 1894 in the Jewish Synagogue. On March 17, 1895, Mr. Mills began services in the old Board of Trade rooms in the Exchange building, which had been fitted up for the purpose. The church, which is ritualistic in its services, was admitted into union with the Diocese of Pittsburgh in 1894.

The societies are:

St. Helen's Guild, organized in 1894.

St. Mary's Guild, organized in 1894.

The choir provides the music on Sundays, and the acolytes assist the priest at the altar. A singing school for girls and a crayon class for boys are maintained by the congregation. The Sunday-school was established at the same time as the church.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

*FIRST M. E. CHURCH.

As detailed at length in the General History of Erie county, meetings of the Methodist Episcopal denomination were held in Erie by circuit preachers at long intervals, commencing in 1801. Worship took place in the winter of 1810 and 1811 in a tavern on the west side of French street, between Sixth and Seventh. A congregation seems to have been partially established soon after the beginning of the century, but no regular permanent organization was effected until the year 1826. Rev. Samuel Gregg, in his "History of Methodism within the bounds of Erie Conference," thus alludes to the church at Erie in 1826: "Erie, Pa., was a flourishing village in which, though Methodist preaching had frequently been enjoyed by the people, no permanent organization had been made until this year. Mr. James McConkey and wife, members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore, moved to Erie to reside; and Mr. David Burton and wife attended the meeting at Harbor creek, and were there converted, and invited Mr. Knapp to establish an appointment in Erie, and the same winter a class was formed composed of the above-named persons and a few others. Mr. McConkey was appointed leader, and soon after secured to the church the lot on Seventh street, on which their first church was subsequently built; the cost was $300." The Mr. Knapp referred to was Rev. Henry Knapp, who was in charge of North East Circuit. He died in Wesleyville, May 20, 1827, and his final resting place is in the rear of the Methodist Episcopal Church in that village.

The ministers who traveled the circuit, of which the First Church constituted an appointment from 1826 until 1830, were Revs. Nathaniel Reeder and E. Stevenson, in 1826; Revs. Job Wilson and J. W. Davis, in 1827; Revs. J. W. Davis and J. Jones, in 1828; Rev. S. Ayers and W. C. Richey, in 1829. In 1830, the appointment was on Erie Circuit, which was formed that year. The preacher in charge was Rev. J. S. Barris, with Rev. A. C. Young as his colleague. Mr. Barris' salary was $167. December 26, 1830, at the close of a meeting in the court-house, a subscription paper was circulated to raise money to pay the preacher. For the support of the preachers on Erie Circuit in 1833, the First Church subscribed fifty-five dollars. From 1830 until 1834, the circuit riders were, in the year 1831, Revs. J. P. Kent and A. Plimpton; 1832, Revs. J. Chandler and E. B. Steadman; 1833, Revs. J. Chandler and S. Gregg.

Erie charge was made a station in 1834, and the appointment given to Rev. E. P. Steadman, which he did not fill, and the church was supplied. During the following year the church officers were as follows: Trustees, James McConkey, E. N. Hulburt, John Richards, David Burton; Stewards, James McConkey, E. N. Hulburt, Daniel B. Large, James Thompson; Class Leaders, James McConkey, David Burton and James Thompson.

The pastors of the church since 1834 have been as follows: A. G. Sturges, 1835; R. A. Aylworth, 1836; J. W. Lowe, 1837-38; B. K. Maltby, 1839; J. J. Steadman, 1840; A. Hall, 1841; A. M. Brown, 1842; D. Smith, 1843; Calvin Kinsley (afterward Bishop), 1844-45; Lester James, 1846; T. Stubbs, 1847-48; E. Jones, 1849; S. Gregg, 1850-51; J. W. Lowe, 1852; Hiram Kinsley, 1853; J. E. Chapin, 1854-55; W. F. Wilson, 1856-57; D. C. Wright, 1858; G. W. Clark, 1859; J. D. Norton, 1859; J. Peate, 1860-61; D. C. Osborne, 1862-64; E. A. Johnson, 1865-67; A. S. Dobbs, 1868-69; E. J. L. Baker, 1869; W. W. Wythe, 1870-71; A. Wheeler, 1872-73; W. W. Ramsay, 1874-76; J. D. Adams, 1877-78; D. H. Muller, 1879-81; A. N. Craft, 1882-83; W. H. Pearce, 1884-85; Lucien Clarke, 1886-87; N. Luccock, 1888-93; H. A. Cleveland, 1893 to 1894; S. D. Hutspiller, October, 1894, to date.

In 1838-39 a frame church building was built on Seventh street, and, at the close of the conference year, 1839, the first official meeting was held in "Wesley Chapel." In 1844, the annual Conference was held in this house, and the church had so increased that it was found necessary to enlarge the building, which was done at an expense of $1,300. In 1851, a parsonage was built, and, in the year following, a committee was appointed to select a place in the city for a second church. The committee organized a Sabbath-school in South Erie, out of which grew Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church.

The second and present house of worship is located on the southeast corner of Seventh and Sassafras streets. It is constructed of brick, and was erected in 1859-60, at a cost of $14,000. The architect was H. M. Wilcox, and the building committee, William Sanborn, James S. Sterrett, J. Hanson, John Burton, J. B. Johnson, William C. Keeler and A. A. Craig. The building was completed and dedicated November 14, 1860, Bishop Simpson officiating.

The Sabbath-school was organized in the conference year, 1829-30, with E. N. Hulburt as Superintendent. The first corps of teachers was: Miss Mary Converse, Miss Mary Coover, Thomas Richards, Peter Burton, Thomas Stevens, Miss Amanda Bowers, Rebecca Watkinson, Francis Dighton and John Dillon. The school was held originally in a small one-story frame building on East Fourth, between French and Holland streets. It has been superintended by H. A. Strong for many years.

The church maintains the Brown's avenue mission on Poplar street, between Nineteenth and Twentieth.

The organizations connected with the church are:

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, organized September 5, 1874.

Ladies' Aid Society, organized in October, 1884.

Woman's Home Missionary Society, organized April 16, 1886.

The Thoburn Club, organized April 19, 1890.

The Epworth League, organized in October, 1890.

SIMPSON M. E. CHURCH.

In the early part of the winter of 1858, a meeting of eight weeks was held by the pastor of the First church, Rev. W. F. Wilson. It was wonderfully blessed, nearly a hundred being added to the church, quite a number of whom resided in South Erie. The brethren of the last named locality, feeling that meetings could be held with profit there, besought the pastor to organize a class, which he did, and appointed Heman James the leader. Messrs. Janes, Goodrich and Oliver had secured a lot and erected a building for a select school on Sassafras street, opposite the Nicholson place, where the class could meet for prayer meetings or social worship. The number of members thus associated was twenty-five. Soon after a Sunday-school was organized with sixty-three attendants, Capt. Thos. Wilkins being its first superintendent. The school-house continued to be the main rallying place till the new church was built, when it was moved on to the church lot, and became part of the parsonage. Before this the brethren and friends of the new church began to consider the propriety of building a chapel. A board of trustees was organized, composed of Thomas Wilkins, Heman Janes, Emanuel Goodrich, Alvin Thayer, A. K. Miller, E. J. Ames and Adam Acheson.

In the meantime, the lot where the present church building and parsonage stand, at the corner of Twenty-first and Sassafras streets, was purchased by Capt. Thomas Wilkins and Heman Janes on their personal responsibility, for the sum of $500, and they held it in reserve to await the demands of the church. A subscription paper was circulated and sums were pledged, some of the largest being as follows: Thomas Wilkins, $300; E. Goodrich, $200; Dr. Dickinson, $100; A. Acheson, $100; A. Yale, $100; Jacob Hanson, $100; H. Janes, $500; in all about $1,600. This was the situation when the Annual Conference came in 1858. Mr. Wilson having filled a two years' pastorate, was succeeded by Rev. D. C. Wright. Soon after Bishop Simpson, whose health was impaired, visited Erie, spent some days here, and, learning the conditions in the city, bade the brethren and friends in South Erie God speed. Having secured a subscription to justify, on August 3, they let the contract, and the work began in earnest. The building was completed in 1859, was dedicated by Bishop Simpson on June 19, and named Simpson Church in his honor. The street on which it faced was also long known as Simpson street, as a mark of the good will felt by the people of South Erie toward the eloquent and famous bishop. The church was a mission until 1866, when it became self-supporting.

The regular pastors of the church from its organization to the present time, with their term of service, are given below:

1860-61, W. P. Bignell; 1861-62, R. M. Warren; 1862-63, R. M. Warren; 1863-64, A. C. Tibbitts; 1864-65, J. H. Tagg; 1865-66, J. H. Tagg; 1866-67, J. H. Tagg; 1867-68, D. Prossor; 1868-69, F. H. Beck; 1869-70, A. N. Craft; 1870-71, A. N. Craft; 1871-72, R. N. Stubbs; 1872-73, R. N. Stubbs; 1873-74, Among others who preached in South Erie before the organization of the church were Revs. Clarke and Norton.

The parsonage, adjoining the church, was built in 1859, and improved in 1889.

The societies of the church are:

Rev. Henry Sims was elected Superintendent of the Sunday-school in October, 1874, and re-elected annually until including the year 1886. He resigned in July, 1886, and was again elected January 1, 1894, and 1895, being the present incumbent of the position.

A new church building, of brick and stone, was erected in 1893-4, costing $25,000, which is one of the handsomest and best arranged in the city. The Sunday-school and church each have a membership of 250.

TENTH STREET M. E. CHURCH.

Measures looking toward the organization of a third Methodist Episcopal Church in Erie were taken during the year 1866. A subscription of $3,000 was raised and two lots donated, provided the church was built within five years. It was not, however, until August 30, 1871, that the movement passed into the actual stage. Rev. R. F. Keeler was appointed by the Erie Conference of that year pastor of the Erie City Mission, with an assisting appropriation of $550. The Young Men's Christian Association in September following gave him permission to preach in their rooms on Eleventh street, east of Parade, and soon after resigned their Sunday school into his hands. On the 8th of October of the same year a class was formed of nine persons, consisting of Seymour Torrey, Leader; John S. Grove, Sarah A. Grove, M. F. Hope, R. Hare, A. Speckman, Mary Thompson, Charles N. and Rose W. Wheeler.

At a joint meeting of the official boards of the First and Simpson Churches, held on September 25, 1871, a building committee for the Mission was appointed, consisting of Revs. W. W. Wythe, R. N. Stubbs, and R. F. Keeler; also of S. P. Ensign and S. P. Longstreet, of the First Church; T. H. Thurber and R. F. Gaggin, of Simpson, and J. S. Grove, W. H. Demming and H. Davis, of the Mission. A site on which to build a church having been purchased, the Mission began to take steps toward the erection of a house of worship. Subscriptions for a church were secured in 1872, but the edifice was not erected until 1873. The corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies, May 15, 1873, by the Presiding Elder, D. M. Steever, assisted by Revs. J. Tribby, R. F. Keeler and others. The building was completed, and opened for divine worship October 19, 1873, and was dedicated January 25, 1874. It stands on Tenth street, north side, between Wallace and Ash. In 1893 extensive additions and improvements, costing $2,300, were made to the church.

The pastors have been as follows, their terms of service dating from September of each year: 1871, R. F. Keeler; 1872, W. W. Wythe; 1873, R. A. Caruthers; 1874, D. M. Steever; 1875, R. M. Gwynn; 1876, W. G. Williams; 1877, William Martin; 1878-79, W. M. Martin; 1880-81, P. A. Reno; 1882-84, J. H. Herron; 1885, W. W. Wythe, 1886-90, J. L. Stratton; 1891, J. C. Scofield; 1892-96, E. M. Kernick.

A prosperous Sunday-school is supported.

The societies of the church are:

Ladies' Aid Society, organized early in its history.

Senior Epworth League, organized October 18, 1892.

Junior Epworth League, organized July 15, 1894.

The parsonage, which adjoins the church on the east side, stood on the premises when the lots were purchased. The value of the church property is estimated at $12,000.

WAYNE STREET M. E. CHURCH.

This congregation was organized on the 18th of August, 1889. A church building was erected at Wayne and Twenty-second streets in 1890, and a parsonage in 1893. An incendiary fire on the night of June 18, 1895, destroyed the church, inflicting a serious blow to the young congregation. The corner-stone of a new edifice was laid October 22, 1895. The church maintains a prosperous Sunday-school. Rev. Henry Sims was in charge when the congregation was established. He was followed by Rev. Mr. Dobson for one year, by Rev. A. H. Bowen for two years and by Rev. L. H. Eddlebute for two years. Rev. A. A. Horton, the present pastor, assumed charge in September, 1894.

The church societies are:

Epworth League, organized in October, 1891.

Ladies' Aid Society, organized in October, 1892.

Junior League, organized November 17, 1894.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH ALLIANCE OF THE CITY OF ERIE

Was organized December 11, 1888. It embraces members of the churches above named. "Its object is to unite the M. E. Churches of the city, and to plant mission churches and Sunday-schools wherever the same can be done."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CONFERENCES.

The city has been honored twice within a few years by being selected as the meeting place of the Erie Conference of the M. E. Church—first, in September, 1885, and second in September, 1895.

ST. JAMES AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH.

Fifty years ago or more efforts were made to promote the spiritual welfare of the colored people in Erie by the establishment of a separate place of public worship. In organizing a congregation, differences of faith or of tenets were manifest, culminating in the foundation of two congregations, and the erection of two places of worship. The Wesleyan M. E. Church was built on Third street near the corner of Chestnut, and the African M. E. Church on the corner of Third and German streets. Both churches languished, and finally the idea of a distinct place of worship was abandoned by the colored people.

The A. M. E. congregation was reorganized as St. James' Church in 1875. Their place of worship was for a time on French street, near the park. Soon after the formation of the new society they came into possession of their present church building, which then stood on Sixth street, near Holland. The church was a partial gift by the Young Men's Christian Association. It was dedicated by Bishop Wayman, of Pittsburg, May 19, 1878. In 1881, the society secured a lot on Seventh street, between German and Holland, where the building was moved soon afterward. In connection with the church is a Sunday-school with an average attendance of forty.

The only association connected with the church in August, 1895, was the Y. P. S. C. E., organized in February, 1895, with the following officers: President, Chas. Franklin; Vice-President, Rose Rector; Recording Secretary, Anna Powers; Corresponding Secretary, Elizabeth Elmendorf; Treasurer, Florence Vosburg.

The pastors have been Revs. Wheeler, Phillips, Ross, Herbert, Griffith, Russell, Palmer, Purrell, Brown, Till, Pride, West and Wallace. The latter assumed charge in the fall of 1895.

BAPTIST.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

Among the converts at the great revival held in the First Presbyterian Church, in the spring of 1831, were a number of persons of Baptist faith or in sympathy with the views of that denomination. These met together and organized the First Baptist Church of Erie, which was recognized by a Council called for the purpose on the 10th of April, 1831, having the following constituent members: By letter, Rev. E. Tucker, D. D., pastor; Mr. and Mrs. Orin N. Sage, E. D. Gunnison, Mrs. Soule, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs. Fross, Miss Williams; by baptism, Otis G. Carter, Rowe B. Rood, Charles T. Sage, Miss Julia Berry, Miss Penelope Mann, Miss Lillie A. Soule, Miss Sophia E. Gunnison and Miss Zilphia B. Ciley. The meetings were held in the Academy building and in the court-house, until the first church edifice was erected, in the year 1833, on the northwest corner of Fifth and Peach streets. It was a substantial brick building, having galleries. In 1865 the structure was rebuilt or rather repaired and improved, the rear of the house was extended, the tower built, the galleries removed, etc., and other improvements made at a cost of $10,000 or $11,000. The re-dedication services took place on the 14th of December, 1865, Rev. Dr. Strong, of Cleveland, Ohio, preaching in the morning, and Rev. Dr. Robinson, of Rochester, N. Y., in the evening. Other improvements have since been made, especially in 1895, which add to the comfort and convenience of the congregation.

The following is a list of the pastors of the church: Rev. E. Tucker, D. D., April 10, 1831; Rev. William H. Newman, March 24, 1832; Rev. Charles Morton, November 2, 1833; Rev. Ried S. Witherall, December 3, 1836; Rev. James A. Keyes, April 1, 1837; Rev. A. W. Baker, January 3, 1837; Rev. LaFayette Baker, June 1, 1838 (died April 2, 1839); Rev. Ira Corwin, January 1, 1840; Rev. Mr. Haskell, January 1, 1843; Rev. Joel Johnson, April 1, 1843; Rev. Zebina Smith, October 1, 1844; Rev. J. K. Barry, May 1, 1846; Rev. H. Silliman, August 1, 1848; Rev. Charles Sherman, March 23, 1851; Rev. Gilbert L. Stevens, January 1, 1853; Rev. J. W. Hammond, September 18, 1856; Rev. William Haw, December 18, 1858; Rev. Mr. Glanville, October 20, 1861; Rev. J. L. Hays, January 13, 1863; Rev. William F. Bainbridge, June 1, 1865; Rev. A. W. Tousey, December 1, 1868; Rev. C. H. Harvey, December 1, 1869; Rev. E. A. Stone, August 1, 1872; Rev. A. J. Bonsall, June 22, 1875; Rev. William Gilkes, June 18, 1879; Rev. E. T. Fox, July, 1884, to December 31, 1887; Rev. J. C. Thoms, 1888 to 1892; Rev. H. C. Hall, present pastor, from July, 1892.

The following persons have been ordained by the church:

LaFayette Baker, June, 1838; David J. Lloyd, September 12, 1838; William F. Bainbridge, December 15, 1865; Rev. John Stryker, 1894.

The following have been licensed by the church:

O. N. Sage, July 7, 1833; D. J. Lloyd, April 16, 1835; LaFayette Baker, June 3, 1837; Thomas Mozley, January 3, 1846; George W. Gunnison, March 3, 1848; George Whitman, December 9, 1866; C. A. Gardner, 1878; V. B. Fisk, 1894.

Under the pastorate of Mr. Bainbridge the church was visited by a gracious revival, when some 200 members became identified with it. Another revival, led by Mr. Gilkes, resulted in fifty accessions. The Sabbath-school of the church was started at an early date, and is well attended.

The congregation maintains three missions, besides having been instrumental in founding the church at Wesleyville, the Second Baptist Church of Erie (originally known as Faith Mission), and the Swedish Baptist Church, on West Seventeenth street.

North Star Mission, on the south side of Sixth street, near East avenue, was established September 25, 1864, largely through the labors of W. J. F. Liddell and Mrs. Eliza Crane. The building was erected on a lot donated by Hon. James Sill, and dedicated May 26, 1867. A great revival originated within this structure in the winter of 1865-6, which spread throughout the city.

Hope Mission is at the corner of Seventh and Cascade streets. It was organized in May, 1887 or 1888. The chapel and parsonage were dedicated September 11, 1892. Among the founders of the mission were J. W. Reed, W. W. Harper, Edward Barry and P. Harlan. Mr. Reed was the first superintendent of the Sunday-school.

The Wallace Mission is on the north side of Eighteenth street, between Poplar and Liberty. It was established in 1887, and its building was first occupied on November 25 of that year.

The societies of the First Church are:

Women's Foreign Missionary Society, organized 1875.

Ladies' Social Union, organized January, 1891.

Baptist Y. P. U. of Christian Endeavor, organized April 14, 1892.

Baptist Musical Association, organized January 1, 1894.

Young People's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, organized April, 1895.

Junior Baptist Y. P. U. of Christian Endeavor, organized July 18, 1895.

The First-German Baptist Church is an outgrowth from the First Baptist Church, having been started largely through the efforts of W. F. J. Liddell and John Gorr.

SECOND BAPTIST CHURCH.

This church, at the corner of Reed and Twenty-third streets, was organized and recognized as the Second Baptist Church on June 27, 1891. Previous to that it had been known as Faith Mission of the First Baptist Church. The congregation was incorporated July 26, 1893. The first pastor was Rev. Jesse Boswell, and the present one is Rev. J. H. Lowe. The Ladies' Aid Society was organized May 11, 1893, and the B. Y. P. U. of Christian Endeavor on August 8, 1895. The Sunday-school was in existence previous to the mission, having been started by Philander Edson and Rev. Mr. Thoms on December 1, 1888.

FIRST GERMAN BAPTIST CHURCH.

This church was organized in Judson Hall, on Peach street, by Rev. A. Van Puttkammer, in October, 1861. It started with twenty-two members, and a Sunday-school numbering from thirty to thirty-five scholars. In July, 1863, Rev. Anthony Hensler was chosen pastor. A church was erected in 1864 on Seventeenth street between Peach and Sassafras, which was dedicated on the first Sunday in July of that year. During the spring of 1866, the congregation built a parsonage back of the church. In May, 1865, Mr. Hensler accepted a call from Attica, N. Y. In June, 1865, Rev. John Eisenmenger was chosen pastor, and was ordained in the fall of the same year. During his stay, about thirty-five persons were added to the church upon profession of faith. In August, 1868, Mr. Eisenmenger accepted a call to Canada. The same month, the church called Rev. Adolf Ginins, who was ordained a few months after. During his stay, fifteen persons were added to the church. In October, 1871, he accepted a call to Scranton, Pa. He was succeeded by Rev. Henry Kose, in December, 1871. The latter remained four years, and was succeeded by Rev. C. Martin, until 1879, and by Rev. G. Koopman, until April, 1883.

The pastors from that date have been as follows: Rev. D. Zwink from 1888 to 1886; Rev. P. Rech, from 1886 to 1887; Rev. D. Kester, from 1888 to 1891; Rev. G. A. Schneider, from 1893 (present incumbent).

The societies of the church are as follows:

Ladies' Mission Society, organized about 1861 or '62.

Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, organized in 1894.

A lot at the southeast corner of Twentieth and Sassafras streets was purchased in January, 1892, at a cost of $3,000. The church and parsonage on Seventeenth street were sold in 1894, and a handsome brick building, with parsonage attached, completed during the spring of 1895, on the lot last mentioned, costing about $12,000. The new church was dedicated on Sunday forenoon, June 15, 1895, with impressive exercises.

The congregation also own a house for the sexton, on the north side of the church.

SWEDISH BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Swedish Baptist Church was organized in March, 1895, under the ministration of Rev. Wm. Kohler. It numbered thirty-seven members at the time of organization. The congregation meet in the former building of the First German Baptist Church, on Seventeenth street, between Peach and Sassafras.

LUTHERAN.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CHURCH.

The records of this venerable church go back to the beginning of the century. Adherents of the Lutheran Church were among the first settlers of Erie county. They were mostly Pennsylvania Germans from Berks, Lancaster and Dauphin counties, and include such well-known families as the Riblets, Browns, Stoughs, Ebersoles, Gingrichs, Zimmermans and Weigels. When the first services were held is not known, but it was by a traveling missionary, Rev. Mr. Muckenhaupt, who, from 1808, did pioneer work among the Lutherans in Erie and Crawford counties, with Venango as his headquarters. The first baptisms are recorded August 17, 18, and 19, 1808, when twenty-four children were baptized. Rev. Muckenhaupt was succeeded by the well-known, scholarly Rev. P. W. Colsen, who was sent in 1816 as a missionary to the northwestern counties of the State by the Evangelical Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania. Rev. Father Heyer, the pioneer missionary of the Lutheran Church of this country to India, took up the work, when Rev. Mr. Colsen succumbed, December 28, 1816, to sickness contracted while on one of his missionary tours to Erie. After Father Heyer's departure, Rev. Messrs. Ruppert and Meyerhoeffer looked after the Lutheran congregation at Erie. In 1820, the first class of cate-chumens, eight in number, was confirmed. From 1822 to 1829 there are no records, but the congregation was probably served as before, by the traveling missionaries from Crawford county. During the period from 1831 to 1832, Rev. Mr. Schulz attended to the spiritual wants of the body. He was succeeded in 1832-33 by Rev. Mr. Heilig, the first resident Lutheran pastor at Erie, and he in turn by Rev. Messrs. Thanke and Beyer.

On January 1, 1835, the congregation was reorganized, and a constitution adopted, with 100 male charter members. Rev. C. F. Stohlmann, D. D., later a prominent Lutheran divine of New York city, was elected pastor. He served with great success from 1835 to 1838. Up to 1835 the congregation worshipped in the schoolhouse on Federal Hill. In that year it was decided to build on a plot of five acres, which was given to the congregation by Conrad Brown, sr., as his share toward the building fund. This land is still in possession of the congregation. A frame church costing several thousand dollars was completed during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Kuchler (1838-'44), who founded the congregations at Fairview, Girard and McKean. In 1843 the charge reported 430 communicants.

The frame church was superseded in 1861 by a brick structure seating 1,000 persons. It was built at an expense of $10,000, and furnished with a pipe organ costing $3,500. This edifice became too small during the pastorate of the late Rev. A. L. Benze, to whose efforts the present prosperity of the congregation is largely due. The building was therefore enlarged and beautified at a cost of $23,000. The present parsonage was built in 1868. During the pastorate of the present pastor, Rev. G. A. Benze, the Mission property on Twenty-second street, near East avenue, was acquired and a chapel erected at an outlay of $3,500.

From 1844 the following pastors have been in the service of the church: Rev. F. P. Feysel, 1845-48; Rev. C. G. Stuebgen, 1848-53; Rev. F. W. Weiskotten, 1853-54; Rev. C. A. Bröckmann, 1855-59; Rev. Jacob Blass, 1859-63; Rev. W. Schaefer, 1863-65; Rev. G. Beck, 1865-67 (died while pastor); Rev. C. F. Boehner, 1867-72. April 7, 1867, the late Rev. A. L. Benze took charge. During his pastorate of nineteen years he exerted a wide influence over a large portion of Erie county, and the congregation grew to be the largest Protestant organization in the city. At his death, January 18, 1891, he was one of the most beloved pastors in Erie. His son, Rev. G. A. Benze, A. M., the present incumbent, was elected as his successor, and assumed charge February 15 of the same year.

Although the mother church of several others, the church still has a communicant membership of 1,200, with 900 children in the two Sunday-schools. Its property is valued at $87,000. The records, though incomplete, show 5,336 baptisms from 1808; 1,413 weddings from 1839, and 2,100 funerals from 1845.

The following societies are connected with the church:

Ladies' Society, membership 300, organized about 1878.

Young People's Union, organized in 1879, membership 235.

Teacher's Union, membership eighty-five, organized about 1879.

St. John's Society, membership 200, organized in 1860.

Work was commenced September 18th, 1895, upon an addition to the church building, which is expected to cost some $20,000.

LUTHER MEMORIAL CHURCH.

This church was organized on the 15th of August, 1861, by Rev. J. H. W. Stuckenberg. The church officers first chosen were Samuel M. Brown and Henry Gingrich, elders; John T. Brown and Henry Werther, deacons. The original membership numbered forty-one. The first place of worship was in a school-house in South Erie, on Peach street, near Twenty-sixth. Here the congregation continued until the completion of a frame building located on the southwest corner of Peach and Eleventh streets, which was dedicated on the day before Good Friday, 1864. The ground upon which the building stands was deeded to the Council of the church, June 18th, 1862, for the consideration of $1,200.

The old building becoming unsuitable for the purpose of the congregation, was sold and removed to West Nineteenth street, where it does duty, in two or three parts, as abodes for private families. The present handsome brick edifice, on the same site, was dedicated on June 5, 1887. It has been much improved since. The pastors of the church have been as follows: 1861-65, Rev. J. H. W. Stuckenberg (who, however, served a portion of that period as chaplain of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, during which time the pulpit was supplied); 1866-71, Rev. J. L. Smith; 1872-74, Rev. J. R. Groff; 1874-80, Rev. H. H. Bruning; 1881 until the present date, Rev. Isaac O. Baker. Mr. Baker preached for the congregation during the summer of 1880, but did not assume the pastorate until June 12, 1881.

The church supports a mission Sunday-school at Tenth and Wayne streets, known as Grace Mission. It occupies the old building of Grace Mission of the Episcopal Church, which was bought and removed to its present site. Another mission, known as Zion's, is maintained at Poplar, between Nineteenth and Twentieth streets. Zion's Mission was established in March, 1890, and Grace Mission in November, 1893.

The societies of the church are as follows: Ladies' Working Association, organized in May, 1882.

Little Helpers, organized in July, 1888.

Mission League, organized in October, 1891.

Luther League, organized in July, 1893.

Rev. Mr. Fry was called to the charge of the Mission service in November, 1895.

GERMAN EVANGELICAL TRINITY LUTHERAN CHURCH.

In the fall of 1881, Erie was visited by the ministers of a conference of the Eastern District of the Missouri Synod at the request of several resident Lutherans of this city, for the purpose of establishing a mission. They continued their visits here for a period, preaching on each occasion of their coming, until in December of that year, a congregation composed of five members was formed, by Rev. John Sieck, of Farnham, N. Y., and a call sent to the Rev. H. Sieck, of South Bend, Ind. This call also embraced the missionary field of Northwestern Pennsylvania and Western New York. Mr. Sieck was installed April 23, 1882, and at once commenced his labors. A house was rented on the corner of Sixth and Myrtle streets, and was fitted up both for a pastor's residence and place of worship. This was used until the fall of the same year, when a lot on Eleventh, between Myrtle and Chestnut streets, was purchased and the frame building now standing there was erected at a cost of about $1,000. It was dedicated December 3, 1882. The property on which the parsonage stands was purchased in August, 1885.

Rev. H. Sieck remained until May, 1886. He has been succeeded by the following pastors: Rev. C. Morhart, July 18, 1886, to September 4, 1892; Rev. C. Ruppel, December 17, 1892, to December 9, 1894; Rev. Geo. Johannes, present incumbent, from January 15, 1895. The congregation numbers 135 to 140 members.

The societies of the church are:

Ladies' Aid Society, organized by Mrs. H. Sieck, Mrs. John Kuppler and Mrs. J. Reinhard, about 1882.

Concordia Society, organized by Mrs. Ferdinand Herhold, E. H. Reinhard and Mrs. E. H. Reinhard in 1884.

The church is attached to the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church in America, which started in 1845 with thirteen ministers. It now numbers 1,500, representing all the States of the Union, Canada and part of Germany, with between 600,000 and 700,000 communicants. The Erie Church belongs to the Eastern District, which embraces all of the New England States, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Virginia and Maryland.

A prosperous Sunday-school is connected with the church, which was started about the time of the original organization. The church added a fine organ in September, 1895.

SWEDISH EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN BETHANY CHURCH.

This church, which has its location on Tenth street, near German, was organized in 1885, and erected its building in 1890. The value of the edifice is placed at $4,000. Its creed is Evangelical Lutheran, and it belongs to the New York Conference of the Augustana Synod. The church numbers about 150 communicants, and the Sunday-school, organized in 1891, has some fifty or sixty pupils. Rev. C. S. Renius, the first settled pastor, still retains that position. The church publishes a monthly tract in the Swedish language. In this connection it may be stated that there are about 1,200 Swedes in Erie county, who rank among the most industrious and peaceable citizens. The church societies are:

Sewing Society, organized in 1885.

Young People's Society, organized in November, 1891.

Sick Aid Society, organized in 1892.

EMANUEL EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH,

The youngest Lutheran congregation in the city, was organized November 13, 1892. The church building at German and Twenty-third streets, was erected in 1893. Rev. H. K. Müller has been pastor since the organization of the congregation. The parsonage, at 319 East Twenty-third street, is his personal property. It was built the same year as the church. The Sabbath school was organized October 8, 1892, and the Women's Society in February, 1893. The congregation maintains a mission on Twenty-fifth street, near Penn avenue, which was established in October, 1893.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

ST. PATRICK'S R. C. CHURCH.

Years before the erection of any building, services of the Catholic Church were performed by missionaries, who occasionally visited Erie in order to give the few Catholic families then residing in the place an opportunity to practice their religion. As far back as 1837, the Rev. Father McCabe officiated as pastor, the house on German street occupied as a dwelling by John Sullivan being owned and used as a church by the English-speaking Catholics. As there are no authentic records to show the progress of this church, a space of some years will have to be passed over until 1844, at which time Father R. Brown undertook a work which, considering the circumstances and poverty of his small congregation, was looked upon as no small task, viz.: the building of St. Patrick's church, on Fourth street, between French and Holland. Father Brown remained in charge five years—long enough to see the building of which he laid the foundation inclosed. He was succeeded by Father Reynolds, under whose ministry the building was completed. Father Reynolds remained about one year, and was succeeded by Rev. Joseph F. Deane, who remained in charge of the congregation until Erie became an Episcopal See, and the building a pro-cathedral church.

In 1853, the thirteen counties now belonging to the Diocese of Erie were taken from the Diocese of Pittsburg, and Rt. Rev. M. O'Conner, then Bishop of Pittsburg, was transferred to the newly-erected See of Erie, and became its first Bishop. He governed the Diocese of Erie about one year, and was again transferred to Pittsburg. Rt. Rev. J. M. Young was appointed to succeed him, and on April 23, 1854, took charge of the diocese. Rev. Father Deane was pastor of the church until Bishop Young's coming to Erie. Immediately after the new Bishop took charge Rev. William Pollard was appointed pastor, and after his time the list of priests included Rev. Thomas Malone, Rev. Charles McCallion, Rev. William Lambert, Rev. John Berbequi, Rev. J. O'Connor, Rev. Father Kenny and Rev. Father Tracy. Father Tracy continued some five or six years, when he was appointed to the Clearfield church, and the Very Rev. John D. Coady, Vicar General of the Diocese, was placed in charge of the congregation. Father Coady remained until the oil regions rose into importance and called him to that field. He was succeeded by Rev. Father Carroll, who is well remembered for his efforts in the cause of temperance. It was he who founded the Father Mathew Society, which worked wonders among the people of his nationality.

Bishop Young died September 18, 1866, at the Episcopal residence adjoining the church. His funeral cortege contained nearly 10,000 people, who sadly followed the remains to the grave. Bishop Young was born at Sanford, Me., in August, 1808, ordained a priest in 1837, and consecrated Bishop of the Diocese of Erie in 1854. Very Rev. John D. Coady, V. G., was appointed administrator, and for nearly two years governed the diocese.

On the 2d of August, 1868, the present bishop, Rt. Rev. Tobias Mullen, of Pittsburg, was consecrated and took charge of the diocese, making his official home in the building which had been occupied by Bishop Young, on Fourth street, adjoining St. Patrick's Church.

Father Thomas A. Casey became pastor of St. Patrick's congregation in 1869, and continued in that relation until his transfer to St. Peter's Cathedral, in October, 1893. From 1869 to 1875, he was assisted by Rev. James A. McCabe; from 1875 to 1877, by Rev. E. J. Murphy; from 1879 to 1880 by Rev. J. J.

Calligan; and from 1880 to 1890, by Rev. William Dwyer, who was given charge of St. Andrews' in the latter year. Father Dwyer was succeeded by Rev. John P. McCloskey, who was first assistant until September, 1893. Revs. B. J. Raycroft, Thomas Graham and A. B. Mechura, acted as second assistants for a short period during 1890. They were succeeded by Rev. S. E. Aaron until October, 1893. On the latter date Rev. Hugh Mullen was appointed pastor, with Rev. P. McGovern as assistant. They served until November 20 of the same year, when Rev. P. M. Cauley, the present pastor, received his appointment. January 1, 1894, his brother, Rev. Joseph M. Cauley, was appointed assistant.

The following are the societies of the church:

St. Vincent de Paul Society, organized in 1862.

Father Mathew Total Abstinence Society, organized in 1866.

Rosary Society, organized in 1868.

The Sodality of Young Ladies, organized in 1808; reorganized in July, 1894.

Children of Mary, organized in 1882.

Third Order of St. Francis, organized May 21, 1891.

The Temperance Cadets, organized August 15, 1894.

St. Patrick's Branch, No. 12, C. M. B. A., organized March 25, 1879.

St. Patrick's Branch, No. 145, C. M. B. A., organized May 31, 1895.

Branch No. 10, L. M. C. B. A., organized March 5, 1890.

In March, 1894, extensive improvements were undertaken, both on the exterior and interior of the church. They were completed by May of the same year, at an outlay of about $5,000.

St. Patrick's Auditorium, a beautiful pressed brick structure, with white stone trimmings, was commenced March 19, 1895. The foundation alone cost $4,000. The contract price for enclosing the superstructure was $14,734. This institution, when completed, will be thrown open to the general public. It will be fitted up with a large gymnasium, a spacious auditorium, meeting rooms, reading room and library, and will be under the direction of an experienced instructor, who will devote his time to the physical and intellectual training of young men from 6 to 9 every evening. The building occupies a full city lot, running from Fourth to Fifth street, fronting on both streets. Part of the outer wall of this structure was blown down, during a severe gale, early in the forenoon of November 26, 1895, causing a loss to the contractors of some $2,000.

St. Patrick's parochial school was established in 1863. The building in which it is held, on Fourth street, between Holland and German, was erected in 1865. It is in charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph, and has an average attendance of 400 children. A Sunday-school is also maintained by the church.

ST. PETER'S R. C. CATHEDRAL.

The pro-cathedral building on Fourth street (St. Patrick's) having become too small, it was decided by Bishop Mullen to build a new edifice, which should be the cathedral church of the diocese. A lot was purchased at the northwest corner of Tenth and Sassafras streets, one of the choicest locations in the city. Ground for the new structure was broken in February, 1873, and the cornerstone was laid on St. Peter's day, August 1, 1875, with the largest demonstration of a religious character the city of Erie had witnessed up to that date. Mass was first celebrated at St. Patrick's pro-cathedral, after which the procession, composed of numerous societies of Erie, Meadville, Corry, Union City and other places, and a large concourse of people, proceeded to the site of the building, where the ceremonies were conducted by Rt. Rev. Tobias Mullen. An address was delivered in English by Bishop Mullen, and one in German by Rev. Father George Meyer, of Meadville.

The building was not completed until August 2, 1893—more than twenty years after its commencement—when it was formally dedicated as St. Peter's Cathedral with exercises of a very interesting nature.

The Cathedral is gothic in style and of massive and imposing appearance. The famous C. C. Keely, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was its architect. It is constructed of Medina, N. Y., red sandstone, trimmed and ornamented with white sandstone, in part from Amherst, Ohio, and in part from Mercer county, Pa. The Cathedral is 220 feet in length, and 112 wide at the transepts. The main portion of the building is eighty-five feet wide and the height of its ceiling in the center aisle is seventy-five feet. Its towers are solid stone from base to top. The main one of the three is surmounted by a copper cross, gilt, eleven feet high. The distance from the street to the top of the cross is 265 feet. The seating capacity of the Cathedral is 2,500. Its cost to September 1, 1895, was $250,000.

Adjoining the Cathedral, on the north, is a handsome three-story Episcopal residence, of pressed brick, trimmed with stone, which is occupied by the bishop and priest who officiate in the Cathedral.

The institutions attached to the Cathedral are: St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum and St. Vincent's Hospital, an account of which will be found in another chapter.

The societies of the Cathedral are as follows:

St. Vincent de Paul Society, for the relief of the poor, organized in 1893.

Rosary Society, organized at St. Patrick's Church in 1868.

St. Peter's Branch, No. 20, C. M. B. A., organized March 12, 1892.

Young Ladies' Sodality, organized in September, 1893.

Branch No. 7, L. C. M. B. A., organized March 5, 1890.

Branch No. 49, L. C. M. B. A., organized April 17, 1892.

At the opening of the Cathedral, Rev. Father Casey, Vicar General, was appointed rector, with Rev. John McCloskey and Rev. S. E. Aaron as his assistants. Upon the death of Father Casey, Father Aaron became rector, and Rev. F. J. Bender assistant rector. These priests are assisted by Rev. Hugh Mullen, who is also in charge of St. Ann's congregation.

In March, 1894, the Bishop purchased a large piece of land on Eleventh street, between Peach and Sassafras, upon which a school building for the Cathedral congregation is to be erected. The contract for the building was let September 24, 1895, at $15,570.

It may be of interest to add in this connection that Bishop Mullen was born in Tyrone, Ireland, in 1818, and consecrated to the charge of the Erie Diocese August 2, 1868 (see General Church History). Very Rev. Thomas A. Casey, late Vicar General, was born in St. Catherine's, Canada, son of James Casey, the well-known Erie contractor. He was ordained a priest in 1869, appointed Vicar General December 25, 1880, and died February 9, 1894. In November, 1894, Rev. P. J. Sheridan, of Clearfield, was appointed to succeed him as Vicar General.

ST. MARY'S R. C. CHURCH.

As far as can be ascertained, the first German family of the Catholic faith to locate in Erie was that of Wolfgang Erhart in 1830. Others of this nationality soon followed, and these families conceived the idea of uniting in a congregation in 1833, when mass was said by Father Mosquette in a log house which stood on the northeast corner of State and Tenth streets, belonging to Mr. Erhart. The following year the same missionary father, accompanied by Rt. Rev. Francis Patrick Kenrick, Bishop of Philadelphia (to which diocese Erie then belonged), again visited this people. Services that year were held in a frame house which was also the property of Mr. Erhart, on the northeast corner of French and Fourth streets. The Bishop confirmed a number to whom the sacrament had not yet been administered. In 1837 the congregation, as it may now be called, bought a lot on the south side of Ninth street, between Parade and German, and built a small frame church, where St. Mary's edifice now stands. At the next visit of the Bishop to Erie, arrangements were made which led him to send the first pastor for the German Catholics of the city, Rev. Ivo Levitz, of the Order of St. Francis. On his voyage to America, Father Levitz had, during a severe and threatening storm, promised that the first church he would have the happiness of blessing in America should be dedicated to the "Blessed Mary conceived without sin." As his field for missionary labor contained a church already built but not yet blessed, Father Levitz on the 2d day of August, 1840, with the consent of the members of the young congregation, dedicated it as St. Mary's Church. He also blessed the graveyard adjoining the church, on the present site of St. Benedict's Academy.

In 1841, Father Levitz was succeeded by Rev. A. Steinbacher, who, after a short term, was followed by Rev. R. Kleineidam. Rev. P. Frederick Brønner, of the Carmelite Order, was the fourth pastor, succeeded in 1847 by Rev. John Evang Mosctzh. The latter, in 1848, was succeeded by Rev. Nicolas Haeres, who in the same year handed over the pastorate to Rev. N. Steinbacher, S. J., who built an addition to the church and bought grounds for a graveyard on West Twenty-fourth street.

The next pastor was Rev. F. J. Hartmann, afterward of St. Joseph's Church. The frame church, though enlarged, was insufficient for the growing congregation. It was difficult to decide what action to take, as the members were generally poor. The clear-sighted pastor perceived that to build on a small scale would only be providing for a few years. In consequence, he undertook and successfully accomplished a task which, at the beginning, seemed too burdensome for the small congregation; it was the building of the grand St. Mary's Church as it now stands on Ninth street. It was put under roof in 1854, and dedicated in 1855, and was then the finest church edifice in Erie. In 1873, some $7,000 were expended in improving both the interior and exterior, the former being nicely frescoed in blue and gold, the columns marbled and their caps heavily gilded, elegant gas fixtures introduced, and a new altar, handsome in design, placed therein. One of the exterior attractions was the addition of an expensive piece of statuary over the main entrance. Since then the church has been largely added to and improved.

Father Hartmann, with the consent of the Bishop, transferred the charge in 1858 to the Benedictine Fathers of St. Vincent's Abbey, who have since retained it. So numerous have been the fathers of this order who have ministered to the spiritual wants of the congregation, that it is impracticable to name them.

The pastors and assistant pastors since 1882 have been as follows:

Pastors—Revs. Amandus Kramer, S. Demartean, Emilian Wendel, Lambert Kettner, Paulinus Wenkmann and Cassimer Elsesser, the present incumbent, who has held the position since September 7, 1892.

Assistant Pastors—Revs. Boniface Wintner, Isadore Fuesel, Emeran Singer, Wilfred Frins, Adolph Robrecht, Cyril Rettger, Macarius Schmitt, Marinus Ferg, Celestini Englebrecht and Alto Heer.

The congregation numbers over 3,000 persons.

A prosperous Sunday-school and a large parochial school are supported. The boys of the parochial school are taught by four Brothers of Mary, and the girls by the Benedictine Sisters of St. Benedict's Convent.

The first parochial school in connection with St. Mary's Church was opened by Rev. Father Steinbacher in 1850, in a small frame building, long since removed. In 1855, after the present brick church edifice was completed, Father Hartmann fitted up the old wooden church building for school purposes. In 1866, largely through the efforts of Rev. Father Benno, the large three-story brick building on Tenth street, between German and Parade, was erected. The average attendance of children is 600.

Connected with the church are the following institutions and societies:

St. Mary's Priory, Benedictine Monks, established in 1859. Building erected in 1870; added to later.

House of Brothers of Mary.

St. Benedict's Convent, organized June 21, 1856; building completed in 1861.

St. Benedict's Convent gives a home to fifty-six sisters of that religious order.

ST. JOSEPH'S R. C. CHURCH.

This congregation dates from the year 1855, when a number of Catholic families in what is now the southern part of the city, built a small schoolhouse by subscription on the north side of Eighteenth street, between Peach and Sassafras, to which they sent their children for an education. Religious services were held in this building occasionally, conducted as a rule by priests from St. Mary's Church. In due time a parish was regularly organized, which was placed in charge of Rev. Joseph Stumpe. The first church building, a frame structure, was built in 1866, on Twenty-fourth street, south side, between Peach and Sassafras. Father Stumpe's successors in the pastorate have been Father John B. Kuehn, Father E. J. Reiter, S. J., Father Mink, Father J. A. Oberhofer and Father Bernard Kloecker, the present incumbent. The assistant priests have been Fathers Deckinbrook, Frank, Hasse, Hartmann and Kloecker. Two of the pastors of the church have died while in its service, viz.: Father Reiter, on May 5, 1873, and Father Oberhofer, on January 16, 1880. Father Kloecker assumed charge directly after the death of Father Oberhofer.

The corner-stone of the present splendid church was laid on July 2, 1882, and the building was dedicated on October 2, 1887, having cost about $45,000. Its architect was C. C. Keely, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the same gentleman who planned St. Peter's Cathedral.

St. Joseph's parochial school was started, as above stated, before the congregation was regularly organized. A school building adjoining the church was built in 1866. After the new church was finished the old church structure was taken for school purposes, and continues to be used as such. The school occupies seven rooms, and is taught by the Sisters of St. Joseph. It has an average attendance of nearly 400 pupils.

The societies of St. Joseph's Church are: St. Joseph's Mutual Relief Society, organized June 11, 1865.

St. Alphonsus' Relief Society, organized October 18, 1868.

The Rosary Society for Married Women, organized in 1866.

The Young Ladies' Society.

St. Joseph's Branch, No. 9, C. M. B. A., organized February 17, 1879.

Branch No. 96, L. C. M. B. A., organized December 10, 1891.

ST. JOHN'S R. C. CHURCH.

This congregation was formed late in the year 1869. The first baptism recorded bears date January 1, 1870. The first pastor was

Rev. Bernard Mauser, O. S. B. The church building, on Twenty-sixth street, between Wallace and Ash, was built in 1869-70, and dedicated on the 28th of August, 1870. A parsonage adjoins the church; also a large schoolhouse, all built at the same time. The former was enlarged in 1877. Father Mauser was succeeded March 19, 1873, by Rev. E. A. Reiter, S. J. From March 19 to May 4, 1873, this charge and St. Joseph's were together. The present pastor, Rev. Father M. J. Decker, assumed the position May 4, 1873, when the church became an independent charge, and has ever since sustained that relation.

The parochial school of St. John's was established on Twenty-sixth street in 1870. A large two-story brick building was erected south of the church in 1887, in one of the finest locations in Erie. It is under the care of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

The church societies are:

St. John's Benevolent Society, organized October 23, 1870.

Ladies' Rosary Society, organized September, 1873.

The church celebrated its silver anniversary with imposing exercises on Sunday, August 25, 1895.

A new brick and stone church building is in contemplation.

Rev. Father Deitrich was appointed assistant to Father Decker during the summer of 1895.

ST. ANDREWS' R. C. CHURCH.

The English-speaking Catholic people residing in the western part of the city were formed into a parish, under the name given above, by Rev. Father J. A. McCabe, in the summer of 1871. A frame church was erected, which was dedicated July 16, 1871, by Rt. Rev. Tobias Mullen. It stands at the corner of Sixth and Raspberry streets. The pastor's residence, adjoining the church, was built in 1874.

After a service of nearly twenty years, Father McCabe was succeeded, in January, 1890, by Rev. Wm. F. Dwyer, the present pastor.

The church societies in September, 1895, were as follows:

The Rosary Society, established May 23, 1873.

Portuguese Trinity Society, established May 31, 1874.

St. Andrews' Branch No. 25, C. M. B. A., established August 20, 1883.

ST. STANISLAUS R. C. CHURCH.

This congregation, composed almost entirely of Polish people, was organized in 1833, and immediately entered upon the erection of a church building at Wallace and Thirteenth streets. The corner-stone was laid by Bishop Mullen October 10, 1884. When the edifice was partly completed, in the winter of 1884-'85, the building was wrecked by a severe wind-storm. Not to be discouraged, the congregation raised money for a new structure, which was finished in the summer of 1885, and dedicated in September, of that year. Rev. Father Ignasiak, who still remains the pastor, reached Erie August 21, 1886, and at once assumed the leadership of the congregation, it being his first charge. A frame parsonage was erected under his supervision, in 1887.

When the church was started it embraced about eighty families. Within five years it had increased to more than 300. The original church was found too small for their accommodation and preparations were made for a larger building. The old church was moved in 1894 to an adjoining lot, and a new edifice started on the original site. Of this, the foundation walls are now constructed, and it will be erected by degrees, as the money is raised for the purpose. The structure will be of brick, with stone trimmings, having two towers, each 150 feet high, will cost about $50,000, and will be one of the handsomest churches in the city. Its seating capacity will be 1,200. The corner-stone of the new church was dedicated by Bishop Mullen on Sunday afternoon, September 21, 1895.

Henry Sherk

The pastoral residence was burned on February 8, 1895, and promptly replaced by a fine brick building.

St. Stanislaus parochial school started September 1, 1888, with an attendance of sixty scholars, and has now an average of more than 325. Prof. John Nowak became principal in 1888. He is assisted by three other teachers, Felician Sisters from Detroit, Mich.

Connected with the church is a hall for literary entertainments and amusements, which was built in 1891.

The societies of the church are:

The Sacred Heart Benevolent Society, organized September 22, 1885.

The St. Stanislaus Benevolent Society, organized in 1889.

The Matki B. Cz. Benevolent Society, organized in 1893.

ST. MICHAEL'S R. C. CHURCH.

October 28, 1883, the corner-stone of St. Michael's Catholic Church, a fine brick structure on Seventeenth street, between Cherry and Poplar, was laid with imposing ceremonies. The church was dedicated in September, 1885. The first pastor Rev. James Lachermaier, still serves in that capacity. The parochial school was first opened December 1, 1885. It occupies pleasant quarters and is in charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

OTHER DENOMINATIONS.

GERMAN ST. PAUL'S EVANGELICAL CHURCH.

The German St. Paul's Evangelical congregation was organized in December, 1850. Rev. H. F. Hartmann was installed as the first pastor. In its incipency it comprised twenty members, who had separated from the German St. John's Lutheran Church in all amity. These energetic Germans decided to erect a church at a cost of $4,000, in the year following (1851), which was subsequently known among the public as the "brick church." The church belongs to the German Evangelical Synod of North America, of the New York District, of which the present pastor, Rev. Val. Kern, has been President for six years. He has labored for the church more than nineteen years. Under his administration an addition to the church was built in 1879, at an expense of $7,000. The rededication took place on June 13, 1890. A parsonage was added in 1882, which cost $3,600. The year 1893 saw the congregation able to erect a beautiful Sunday-school chapel, at a sum aggregating over $10,000. Beautiful ornamental windows of the best quality will soon be added to the decorations of the church.

The congregation consists of 130 voting members and 380 families. The Sunday-school has an average attendance of 400 children. The Ladies' Society, working in the interest of home missions and various charitable objects has a membership of 118. It was organized in December, 1858. The Young People's Society, with about 150 enrolled members, was organized in 1891. It is a strong influence in behalf of the welfare of the church and the advancement of Christian life among its members.

The names of the pastors of the church from its organization are as follows: Rev. Mr. Hartmann, December 1, 1850, to April 15, 1852; Rev. C. Gshling, December 5, 1852, to February 22, 1856; Rev. W. Hasskarl, April 14, 1856, to April 14, 1857; Rev. Z. Faber, June 10, 1857, to February 21, 1858 (died); Rev. F. R. Ludwig, March 21, 1858, to June 1, 1859; Rev. J. W. Semler, March 15, 1859, to June, 1869 (died); Rev. J. Keller, September 1, 1869, to November, 1871; Rev. E. Young, December 1, 1871, to May 6, 1876; Rev. Val. Kern, May 30, 1876, until the present.

The German Evangelical Synod of North America was organized in 1840 with seven ministers. It now numbers between 800 and 870 preachers and over 1,100 congregations. The New York district embraces forty-seven ministers and fifty-eight congregations. The one above described is the only congregation in Erie county that is attached to the district and synod.

ANSHE CHESED HEBREW REFORMED CONGREGATION.

August 12, 1853, some eight or ten persons of the Hebrew faith formed themselves into a congregation, and met for religious services in the Lyons property, on the corner of Fifth and French streets, occupying a room up stairs. Among these were Moses Koch, the first Hebrew person to settle in Erie (about 1845), Isaac and John Rosenzweig, I. W. Neuberger, Jacob Koch, H. Meyer, B. Baker and Henry Frank. Their first Rabbi was Mr. Weil, who was engaged in 1861 and remained with the congregation about one year. He was succeeded by Rabbi M. Wurzel, whose term of service in all (he having twice ministered to the congregation), extended over a period of about fourteen years. The succeeding Rabbis have been Revs. Fuld, Fleugel, Brandes, Stephe, Levi, Farber and Rosenau, the present incumbent. The several places of worship have been (other than the one above named), on Holland, between Eighth and Ninth streets, in Metcalf block on State street, and in Becker's block on French street; thence to the synagogue of the congregation on the north side of Eighth street, between Myrtle and Sassafras. This latter was erected in 1882, at a cost of $13,000, including the ground upon which it stands. The foundation stone was laid by Mr. B. Baker, the first President of the congregation and one of its oldest members. The congregation hold regular services every Friday and Saturday.

The societies are:

Ladies' Hebrew Auxiliary Aid Society, organized in 1888.

Ladies' Temple Aid Society, organized more than fifteen years.

The Willing Workers (a children's organization).

A Sabbath and Sunday-school are maintained by the congregation, of which Jacob Ostheimer, J. Strauss and M. Schaffner are the board of managers.

UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.

This church was organized April 2, 1878, at the house of John Reed, with a membership of twenty-two persons, by the Rev. John Hill, who was then preaching in the city, in the house of worship now owned by the denomination. In August, 1879, the property was purchased by the newly organized church. The building, which had been used as a Presbyterian mission, stands at the corner of Tenth and Cherry streets. The church struggled for a long time under a load of debt, from which it was finally freed in 1895.

The church has been served in succession by the following pastors: W. W. Pringle, W. Kingsley, J. A. Thomas, S. Evans, W. Rittenhouse, E. F. Amy, Owen O. Wiard, D. H. Christy and J. C. Sims, the present pastor.

The Sabbath-school had forty-five enrolled scholars in 1895.

Myron Tyler, 1890 to 1895; and the present incumbent, Rev. Henry Crampton, who assumed charge March 1, 1895.

The Sabbath-school has had for its superintendents, Herman Eldridge, 1888 to 1893, and A. B. Kendall, 1893 to date.

FIRST UNIVERSALIST CHURCH.

The first meetings of this society in Erie were held at the old court-house in the year 1842, conducted by the Rev. John Gifford. The regular organization was effected about two years later. The present church structure, situated on the north side of Ninth street, between Peach and Sassafras streets, was erected in 1844, upon ground given to the society by Judge John Galbraith. Among the early members were Henry Cadwell, William Beatty, John Dodge, Clark and Wenlock McSparren, Porter Warren and John Galbraith. Mr. Gifford was followed by the Rev. A. G. Laurie, of Edinburgh, Scotland, who entered upon his duties in November, 1846, and filled the pulpit until April, 1849. Next came Rev. John Campbell, who was succeeded by the Rev. G. B. Maxham. He was followed by Rev. J. E. Forrester, whose pastorate extended over a period of about one decade. In the year 1865 the Rev. Mr. Laurie again became pastor and remained ten years. Rev. A. A. Thayer was pastor for five years, beginning in 1876. His successor was Rev. H. A. Westall, of Cambridge, Mass., whose pastorate began in April, 1882. The pastors since then have been Rev. L. D. Fisher, who occupied the pulpit about a year; Rev. C. A. Knickerbocker, who came in September, 1889; Rev. Margaret Brennan, who began in 1891, and Rev. Howard McQueary, whose ministry in Erie commenced in December, 1893. The latter closed his pastorate on Sunday, October 27, 1895.

The Sunday-school is held in the church parlors, and there is a vigorous Young People's Christian Union, organized in 1891. The Ladies' Aid Society, one of the main supports of the congregation, was established in 1876 or '77.

SALEM EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

In the year 1833, the Rev. J. Seibert, who subsequently became a bishop, came to Erie county as a missionary of the Evangelical Association to preach to the Germans of this locality. In after years, Revs. E. Støvers, D. Brickley and J. Nøcker, ministers of the Association, labored here with more or less success. A number of Germans residing in Erie and vicinity were moved by these visits, and the families of J. Steele, S. Zinn, P. Fendenheim and A. Scheurer united with the Evangelical Association.

In 1836 the Rev. J. Boos, as preacher in charge of the Erie circuit, visited this little flock, which, under his ministrations, was increased by the addition of Conrad Doll and wife. The following year Rev. H. Bucks was appointed to the Erie circuit charge, under whose superintendence the several families were organized into a class, with Philip Fendenheim as their leader. In 1838 Rev. H. Bucks was succeeded by Rev. J. H. Jambert. Further accessions to the class were the families of M. Doll, J. Goepfert, F. Stoll and others. The following year Rev. P. Wagner was appointed to the circuit, who was succeeded in 1840 by Revs. P. Goetz and C. Augenstein, the circuit then embracing the counties of Erie, Crawford and Mercer. The former remained two years, and the latter but one, when Rev. J. Schaefer became the colleague of Mr. Goetz. In 1842 these gentlemen were succeeded by Revs. A. Niebel and C. Lindner, and they in 1843 by Rev. Samuel Heiss.

Up to this date the services were held alternately in the dwellings of C. Doll, P. Fendenheim, and latterly almost exclusively in that of Mr. Doll. During the year 1843 the congregation erected a small frame church on Fourteenth street, between Peach and Sassafras. In 1849 a parsonage was built adjoining the house of worship. Subsequently a lot was purchased on the corner of Peach and Twelfth streets, and in 1854 the church building and parsonage were removed to it. This building became too small for the increasing congregation, and the little frame structure gave way in the year 1868 to the present brick edifice, which stands on the same lot, and was erected at a cost of $7,000. It was considerably changed and improved in 1881-2, and a brick parsonage took the place of the original one in 1883, which latter cost $2,800.

Up to the year 1849 the society at Erie was connected with the Erie circuit, saving a short period; but in the year following (1850), by action of the Conference, the city was separated therefrom and taken up as a mission. The charge at Erie remained a mission for a number of years, but was again attached to the adjoining circuit, with which it remained until 1861, when it became a separate charge.

Among the pastors of the church since Mr. Heiss have been Revs. P. Hahn, P. Wist, J. Rockert, J. Nicolai, C. G. Koch, I. G. Pfeiffer, A. Niebel, G. W. Fischer, P. Schnilly, J. Reihm, W. Schmitt, J. Bernhart, A. Staehly, C. F. Harting, M. Zirkel, H. W. Hampe, J. Dick, D. J. Honecker, Thomas Luhr, J. Lany, G. F. Spreng, G. Nerstecher, H. Wisgand, George Goetz and Ernest Koehne, present incumbent. Under the early rules of the Association, a minister could not remain in one charge longer than two years; this has been changed so that the limit is three years.

The societies of the church are:

Women's Society, founded about 1875.

Ladies' Orphan Society, founded about 1875.

Young People's Alliance, founded in 1891.

THE NEW CHURCH.

This is an organization based, in the belief of its members, "upon the Divine Revelation made through Emanuel Swedenborg, who was thus the herald of the Second Coming of the Lord, which took place with the completion of that revelation, June 19, 1770."

Its first adherents in Erie county were among the families of Knodel, Mohr, Evans, Rau, Metzler and Stearns of Erie and vicinity, commencing about 1850. The only resident pastor ever in Erie county was Rev. Mr. Goodner, who removed in 1873. A new organization was effected in 1875, by the present Bishop, Rt. Rev. W. H. Benade, and regular pastoral visits were made by the Bishop's assistant, Rev. L. G. Jordan, of Philadelphia. Meetings are held at houses of members. The present secretary in Erie is Dr. Edward Cranch, 109 West Ninth street,

CHURCH OF CHRIST (THE TABERNACLE).

The first preaching services of this congregation were held at Jarecki's Hall, January 27, 1889. An organization was completed March 3, 1889, with Rev. E. L. Frazier as pastor, and thirty-six charter members. The first action of the church, as an organized body, was a collection for foreign missions, amounting to $10.00.

Meetings were held regularly at the above hall, each "Lord's day" until January 12, 1890, when their church building was dedicated, a lot for which was purchased from the Teel estate during the year 1889. The building is known as "the Tabernacle," and stands on the west side of Peach street, between Ninth and Tenth.

Mr. Frazier remained as pastor until January 1, 1892, and was succeeded by Rev. B. H. Hayden, who continued until January 1, 1895. Rev. A. B. Chamberlain, the present pastor, took up the work on the latter date. The membership in October, 1895, was 162.

A Ladies' Aid Society, composed of members of this religious body, was organized August 17, 1886. It grew into a Sunday-school on East Eighteenth street, beyond Peach. This became a "Bible school" April 8, 1888, and its quarters have since been the same as those occupied by the congregation. It has an attendance each Sunday, ranging from eighty to 190.

Connected with the church are the following societies:

The C. W. B. M. Auxiliary, organized November 1, 1889.

The Ladies' Aid Society, organized August 17, 1886.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, organized June 27, 1889.

The Junior Society of Christian Endeavor, organized February 28, 1895.

The Boys' Brigade, organized in June, 1895.

A member of the congregation furnishes the statement given below of its belief and practice:

"The Tabernacle Church of Christ is connected with a religious body in this country now numbering nearly 1,000,000 communicants. They claim to be undenominational and non-sectarian. Their purpose from the beginning has been the union of Christians on the word of God. They discard all human creeds and confessions of faith. The only confession required of applicants for baptism (immersion) and church membership is that 'Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God'—Matthew xvi., 16. They claim that this divine confession, obeyed, makes Christians disciples of Christ. They insist on making the Bible in fact, as well as in theory, the only rule of faith and practice; in using Bible words in their Bible sense, so that a Scriptural terminology may bring Christians together in name as well as in faith and holy living. They urge Protestants to be consistent, by returning to New Testament conditions of church membership, as recorded in the book of Acts, and say that all Evangelical Christians can unite without sacrifice of conscience when this is done.

"In church government they are congregational. They use Paul's instructions to Timothy and Titus in their appointment of church officers. They partake of the Lord's Supper every Lord's Day, claiming that this was the New Testament practice, and that the Lord's Supper on the Lord's Day commemorates the death of Christ for man's sins, and his resurrection for man's justification. 'The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.'—(John i., 17.)"

CHURCH OF CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS.

"Christian Science" was first brought to Erie in the year 1889. During July, 1890, a Sunday service was instituted by five students, Bible study being the form of service. A class for children was also established at the same time. This service was held at the home of one of the students. In September following a suitable room was rented and a dispensary opened for the further work of Christian Science. September, 1894, a church was organized, with ten members, since which time six have been added. Services are held on Sunday morning at the usual hour for church; also a week day meeting is held on Thursday evenings. The attendance at Sunday morning service average thirty. During the week each day, a student is in attendance at the dispensary.

The first tenet of the Church of Christian Scientists is that "as adherents to truth, we take the Scripture for our guide to eternal life." The only text books of this church are "the Bible and Science and Health;" by the Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, discoverer and founder of "Christian Science." They believe in the command of Christ: "As ye go, preach, saying the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand;" "heal the sick, cleanse the leper, cast out devils, raise the dead; freely ye have received, freely give."—Matt. x., 7, 8.

FIRST SPIRITUAL SOCIETY.

The earliest announcement of spirit rappings as a new and strange development was made in the Erie papers about 1851. An interest was soon after awakened, and frequent meetings were held in private houses and small halls to investigate the mystery. From that time on various societies of believers in spiritualism have been organized, but none were of long life. The first of these, it is thought, was in 1852. Of late the efforts to establish a permanent organization have been quite earnest, and have resulted in a charter for the society above named. This was granted in June, 1895. The meeting places of the society have been in Jarecki's hall and a room in the Wayne block. Steps are being taken to organize a Sunday-school.

THE GERMAN TEMPLE CONGREGATION.

This society was organized in Württemberg, Germany, in 1854. The central idea is the gathering of the people of God and the followers of Christ into one fold, laying aside all denominational strife. Their doctrine is, that Palestine is the land of Promise and Jerusalem the headquarters thereof. The society has 1,500 to 1,600 members in Palestine, about 4,000 in Europe and some 400 in America. Each country has an organization, under the control of the Bishop of Jerusalem and his representatives, subject to the control of the local boards. The Erie society was founded November 14, 1888, with Mr. Henry Kessler as elder of the congregation. The society started with eight members, and has increased to about twenty. Meetings have been held at various places, and a church building is contemplated as the society increases in strength.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

This important religious society was organized at a meeting held August 20, 1860, in Park Hall, over which E. L. Pelton presided. A. McDowell Lyon was the first president of the Association, and was succeeded by A. H. Caughey. The meetings were held for a year in the basement of different Protestant churches. In 1861 rooms were procured in the Beatty block, on North Park Row. A small library was established in June of that year, and soon after the old Irving Library of 700 volumes was entrusted to the care of the Association. A reading room was started, and a course of lectures, embracing some of the most eminent talent in the country, was maintained for several years. In September, 1878, the Barr homestead, at Tenth and Peach streets, was purchased and fitted up for the use of the Association. This was added to and greatly improved about 1888-9, and the Association now has fine quarters, embracing a good-sized hall, a gynasium, a respectable-sized library and a reading room, well supplied with papers and magazines. The original library, it should have been stated before, was much enlarged in 1864, in 1867 and 1887, by subscriptions from liberal citizens.

Among the Presidents of the Association have been W. R. Davenport, C. C. Shirk, Geo. D. Selden, N. J. Clark, W. W. Todd and L. M. Little, and among its general secretaries have been Orlin Stockwell, W. E. Wayne, F. A. Hatch, J. L. Gordon, J. C. Sims and W. D. Fellows the present incumbent.

A Ladies' Auxiliary Society was organized June 6, 1885. Its Presidents have been, in the order named: Miss Kate Shirk, Mrs. F. A. Mizener, Miss Emma Brevillier, Mrs. J. E. Patterson and Miss S. B. Whitehill. Mrs. W. W. Ross has been Secretary from the beginning, and Miss Mary Selden and Mrs. Ira E. Briggs have been the Treasurers.

The State Convention of the Y. M. C. A.

of Pennsylvania was held in Erie October 24 to October 27, 1895. About 300 delegates were in attendance.

ERIE BETHEL ASSOCIATION.

The Erie Bethel was established by Wm. Himrod, sr., about 1860, in an old building which occupied the site of Wm. J. Sell's present residence, at Peach and Front streets. In course of time the work was turned over to the Western Seamen's Friend Society, which purchased the Himrod property, embracing the old family homestead, on French street, between Front and Second, May 31, 1873. The society, after building a chapel and making other improvements, became embarrassed, and the property was sold on a mortgage, and bought in by some of its friends. It is now held by the organization, the proper name of which is the Erie Bethel Association of the Western Seamen's Friend Society. J. F. Downing is President and G. E. Barger Secretary.

THE HIMROD MISSION SUNDAY-SCHOOL

Was started by Wm. Himrod, sr., on December 22, 1839, in his home on the west side of French street, between Front and Second, and has been in continuous existence ever since. During its long life it has had but two superintendents, viz.: Wm. Himrod, sr., and his son, Wm. Himrod, jr. The latter who had been assistant, became superintendent on his father's death, June 21, 1873. The school, which is held in the chapel of the Erie Bethel Association, but a few steps from the place where it started, has an average attendance of eighty-five. A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was organized in connection with the school, on September 9, 1894, which has about sixty-five members.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION OF ERIE CITY.

This association was organized December 15, 1887, with L. M. Little as President, C. E. Bacon as Secretary and R. Beebe as Treasurer. The officers in 1895 were: President, A. B. Kendall; Secretary, Miss Clara L. Smith; Treasurer, H. L. Eggleston. It is composed (July 20, 1895) of the following societies, for the dates of the organization of which see the several church histories:

First Presbyterian Church—Y. P. S. C. E.; Junior S. C. E.

Park Presbyterian Church—Y. P. S. C. E.; Junior S. C. E.

THE WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

Was organized January 11, 1895, by a number of ladies representing the several Protestant Churches of the city. Its object is the spiritual, moral, mental, social and physical welfare of those of the female sex who need sympathy and help. The general office of the association is at 918 French street, where a boarding home is kept up for self-supporting women. Miss Elizabeth Pollock is President of the society.

MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

The Ministerial Association of Erie was organized by Rev. Dr. Pressly, aided by Rev. Drs. Fullerton and Carrier, of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Mr. Ramsey, of the M. E. Church in 1874 or 1875. Its objects are: First, to increase sociability among the several clergymen of the city; second, to establish good feeling between the several denominations; third, to teach these ideas through the pulpit, the press, and the several congregations; fourth, to further the welfare of all the churches of the city, leaving out questions of creed, church or nationality. The society is made up of the various Protestant clergymen of the city, and holds meetings at stated periods, which are quite interesting to the members.

A GRAND GATHERING.

Nothing that ever occurred is more worthy of being recorded as a feature of local history than the State convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies of Pennsylvania, held in Erie from Thursday evening, August 22, to Sunday evening, August 25, 1895. No hall in the city being large enough to hold the audiences that were expected, a mammoth tent was brought on from Boston, which was beautifully trimmed with flags and emblems, and fitted up with seats for 4,000 persons. This was crowded daily during the sessions of the convention, and on one or two evenings more persons were unable to secure admission than found a place underneath the canvas. Preceding the convention, on Tuesday evening, August 20, a concert was given in the tent which was the most largely attended ever known in Erie. A striking incident of the convention was a chorus of 250 voices, under the direction of Prof. Redman. The proceedings of the convention, which was presided over by Rev. J. T. McCrory, of Pittsburgh, consisted of sermons, addresses, the reading of reports, singing, prayer and recitation of personal experiences. Many very touching incidents occurred during the sessions of the convention, and it will long be remembered as perhaps the most interesting assemblage of a religious nature held in Erie.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS FOR 1890.

The United States census report for 1890 gave the following statistics of religious matters in the city of Erie. Some of the figures are very much out of the way, but they are presented exactly as they appear in the government records:

CHAPTER IX.

CEMETERIES AND EARLY GRAVEYARDS.—[See Chapter XVIII, General History.]

THE first burial place in Erie after the American occupancy, was on the bluff overlooking the bay between Parade street and the mouth of Mill creek.

This site being deemed unsuitable, was abandoned in 1805, and three city lots secured for a graveyard at the southeast corner of Eighth and French streets. The latter was used in common by all religious denominations until 1827, when it was absorbed by what became known as the United Presbyterian congregation, whose house of worship, erected in 1816, stood then, as it does now, on the adjoining lot upon the east.

The Presbyterian denomination purchased four lots on the corner of Seventh and Myrtle streets, about 1826-27, and many bodies were removed there from the old ground soon after it was opened. The Episcopalians started a graveyard about 1827, on Myrtle street, between Seventh and Eighth. St. Paul's German Evangelical Church opened a burial ground in 1859, and St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church established one many years ago on Sassafras, between Twenty-second and Twenty-third streets. By a provision in the conveyance of their property, the latter congregation are obliged to keep up a burial place there, or lose the land that was given to them, and they have accordingly enclosed a small space for that purpose, which may be expected to remain for an indefinite period. All of the above, except the last one noted, were abandoned from thirty to forty years ago, and most of the remains were taken up and reinterred in the Erie Cemetery.

During the stay of the French in this section, from 1753 to 1759, they had a graveyard somewhere near the mouth of Mill creek, but its exact location is unknown. This was the earliest Catholic burial place in the county. The first one of that denomination, after the American settlement, was located on the site of St. Benedict's Academy, on East Ninth street. The ground was purchased in 1837, and consecrated by the Rev. Ivo Levitz, August 2, 1840. This graveyard was used until 1848, when Father Steinbacher, pastor of St. Mary's congregation, bought a piece of ground on Chestnut, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets, to which the bodies of those interred on Ninth street were removed. The latter was used by the German Catholics until the consecration of Trinity Cemetery, when it was closed for interments. Most, if not all, of the remains have been taken up and reinterred in the latter cemetery.

In 1838, St. Patrick's congregation bought a lot, 40x100 feet in size, on Third street, between German and Parade, which was the first graveyard owned by that parish. Father Deane purchased five acres in 1852, on the corner of Twenty-fourth and Sassafras streets, when the old ground was abandoned and the bodies changed to the new location. Upon the consecration of Trinity Cemetery, this second graveyard was closed and most of the dead removed. St. Vincent's Hospital occupies a portion of the ground.

When the German and Irish graveyards were located in South Erie, they were far out of town, and few persons in the early days had the least idea that the growth of the city would compel their removal.

The Hebrews established a burial place in 1858 on Twenty-sixth street, west of Cherry, which is still in use.

ERIE CEMETERY.

The Erie Cemetery, the principal burial ground of the city, had its inception in October, 1846, when a paper was drawn up, and a few citizens agreed to furnish $1,500, with the view of purchasing the piece of land on which the cemetery was subsequently laid out. Those who subscribed were Charles M. Reed, George A. Eliot, John H. Wulker, John A. Tracy, William Kelley, Smith Jackson, John Galbraith, B. B. Vincent, Thomas G. Colt, Milton Courtright, C. M. Tibbals and J. C. Spencer. No decisive measures, however, were taken at that time to secure the desired site, on account of the increased price demanded; yet the object was never abandoned, and in December, 1849, the first effective movement was made to accomplish the design. In that month, a subscription paper was again circulated, by which the signers agreed to unite in purchasing seventy-five acres of land at $100 per acre, bounded on the north by Nineteenth street, on the east by Chestnut, on the south by Twenty-sixth, and on the west by Cherry. Thirty-one signatures were obtained, and the following amounts subscribed toward purchasing the ground:

C. M. Reed.....	$100	George A. Eliot.....	$100
William Himrod.....	100	H. Caldwell.....	100
George A. Lyon.....	100	Elijah Babbitt.....	100

These gentlemen constitute the original corporators, who, and their successors, were authorized by law to fill all vacancies "from among the lot holders" in the cemetery. The sum subscribed by the corporators not being sufficient to carry out the object immediately, the following persons assisted by advancing money, which was credited to them in the sale of lots: Mrs. R. S. Reed, $50; John Evans, $50; M. B. Lowry, $50; J. C. Beebe, $25; Thomas H. Sill, $25; John P. Vincent, $25; John Moore, $25; Andrew Scott, $10.

January 29, 1850, the Legislature passed an act incorporating "The Erie Cemetery, in the county of Erie," and May 24th of that year, a majority of the incorporators met and elected seven managers, viz.: Charles M. Reed, George A. Eliot, William Kelley, John Galbraith, Elijah Babbitt, William Himrod and A. W. Brewster. George A. Eliot was elected President, William A. Brown, Secretary and J. C. Spencer, Treasurer. A deed of conveyance was made to the corporation March 28, 1850, and the sum of $1,500 was paid down as required by the contract, a majority of the incorporators signing a judgment bond to secure the remaining $6,000, which they agreed to pay in four equal annual payments, together with interest thereon, relying with confidence that the sale of lots would fully indemnify them.

In procuring a suitable person to lay out the grounds the managers found no little difficulty. They succeeded at last in engaging the services of H. Daniels, who proved to be the right man for the place. He was assisted by Samuel Low, who became the first Superintendent of the cemetery. Not much work was accomplished until April, 1851, but after that it went along rapidly. Walks and driveways were constructed, the grounds cut into harmonious sections, and trees and shrubbery planted wherever they would add beauty to the natural landscape. Among other things done at that time was the setting out of the splendid row of trees which lines the west side of Chestnut street. The tract purchased was mainly covered with forest trees, and these, with rare exceptions, made necessary by the opening of the avenues, were wisely allowed to remain as nature had placed them.

It was a strange coincidence that A. W. Brewster, who had been so active in promoting the enterprise, should be the first one interred in the new cemetery. Two others of the corporators—W. W. Reed and John Hughes—died before the annual meeting in January, 1852. The deceased members were succeeded by Joseph H. Pressly, John Evans and Wilson King.

The formal opening of the cemetery took place May 20, 1851. An address was delivered by the president of the board, Geo. A. Eliot, and the dedicatory address was made by Rev. George A. Lyon, other ceremonies taking place usual on such occasions.

Since the cemetery was opened it has undergone steady improvement, until it ranks as one of the handsomest resting places for the dead in the entire country. Among the most important of these were the enclosing of the grounds by a high iron fence, the placing of a neat porter's lodge at the main entrance, and the erection of a fine chapel with receiving vault connected. The latter, which was built in 1887, is cruciform in shape, measuring 40x80 to the extremes, and is fifty feet from the ground to the top of the roof. The building is of hammer-dressed Medina stone. The vault portion contains eighty-four crypts for coffins.

The Superintendents of the cemetery have been as follows: Samuel Low, from its opening until his death in June, 1869; Cassius W. Low, his son, until December 4, 1871; Joseph Vance, until October 1, 1889; Henry W. Hay, until his death, in 1892; Mrs. E. E. Hay, his wife, appointed February 1, 1892. It is due to this lady to say that the responsible duties of the position were never performed with more judgment and faithfulness, nor more to the satisfaction of the public and corporators.

The interments in the cemetery up to July 1, 1895, were 12,837.

The annual report for the year ending May 6, 1895, shows that $128.50 were received in that period for monuments; $358 for the use of the vault and chapel; $1,815 for the making of graves, and $9,027 from the sale of lots. The association held mortgage securities to the value of $33,000, the interest of which is applied to the improvement of the cemetery.

The act of incorporation provides as follows:

"Sec. 5. That the corporators thus created shall derive no personal pecuniary advantage or profit thereby; they shall make no dividends of the corporate property among themselves, and shall not receive any pay or compensation for services as such. The whole proceeds of the sale of lots, and other income, are hereby declared and directed to be devoted to cemetery purposes alone, and to such outlays and expenditures as are incident thereto, unless in case of a surplus not needed, in which contingency it shall be in the power of the corporators at their annual meeting to direct such surplus, or any part thereof, to be appropriated to charitable purposes under the direction and supervision of the board of managers.

"Sec. 6. The corporation shall be capable of holding property to such an amount as may be necessary for the purposes of its creation, and it shall be the duty of the corporation, at the end of five years from the passage of this act, and forever thereafter, to set apart ten per cent. of the purchase money received from the sale of lots, and to invest the same in ground rents or mortgages, as a permanent and perpetual fund, the income of which is to be devoted to the perpetual maintenance of the cemetery."

TRINITY CEMETERY.

Trinity Cemetery, the burial place of the Catholic people of Erie and vicinity, is on the Lake road, four miles west of the city, and is reached by a fine drive through some of the most charming scenery to be found in the lake region. The Erie motor line extends beyond the cemetery and cars run almost to its entrance every few minutes during the summer and at convenient intervals during the balance of the year. Special trains are also made up, when ordered for the convenience of funeral parties. The cemetery contains thirty acres, nicely laid out in walks and driveways, and planted with trees. Many handsome monuments adorn the grounds, and the time is not far distant when the cemetery will be ranked among the most beautiful cities of the dead.

The ceremony of consecrating Trinity Cemetery took place on Sunday afternoon, May 23, 1869, and was witnessed by thousands of spectators. The procession, including the several Catholic societies, headed by four bands, formed on Eighth street and marched to the cemetery, escorting Bishop Mullen and the clergymen present. A large wooden cross, the emblem of Christ crucified, had been placed in the middle of the cemetery, around which the societies formed a hollow square, with the Bishop, clergy and choir in the center. Bishop Mullen delivered a brief address, followed by a sermon in the German language by Father Wenderlein, of St. Mary's Church. At its conclusion, the usual beautiful ceremonies ordained by the Catholic Church on such occasions were performed, and the proceedings were brought to a close with a prayer for the repose of the soul of Bishop Young, whose remains had been removed to the cemetery.

The cemetery received its name because it was consecrated on Trinity Sunday.

The title to the ground, as is usual with Catholic cemeteries, is in Bishop Mullen and his successors, and the Bishop exercises full control over its management. All of the revenue from the sale of lots, etc., is sacredly devoted to the improvement of the premises. The land was purchased by Bishop Young, being a portion of the Laird estate.

Since the opening of the cemetery it has filled up with a rapidity that is surprising and sorrowful, and it will be but a short time, comparatively, until the boundaries will have to be greatly extended.

Joseph Scheloski was the first Superintendent, and continued ten years, until his death. During his term the interments were 2,258. He was succeeded by Joseph Haas, sr., who remained until April 1, 1887, and was followed by his son, Joseph, jr., who continues in the position. Mr. Haas, sr., buried 2,316 persons, and his son had buried 3,393 up to July 1, 1895—making altogether, 7,967.

POLISH CEMETERY.

The congregation of St. Stanislaus Church owns a tract of two acres at the northwest corner of Trinity Cemetery, which, while really forming a part of the latter, is used as an exclusive burial place for Polish people. The land was purchased October 15, 1889, and dedicated November 2 of the same year.

LAKESIDE CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

This is the name of an organization formed May 15, 1895, with the object of establishing a new cemetery for the use of the general public. The Association has secured control of 135 acres upon the bank of the lake, a short distance east of the city, which it is proposed to lay out according to the most approved modern ideas. The officers are as follows: President, Henry C. Duval; Vice-President, George Platt; Secretary, R. Caughey; Treasurer, Wm. H. Platt; Auditor, Walter Scott; Controller, Wm. H. Platt. CHAPTER XI.

BANKS, BROKERS' OFFICES, INSURANCE COMPANIES—STREET CAR LINES—BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS—GAS AND ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANIES, ETC.

ERIE'S first banking institution was "The Erie Bank," incorporated by act of the Legislature in the winter of 1828. It began business in January, 1829, on a capital of $50,000, though privileged to increase its capital stock to $200,000. Its first officers were: R. S. Reed, President; P. S. V. Hamot, Cashier; J. A. Tracy, C. M. Reed, Samuel Brown, William Fleming, Thomas Moorhead, jr., E. D. Gunnison and D. Gillispie, Directors. The bank suspended in May, 1848, but only a slight loss was sustained by the holders of its issue, as the notes were subsequently redeemed at a small discount, Gen. C. M. Reed holding himself personally responsible for their redemption.

The United States Bank of Philadelphia established a branch at Erie in 1836, with Thomas H. Sill as President; Peter Benson as Cashier; and Josiah Kellogg, C. M. Reed, William Kelley, G. A. Eliot, Samuel Hays, William Fleming, J. G. Williams and H. J. Huidekoper as Directors. The fine building on State street, long occupied as the custom house and postoffice, was erected by this bank, as well as the building adjoining it on the south for the cashier's residence, now owned by Mrs. Woodruff. With the failure of the parent institution, the Erie branch also went down, and W. C. Curry was appointed to settle up its affairs. In 1849, the bank building, which cost $70,000, was sold to the United States Government for $29,000, while the cashier's residence subsequently sold for $4,000, less than one-half of its original cost. The bank building was used as a postoffice from 1853 to 1867, and as a custom house from the time of its purchase by the Government until the removal of the latter to the new Federal building.

The third banking institution was The Erie City Bank, incorporated in 1853, with a capital stock of $200,000. It lasted only four years, suspending business in 1857. Its first officers were: Smith Jackson, President; J. P. Sherwin, Cashier; S. E. Neiler, Teller; Brua Cameron, Book-keeper; C. M. Tibbals, W. A. Brown, D. S. Clark, C. Seigel, John Brawley, James Webster, J. H. Fullerton, Ira Sherwin, J. D. Clark, Charles Brandes and J. C. Beebe, Directors. The Brua Cameron above named was the eldest son of Gen. Simon Cameron and a brother of the present Senator Cameron. He remained in Erie but a few months.

The Bank of Commerce succeeded the Erie City Bank in April, 1858, but soon succumbed, closing its doors in December, 1860. Its first officers were as follows: Benjamin Grant, President; C. B. Wright, Vice President; G. J. Ball, Cashier; A. W. Guild, Teller; W. F. Rindernecht, James Hoskinson, B. F. Sloan, Charles Metcalf, A. W. Blaine, G. F. King and J. W. Douglass, Directors. Mr. Wright removed to Philadelphia, where he became a millionaire several times over. He is still living in that city.

From the period of the suspension of the Bank of Commerce until 1863 there was no bank of issue in Erie, the banking and brokerage business being wholly transacted by private firms, of which the following were in operation in 1861: W. C. Curry, capital $100,000; M. Sanford & Co., capital $50,000; Vincent, Bailey & Co., capital $25,000; Clark & Metcalf, capital $12,000; Neiler & Warren, capital $5,000; total banking capital, $192,000.

The business of Neiler & Warren was started by W. C. Warren in 1854. Mr. Neiler entered the firm some time previous to the war, and withdrew from it January 1st, 1866, going to Minneapolis, where he organized a prominent national bank. Mr. Warren was obliged to suspend business late in 1869 or early in 1870.

The firm of Clark & Metcalf was originally Clark & Goodwin, consisting of J. D. Clark and John S. Goodwin. It was organized in 1868. Mr. Goodwin retired and was succeeded by Charles Metcalf. The business was wound up by the voluntary action of the firm.

The other private banks referred to merged their capital in the First, Second and Marine National Banks.

DEFUNCT BANKS OF A LATER DATE.

The German Savings Institution of Erie was organized February 8, 1867, with a capital of $200,000. John Gensheimer was President; Mathew Schlaudecker, Treasurer; and Frederick Schneider, Secretary. These officers continued to hold their several positions until October, 1875, when Lloyd G. Reed became President, and John Eliot Manager and Treasurer. The building now occupied by the Western Union Telegraph Company, at the northwest corner of State and Eighth streets, was erected by the bank. The bank closed its doors on the 18th of August, 1885, and was placed in the hands of a receiver.

The Humboldt Safe Deposit and Trust Company began business July 1, 1869, with a capital of $100,000. Its first President was Uras Schluraff, and its first Secretary and Treasurer, Charles Metcalf. The bank erected and occupied the building at the southwest corner of State and Ninth streets, now owned by Otto Germer. In May, 1872, the capital was increased to $200,000, and the bank went into new hands. It suspended operations on February 2, 1885, while under the management of Gustave Jarecki as President and J. J. Sturgeon as Secretary and Treasurer. The depositors received only a portion of their money.

The Erie County Savings Bank was organized in the autumn of 1871, with a capital of $150,000: President, N. J. Clark; Vice-president, J. L. Stewart; Cashier, M. H. Burgess. Dr. Stewart afterward became president, and Adam Brabender Vice-President. The next President of the bank was William W. Reed, succeeded in 1879 by Adam Brabender. In the latter year R. Pettit became Vice-President and in 1882 took the place of F. G. Schlaudecker as Cashier. The bank succumbed on May 19, 1884, and its affairs were placed in the hands of a receiver. Mr. Brabender, the President at the time of the failure, was sentenced to the penitentiary, and Mr. Pettit, the Cashier, found it convenient to settle in Canada. The location of the bank was at the northwest corner of Peach and Fourteenth streets.

The firm of John Eliot & Co., private bankers, was established in 1866, having its office on Peach street, just south of the Union depot. Its members were John Eliot, Wm. F. Rindernecht, Wm. A. Brown, A. H. Gray and M. C. Mayer. The firm wound up in 1875, merging its business with that of the German Savings Bank.

EXISTING BANKS.

First National Bank.—The First National Bank of Erie was organized in February, 1863, with a capital of $150,000, being the twelfth institution of the kind that was chartered under the national banking law. The first officers were: President, Judah C. Spencer; Cashier, Myron Sanford. In February, 1883, the bank was reorganized with the following officers: President, J. C. Spencer; Cashier, J. L. Sternberg; Directors, William Spencer, C. M. Reed, Matthew Griswold, William E. Marvin, Thomas C. Wood, J. L. Sternberg. J. C. Spencer died in 1885, and was succeeded by his son, William Spencer, as President. The bank long occupied a room on the first floor of the Reed House, at the intersection of North Park Row with French street. Its present location is on State street, east side, between Seventh and Eighth, in a building erected by the bank in 1886. The statement of the bank, on July 11, 1895, showed its resources to be $1,351,370.20. It had a surplus fund of $170,000 and held deposits to the amount of nearly $960,000.

Keystone National Bank.—The Keystone National Bank was organized in the fall of 1864, with a paid-up capital of $250,000. Orange Noble was its first President, and John J. Town its first Cashier. The bank erected the building at the northeast corner of State and Eighth streets in 1869, into which it moved immediately upon its completion. Mr. Town, the original Cashier, moved to Des Moines, Ia., in 1871, and was succeeded by his brother, J. I. Town. The charter of the bank expired in 1884, when it was reorganized for another term of twenty years. The bank has a present capital of $150,000, and its resources on July 11, 1895, were $833,365.16. Mr. Town resigned as Cashier, and F. V. Kepler was chosen in his stead on the 14th of January, 1893, at which time F. M. Lamb was also named as Assistant Cashier.

Second National Bank.—December 12, 1864, the Second National Bank of Erie was organized with a capital of $300,000: William L. Scott, President; Joseph McCarter, Vice-President; W. C. Curry, Cashier. Mr. Curry lost his life in the terrible railroad disaster at New Hamburg, on the Hudson river, February 6, 1871, and was succeeded by C. F. Allis. Joseph McCarter became President of the bank in 1882. Both of the officers last named continue in their positions. The bank located in its present quarters, at the southwest corner of State and Eighth streets, in 1868. The July, 1895, statement of the bank showed resources of $1,934,644.72. Its surplus fund was $250,000, and it held over $1,300,000 of deposits.

Marine National Bank.—The Marine National Bank, with a capital of $150,000, was organized March 9, 1865, its first President being B. B. Vincent, and its first Cashier F. P. Bailey. Its location from the beginning has been at the northwest corner of State street and North Park Row, in the Exchange building. James C. Marshall became President in January, 1867, and Charles E. Gunnison Assistant Cashier. The former died on the 5th of May, 1886, and was succeeded by his son, F. F. Marshall. Mr. Bailey died December 17, 1888, and his place was taken by Mr. Gunnison. On July 11, 1895, the bank, which was re-chartered in 1885, held resources to the amount of $1,479,087. Its surplus fund was $185,000, and it had deposits exceeding $960,000.

Dime Savings Bank.—The Erie Dime Savings and Loan Company was chartered April 16, 1866, under a special State law. It was organized June 8, 1867, with Selden Marvin as President, and John H. Bliss as Secretary. These officers resigned April 25, 1868, and the following gentlemen were chosen: L. L. Lamb, President; George W. Colton, Secretary and Treasurer; Selden Marvin, Attorney. The bank did business in the basement of the Keystone Bank building until January, 1876, when it moved into its own block, at the southwest corner of South Park Row and State street. On the retirement of Mr. Lamb as President, he was succeeded, December 8, 1873, by William A. Galbraith, who has held the position and overseen the business of the bank ever since. Mr. Colton was followed as Secretary and Treasurer by Geo. E. Barger, and he, in turn, by F. F. Curtze, the present incumbent, April 1, 1888. F. F. Schutte became Teller at the same time that Mr. Curtze was elected Cashier. The bank has a paid up capital of $150,000, and a surplus fund of $50,000. Its charter was renewed April 20, 1886, for a period of twenty years. The statement issued by the bank May 15, 1895, showed its resources to be $724,136.85, with a deposit account of over half a million dollars. The "old Dime" is justly regarded as one of the soundest savings banks in the country. It has gone through two general panics and several serious local convulsions without a blemish on its record.

Ball & Colt.—This firm of private bankers was organized in July, 1867, and has been in continuous operation since. The office of the firm is in the Dewitt block, at State and Seventh streets, and the members are P. H. Ball and Geo. P. Colt. The firm have a capital of $50,000, and the average deposits are from $60,000 to $75,000.

It has been well said that "nothing shows more clearly the rapid progress in the wealth and enterprise of Erie than the present amount of capital invested in banking. At the beginning of 1863 there was not a single incorporated bank in the city, the whole of the banking business being done by a few private firms on a combined capital of less than $200,000. The capital and deposits of the banks of 1895 run into the millions, and each year shows a large increase in their business."

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The Erie County Mutual Fire Insurance Company was incorporated March 26, 1839, the following persons being stockholders: John A. Tracy, William Kelley, Peter Pierce, Julius W. Hitchcock, James Williams, Smith Jackson, Samuel Low, Conrad Brown, B. B. Vincent, Bester Town, Jabez Wright, David G. Webber and Stephen Skinner. It has ever since conducted a successful business, confining its operations in the main to lines of insurance on which there is a moderate risk. It is doubtless the oldest home corporation doing business in Erie county, which speaks well for its stability. The office of the company is at 26 North Park Row. L. W. Olds is President, Walter Scott, Secretary, and Henry Beckman, Treasurer. The Executive Committee consists of L. W. Olds, F. F. Marshall, John Gensheimer and Martin Warfel.

The Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Harbor Creek, was chartered May 6, 1857, John Dodge, G. W. Wagner, John W. McLane, J. Y. Moorhead and G. A. Elliot being the active parties. The law required the company to get $100,000 of insurance before issuing any policies, which was complied with in August, 1858, when the first policy was issued. The business grew rapidly, being wholly confined to farm property. A year or so ago the company decided to extend its field and now accepts moderate risks on town buildings. Its principal office is at 703 State street. The officers are: President, James A. Moorhead; Vice-President, J. H. Phillips; Treasurer, W. E. Hayes; Secretary, S. H. Willis; Adjuter, Geo. A. Evans; Executive Committee, S. E. Kincaide, S. S. Robinson, George Reed

The city has had two other fire insurance companies, viz.: The German and Alps. The former was organized in 1867, and lasted until 1874, when it failed. Its office was on the second floor of the German Bank building, and the two institutions were practically owned by the same parties. The Alps Insurance Company began business in 1868. It had placed considerable insurance on property in Chicago, and when the great fire almost swept that city out of existence, the Alps incurred heavy losses. These it paid, but the big fire in Boston and later severe losses in Chicago were too much for its resources. The managers concluded to wind up its business, and did so with credit to themselves and general satisfaction to their policy holders.

THE ERIE GAS COMPANY.

The Erie Gas Company was chartered March 5, 1852, with a capital stock of $60,000. Ground was bought on Seventh street, between Myrtle and Chestnut, upon which the works were erected. The tank or gas receiver had a capacity of 30,000 cubic feet; three and one-half miles of pipe were laid, and all necessary buildings erected. The works were completed by the 22d of August, 1853, and on that date the city of Erie first enjoyed gaslight. The patronage at that time comprised thirty-two consumers, but by the close of the year the number had increased to 150. The company at present has an authorized capital of $300,000, and owns more than thirty-five miles of gas mains. In the autumn of 1883 a new gas tank was erected with a holder capacity of 100,000 cubic feet, which was, in 1887, increased by the erection of another holder, to 300,000 cubic feet, on Front, between Sasafra and Peach streets. During the spring of 1887 the former location on Seventh street was abandoned and the works removed to the bay front.

The new telescope holder is covered with brick, with a conical roof. The massive structure, standing on a bluff, presents a slightly appearance from the public dock. In 1886 an addition of a water gas plant was made to the coal gas works, giving the whole works a manufacturing capacity of about 750,000 cubic feet of gas daily.

The Secretary and Treasurer for many years was Miles W. Caghey, upon whose death, in the fall of 1883, Walter Scott became his successor. The latter was followed as Secretary in January, 1893, by Paul Mueller, the present incumbent. The other officers in 1895 were: President, C. M. Reed; Treasurer, George R. Metcalf; Superintendent, W. H. Hill. The office of the company, for many years in the Wetmore block, is now on West Seventh street, between State and Peach.

PENNSYLVANIA GAS COMPANY.

During the period between 1860 and 1890 numerous wells were put down in the city and vicinity—first for oil, and, later, when the production of the latter article in paying quantities was given up, for natural gas. With scarcely an exception, every well that has been bored has yielded considerable gas, and quite a number of residences and some of the factories have at times been wholly or partially supplied with it. The gas wells, as a rule, have been short-lived, but several that began yielding years ago are still emitting in reduced quantities. The best well ever struck in or near Erie is the one at the Head, which still affords a liberal supply of gas, and the one which caused the most disappointment was the test well sunk in 1888-89. This latter, to which our citizens contributed nearly $15,000, for the purpose of ascertaining what could be found in the rock strata beneath Erie, was bored upon the Reed lots, near Fifth street and Mill creek. It reached a depth of 4,585 feet, without meeting any sign of gas in paying quantities, according to the statements of those who had the financial part of the enterprise in charge.

The Pennsylvania Gas Company, which now supplies the city with fuel gas, was started by F. P. Hays and his associates as a local company at Warren, and first extended from there to Jamestown, N. Y. About the time the company reached the latter place, they were joined by the Standard combination, and, with fresh capital, it was soon decided to run their lines to Erie. Upon asking for permission to lay down their pipes in the city, they were met with a sharp competition on the part of a rival company headed by Charles W. Mackey. The Pennsylvania Company, however, prevailed upon Councils to grant them the exclusive franchise, and were busy in laying down their pipes in the season of 1886-7. Since then they have piped a large number of the principal streets, and are supplying more than one-half of the stores, offices and residences. The main gas field is in the vicinity of and beyond Ludlow, Warren county, and the gas reaches Erie through an eight-inch main via Cory. The company are at great expense to keep up the supply, having laid out $100,000 for this purpose alone in a single year. They have already exhausted half a dozen fields, and are constantly exploring for profitable new territory. When the gas was first introduced into Erie, the charge was estimated to the consumer, but it was not long until they changed to the system of meter measurement. The uniform price, up to October 1, 1895, was twenty-five cents per thousand feet, with a discount of ten per cent. if paid within ten days. This was changed on the above date to twenty-seven cents, a discount of ten per cent. being allowed for prompt payment. W. A. Walker has been the manager at Erie from the beginning.

WELSBACH GAS COMPANY.

This is the name of a company for the furnishing of light, with the use of either natural or artificial gas, by means of a special burner patented by a German, whose name it bears. The company has its headquarters in Philadelphia, with branches in numerous cities of America and Europe. The Erie branch, which is really an outgrowth of the Pennsylvania Gas Company, is the lessee of the Welsbach patents for the city. It buys its gas from the latter company, but is not otherwise identified with it. The officers are: President, John C. Brady; Secretary, John S. Rilling; Treasurer, George P. Colt; Manager, W. A. Walker.

ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER COMPANIES.

The Edison Electric Light and Power Company was organized soon after the electric light was proved a success and incorporated in 1887, with an authorized capital of $60,000. Charles H. Strong, William Spencer and Henry A. Clark were the active men in the enterprise from the start, and the former has always been President of the company. The first building was erected on the east side of Peach street, between Tenth and Eleventh, and the dynamos were set in motion on the 7th of November, 1887. The company soon outgrew its original quarters, and, on the 1st of August, 1891, changed to the corner of Twelfth and French streets, where it has an extensive plant. In connection with the Brush high-tension system, the company furnishes Swan incandescent lights to the public for office, store and residence lighting. Improvements have gone on steadily, as new inventions or the necessity of the case demanded. Thomas O'Dea has been manager of the company since February, 1891. The company, in July, 1895, supplied 276 street lights to the city, of 2,000 candle-power each, at seventeen cents per light each night.

The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Electric Light, Heat and Power Company was chartered June 22, 1893, and turned on the lights for the first time October 1, 1894. The incorporators were E. D. Carter, Louis Streuber, E. C. Siegel, John S. Rilling and J. B. Arbuckle. Mr. Carter is President, Mr. Rilling, Secretary, and Mr. Siegel, Treasurer. The power-house of the company is at the foot of French street. The company, on August 1, 1895, were supplying 104 arc and about 1,200 incandescent lights. It uses the Western Electric system and, with shrewd incorporators, promises to become an important feature in the business life of the city.

ERIE ELECTRIC MOTOR COMPANY.

The Erie City Passenger Railway Company was chartered by a Legislative act, approved March 1, 1867, to carry passengers through the streets of Erie by means of cars drawn by horses. The main stockholder was Anthony J. Drexel, of Philadelphia, who was represented in Erie by E. J. Cowell. Among others interested originally, or who afterward became interested were the Berst family, W. W. Reed and J. C. Spencer. In 1868 the main line was built from Second street south on State to Turnpike; thence across to Peach; thence south on Peach to Twenty-sixth street, and in December of that year opened for travel. Up to May, 1873, the fare charged was seven cents. On that date it was reduced to five cents. The line was soon extended down State street to the public dock. In 1880, the company erected the stables at Second and State streets; and in the fall of 1883 it extended its lines out Eighth street, from State to Raspberry; out Eleventh street, from State to Parade, and up Parade to Fourteenth street. Afterward, tracks were put down on East and West Eighteenth streets; the Eighth street track was run to the city limits; and the Eleventh street line to Wayne street, the Parade street line being abandoned. The cars were operated under the charge of the drivers, without conductors, and the fares were deposited by passengers in a cash box designed for the purpose.

On the 28th of July, 1888, all of the stock of the Erie Passenger Railway Company was purchased by J. S. Casement, S. T. Everett and associates, who organized the Erie Electric Motor Company. The venture was somewhat of an experiment, as there were at the time not more than a dozen electric roads in the country. The Motor Company leased the franchise of the old company for 999 years, and on the 22d of September, having received authority from Councils, went to work to fit up the line for electric power. The horse car stables at Second and State streets were converted into a motor house, and the first electric car appeared on the streets of Erie on the 29th of June, 1889.

Since then the company has built lines on East Sixth street to East avenue; on West Twelfth street to Cranberry; on Eleventh street to East avenue; on East avenue to Twelfth street; on Twelfth street east to the city limits; on French street to Twenty-sixth; on Twenty-sixth east to Wayne; on Wayne north to Twenty-fifth; on Peach street from Twelfth to Eighteenth; and from Twenty-sixth to the city limits; on Twenty-sixth from Peach to Liberty; and on the Lake road from the city limits to the Head. The line last mentioned was built to Trinity Cemetery in 1890, and to the water's edge in 1891. In 1892 the power house was changed to the foot of Peach street, and the old building wholly converted into a storage place for cars. The company represents $700,000 capital and employs about 150 men. Its officers are: President, J. S. Casement; Vice-President, John C. Brady; Secretary and Treasurer, J. L. Sternberg; Directors, J. S. Casement, S. T. Everett, John C. Brady and W. W. Reed. J. F. Pfetich was Superintendent until August, 1893, when he was succeeded by H. F. Wilber. It is but just to add that no city in the country has a better street car system than Erie, and no public corporation exists that has shown a more progressive and obliging spirit than the Erie Electric Motor Company.

ERIE TRANSFER COMPANY.

This corporation was chartered by act of Assembly of April 25, 1873, with a capital of $15,000, and the privilege of increasing it to $50,000. Its object, as stated in the law, is "the transacting of express business in the city and county of Erie," and the carrying of passengers and baggage to and from the hotels, private houses and railroad depots of the city. Among the early stockholders were W. A. Baldwin, Theo. N. Ely, Jno. W. Reynolds, J. Louis Linn, G. J. Ball, S. B. Kennedy, Jno. E. Payne, J. J. Wadsworth, Geo. V. Maus, J. S. Scobell, Dr. J. L. Stewart, John Eliot and H. Souther. Dr. Stewart was President for a number of years, and S. B. Kennedy was Superintendent. The stable on Fifth street was established in 1880, and the office on Ninth street in January, 1887. Most of the original parties have withdrawn, and the bulk of the stock is now owned by L. Kester, John Eliot and F. J. Kester. L. Kester has been President and Superintendent, and F. J. Kester Treasurer for about nine years.

The company have a large number of hacks and other conveyances, employ a great many men and horses, and do a prosperous business.

ERIE REAL ESTATE TITLE COMPANY.

The object of this organization is to make abstracts of real estate titles in the county and preserve a record of the same. It was chartered May 5, 1886, with the following incorporators: Henry Souther, Eben Brewer, John C. Brady, E. L. Whittelsey, W. E. Roach and R. St. P. Lowry. The abstractors have been: W. E. Roach, until January 1, 1891; M. N. Cutler, until his death, July 29, 1894; Miss B. P. Beckers since. Its office is in the courthouse. The present officers of the company are: President, Geo. P. Griffith; Secretary, John C. Brady; Treasurer, E. L. Whittelsey.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

The first Building and Loan Association in Erie was the Erie City, incorporated March 10, 1873. Benjamin Whitman was the first President and Geo. A. Allen the first Attorney. The Erie City was followed by the Ben Franklin, the Erie Saving Fund and the Presque Isle, all started shortly after. Unfortunately for the associations of that period, the panic came on in the fall of 1873, and they did not work out as satisfactorily as had been anticipated.

The present associations are the Workingmen's, incorporated July 10, 1876, under a perpetual charter, and the Mutual, organized in 1880.

TELEGRAPH, TELEPHONE, EXPRESS AND GENERAL CARRYING COMPANIES.

The O'Reilly telegraph system commenced operations in Erie January 1, 1848, and soon became merged in the Western Union system. For more than twenty years Erie possessed but one telegraph line, but, about 1868, the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company opened an office in opposition to the Western Union. Finally, the Western Union bought out the Atlantic and Pacific, and consolidated the lines. The Mutual Union Telegraph Company began business at Erie in 1881, but it, too, was absorbed by the Western Union. The city at present enjoys the benefits of two systems—the Western Union, W. J. Hunter, Manager, and the Postal Telegraph Cable, C. J. Goidling, Manager.

The Erie Telephone Exchange was established August 1, 1879, and was owned by a local company until the latter part of 1883, when it was purchased by the New York and Pennsylvania Telephone and Telegraph Company, doing business in the southern tier of counties of New York and the northern tier of counties of Pennsylvania. J. H. Francis was placed in charge and remained several years, when he was succeeded as business manager by W. Barry Smith. The Exchange reaches every place of any size in this section of the country, and is in communication, by the long distance system, with most of the important cities in the Union. Its first location was in the Reed block, corner of Seventh and State; but, since its change of ownership, it has been located in the Noble block, now known as the Penn building.

The American Express Company opened an office at Erie in 1846, with O. D. Spafford as agent. He was succeeded by J. J. Lints, and in 1858 J. Harper was appointed to fill the position, which he has held continuously up to the present time. The American and Adams Express Companies ran a "union office" until June 1, 1883, when the latter company opened a separate office. The city has the advantage of four competing companies at present, viz.: The American, J. Harper, agent; the Adams, C. W. Low, agent; the National, J. Harper, agent; and the Wells-Fargo, E. D. Myers, agent. The Merchants' Union Express and Union Line Express had offices in the city in 1868.

Besides the express companies, the city is favored with agencies of the Anchor Line, Empire Line and the Merchants' Dispatch, all general carriers. Charles E. Payne is agent of the first, Davis Rees, of the second, and John A. Beebe of the third.

CHAPTER XII.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS, SCHOOL OFFICERS, PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, BUSINESS UNIVERSITY, ETC.

THE first schoolhouse built in Erie was in the year 1806, on the southwest corner of Seventh and Holland streets, where school building No. 2 now stands. It was of hewed logs, about 18x20 feet in size and was built for the sum of thirty dollars, which was paid by contributions of the citizens. This first temple of learning was surrounded by the native forest, a foot-path leading to the school from the village, which was mostly collected in the vicinity of German street, below Fourth street. The roll of the school during the year 1812 is preserved as a historic relic. It contains the names of thirty girls and forty boys, as follows :

Boys—Alexander Brewster, Dunning McNair, John McSparren, Zedekiah Curtis, Daniel Gillespie, Edward Hildebrand, Charles Reed, William Brown, Harry Rees, Edwin Kelso, George Dunn, Cyrus Reed, John Dunn, William Bell, John Teel, Albert Kelso, James Gray, Samuel Irwin, James Wilson, Robert Erwin, Henry Schantz, William W. Dobbins, William Hoskinson, Laird Forster, John Hughes, Charles Wilkins, Alexander Irwin, Jacob Snaveley, George Gallagher, Barney Gillespie, Johnson Laird, Samuel Brown, William McDonald, James Hughes, Thomas Growotz, Benjamin Wallace, John McFarland, Charles Growotz, Archibald Stuart and Richard McCreary.

Lot No. 1378, upon which the school house was built, was bought from the State August 4, 1804, by James Baird, for the sum of twenty-five dollars. It was afterward purchased by means of contributions collected by Capt. Daniel Dobbins, and was patented in the name of the "Presque Isle Academy." This name appears to have been informally given by the contributors, as no record can be found of a corporation having been formed with that title. For the next quarter of a century, nothing occurred of special importance connected with the schools of Erie, excepting the establishing of the Erie Academy, which will be referred to hereafter. The schools that were kept up during the interval were all maintained by private contributions.

PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM ADOPTED.

The school act of 1834 allowed each district to decide for itself whether or not it should adopt a public-school system, to be maintained by a tax upon the citizens generally. Erie was one of the first places in the State to avail itself of the provisions of the new law. A meeting of the citizens of Erie was held at the court house November 22, 1834, which was presided over by Dr. William Johns, William Kelley acting as Secretary. On motion of Elijah Babbitt and George Kellogg, it was voted to collect $1,000 as additional local tax to that raised by the united action of the School Directors and Commissioners of the county. On the 7th of September, 1836, through the recommendation of a special committee, the borough of Erie was divided into four sub-districts, and during the next year four frame houses were erected on leased ground, at a cost of $310 each, the directors not thinking it advisable to purchase real estate. At that time 340 pupils were enrolled. The text books were "The English Reader," "Cobb's Spelling Book," "Goodrich's and Parley's Geographies," "Kirkham's Grammar" and "Daboll's Arithmetic," all of which would be curiosities to the teachers and children of to-day.

In 1844 the small frame buildings were inadequate to the wants of the schools, and, as a desire sprang up to attempt something in the way of gradation, lots were purchased, a new plan of buildings adopted, and in the year 1848 two brick houses, each capable of accommodating five teachers with their pupils, were erected and the sub-districts abolished. These two schools were called the "East ward" and the "West ward," each school having the same number of teachers, and the same advantages for scholars. The "East ward" building was on the corner of Seventh and Holland streets, now occupied by building No. 2, while the "West ward" schoolhouse stood on the corner of Seventh and Myrtle, on a lot included in the grounds attached to the present residence of William A. Galbraith. A portion of the latter building is yet standing in the form of a ruin, gracefully covered with a heavy growth of ivy.

The first public examination was held on May 8, 1849, and the first school for teaching the German language was started in the year 1858.

On the 8th of June, 1854, the directors organized under the new law, which went into operation the first Monday in June of that year. This increased the number of boards from one to three, "East ward," "West ward" and "Board of Controllers," the special duties of the ward boards being the raising and expending of a fund for building purposes; those of the Board of Controllers the raising and expending of a fund for school and teaching purposes. This system existed until June, 1870, at which time the city was enlarged and made into one district, for all purposes pertaining to schools, under a special act of Assembly.

LARGER SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

In 1855 the East Ward Board resolved to erect a large building on the corner of Seventh and Holland streets equal to the best in the country. Considerable opposition to the project was manifested, and the board was petitioned, in strong terms, praying that the resolution levying a tax for a new building be rescinded. As the board moved on in the line of action begun, efforts were made to have them legally enjoined from proceeding further. The opposition weakened, but existed for some time. The new building was finally completed, and occupied October, 1860. The West Ward Board held to a different policy—that a number of small houses were better than one large building, and in 1863, they caused to be erected No. 3, a small four-teacher house, on the corner of Sixteenth and Sassafras streets, and in 1865 No. 4, after the same plan, on West Fifth street, near Chestnut. In 1865 the East Ward Board built No. 5 on East Twelfth street, near German, a house similar to Nos. 3 and 4, but somewhat larger. In 1869 the West Ward Board erected No. 6, a six-teacher house, on the corner of Tenth and Sassafras streets, which was enlarged in 1878-74.

Where two dates occur, they indicate that the building has been remodeled, added to or replaced by a new structure. House No. 4 was seriously damaged by fire on the 14th of February, 1865. The ruins had to be taken down and a new building erected. House No. 1 is heated by a furnace; No. 13 by a furnace and stove; No. 6 by stoves; Nos. 2, 4, 7, 11 and 16 by steam; all the rest by the Smead system.

The buildings in general are a credit to the city, and the Central schoolhouse, in particular, will compare favorably with the finest in the country.

THE HIGH SCHOOL.

The High School was established on the 26th of June, 1866, and has been popular from the beginning. It was held in house No. 2 at Seventh and Holland streets, until September 1, 1875, when it was moved to the Academy, under a plan for turning over the latter property to the School Board. Litigation ensued, which resulted in the retention of the Academy by the Trustees thereof, and the removal of the High School, in March, 1877, to its former location. It remained there until its final and permanent change to the Central building in September, 1891.

The principals of the school have been as follows :

J. M. Wells, from 1866 to 1870.

Wm. Reed, jr., from April, 1870, to 1873.

H. C. Missimer, from January, 1873, to 1890.

John C. Diehl, from September, 1890, to the present time.

The enrollment of the school was 166 in 1870; 245 in 1880; 311 in 1890; 491 in 1894-5; and 500 at the beginning of the term, September 2, 1895.

The first graduating class, in 1869, consisted of two pupils. The total number of graduates, 1869 to 1895 inclusive, has been 614, of whom 158 were males and 456 females.

CITY SUPERINTENDENT.

In July, 1865, the Board of Control elected Prof. H. S. Jones, principal teacher, to perform the usual duties of a School Superintendent. In June, 1867, he was duly elected City Superintendent, under the act of that year. Prof. Jones was succeeded by Prof. H. C. Missimer in May, 1890. The city, being a separate district from the county, has no connection with the latter in school matters.

Whole number, 173.

The school board, as at present constituted, is composed of eighteen members, three from each ward, elected for a term of three years, taking office the first Monday of June.

Wm. G. Arbuckle was appointed Superintendent of School Buildings on February 1, 1882, and has served continuously from that date.

SCHOOL BOOKS, COURSE OF STUDY, ETC.

In accordance with the school book law of 1893, requiring public school boards to furnish books and supplies to each pupil free of cost, the Board purchased for the year 1893-94 books amounting to $11,695.80. On the basis of the total enrollment of 6,850 for 1893-94, the cost per pupil for the first supply of such books was, therefore, $1.71. For the year 1894-95 the Board made additional purchases to meet the deficiencies of the previous year and the increased enrollment of the current year, and supply books lost or destroyed on account of contagious diseases, amounting to $3,935.83, at a cost of fifty-seven cents per pupil of the total enrollment. The cost of books to the Board is about one-third less than it would be to individuals.

The course of study extends through eleven "years," seven of which, below the High school, are divided into "half-years." Each "half-year" is distinctly outlined, and each scholar below the High school is graded in one-half of some year, as "first year, first half;" third year, "second half," etc.

The studies of the course below the High school embrace numbers and arithmetic, language—English and German—composition, grammar, geography, history, music and industrial drawing.

The High school is broad and liberal, allowing great freedom in the selection of studies, and enabling students, who so desire, to prepare with honor for the highest institutions of learning in the country.

The fall and winter term begins September 2, 1895, and ends January 31, 1896. The spring term begins February 3, 1896, and ends June 26, 1896.

It has been the policy of the board to keep the school buildings, out-houses, yards and surroundings up to a high standard of neatness and cleanliness, thus preventing, in large measure, the spread of epidemic diseases.

It is worthy of note that the outer sections of the city are as well supplied with school accommodations as the central and more wealthy portions.

Pupils, as a rule, are assigned to the school nearest their homes, until they are ready for a higher department.

TEACHERS AND TEACHING.

The Teachers' Institute has been a source of power in the improvement of the schools since 1858. The sessions are well attended and much interest is shown. The outline of work is to improve teachers as individuals and as instructors.

Out of the 186 teachers in 1895 all were women but 7.

In 1882 the primary departments were materially strengthened by the appointment of a supervisor of primary instruction.

The Board, by special action in March, 1883, made it impossible for persons without successful experience or professional training to be engaged as teachers, and established the policy that a teacher's promotion and salary shall depend upon the efficiency shown in the school-room.

The Mechanical Drawing School was organized in January, 1884. Drawing was introduced into the evening schools, however, as long ago as October, 1873.

The Teachers' Training Class, organized in September, 1883, was composed of graduates of the High school of good standing, and any others who had passed through a similar course of study with credit, who wished to become teachers. It was abolished in July, 1895, with the understanding that it is to be revived in the fall of 1896, under the control of an expert training teacher.

Although music was on the programme of the schools prior to 1868, in many departments little or nothing was done. In November, 1868, a special teacher was engaged, and soon the singing in the schools assumed a creditable phase.

Evening schools were organized in 1867.

A school for deaf mutes was opened January, 1875, which lasted for several years.

German was made a special optional branch of study in 1877. It has been taught in the schools to a more or less extent, since 1858.

MISCELLANEOUS.

On Columbus Day, October 21, 1892, the entire schools of the city—public, private and parochial—turned out in procession, and, led by the National Guard and the veterans of the war, marched through the principal streets, preliminary to the more formal exercises. It is computed that 7,944 children were in line, and the scene was one that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

The National Flag is hoisted on the schools regularly in each year on the days below mentioned: The Fourth of July, Labor Day, Opening of Schools, 10th of September, October 19th, Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's, 12th of February, 22d of February, 19th of April, Decoration Day (half-mast), 14th of June.

The afternoon of the 21st or 23d of February of each year, as may be determined by the Superintendent, is set apart for special exercises under the head of "The Nation's Day," at which time the life and services of Washington and his contemporaries, are commemorated by music, recitations, declamations and compositions.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The School Board of Erie in office at the beginning of 1895, are entitled to the honor of taking the lead in securing the Free Public Library law, which forms a portion of the statutes of Pennsylvania. The law, substantially as enacted, was drafted by a citizen of Erie, aided by a former well-known school director, submitted to the Board on February 7, 1895, unanimously endorsed by that body, and forwarded to Harrisburg, with a circular from the Board to each member of the Legislature, asking him to support its passage. Through the influence of Senator McCreary and Representative Gould, both of Erie, it passed both Houses by a handsome vote, and, on being laid before Governor Hastings, received his prompt and hearty approval. Few measures have ever been enacted in Pennsylvania that reflect more credit upon the State, and it is a matter of pride to know that it had its birth in Erie, and owes its passage mainly to the efforts of Erie people.

The School Board, on the evening of December 5, 1895, elected the following gentlemen Trustees of the Library proposed to be established in Erie under the law referred to :

For one year—Louis Rosenzweig, Dr. M. C. Dunigan; for two years—J. F. Downing, L. M. Little; for three years—Charles Jarecki, Benjamin Whitman.

ERIE ACADEMY.

This venerable place of learning was incorporated by the Legislature March 25, 1817, Rev. Robert Reid, R. S. Reed, Robert Brown, Thomas Forster, Thomas Wilson, John C. Wallace, Judah Colt, Thomas H. Sill and Giles Sanford being its first trustees. It was endowed by the state with 500 acres of land set apart at the sale of the "Reserved Tracts," adjoining Erie, for the use of schools and academies. To this was subsequently added fifteen lots between Fourth, Fifth, Myrtle and Chestnut streets as a site for the Academy. In 1820 an appropriation of $2,000 was made by the State for the erection of suitable buildings. Later, by permission of the Legislature, the site was changed to its present location on Peach, between Ninth and Tenth streets, which was purchased by the trustees from Enoch Marvin.

The institution was incorporated as "an academy or public school for the education of youth in the English and other languages, in the useful arts, sciences and literature." On the 11th of December, 1822, a stone school building, commenced the previous year, was finished and accepted. It cost $2,500, and was opened in April, 1823. Upon the burning of the courthouse in March, 1823, this building was used by the Courts until the erection of a new courthouse. In 1849, 1850, 1851 and 1852 a fair was held on the academy grounds.

The Academy reached the zenith of its prosperity about 1844, while in charge of the well remembered principal, Reid T. Stewart. The attendance in that year was 203, embracing pupils from a wide scope of country. Below is a list of those from Erie county:

In 1878 the academy buildings were remodeled and modernized. The old stone and brick structure gave place to an edifice surmounted with a Gothic mansard roof, making the building three stories high. The building is heated by the "Rutan General System," which supplies both heat and ventilation.

The academy is managed by a board of nine trustees, who have heretofore been elected by the entire people of the county. By an act passed at the session of 1895 this feature has been changed so that the board in office at the time will name their successors.

The academy grounds are not only large and centrally located, but are finely shaded by grand old trees that were planted by the citizens of many years ago.

The school has had numerous principals, who, in the main, have conducted it to the satisfaction of its patrons. It aims to fit students for college, as well as to give a thorough English education. Under Prof. Louis Leakey and his wife, Jennie Drake Leakey, the present principals, who took charge July 1, 1894, the Academy shows evidence of renewed vigor and prosperity.

ERIE FEMALE SEMINARY.

An institution under the above title was incorporated in 1838 and went into operation soon afterward, having an annual appropriation of $300 from the Legislature for several years. It never possessed any buildings of its own, its last location being the building now occupied by the original structure of the Hamot Hospital. The seminary did not have a continual existence, but at one time ceased operations, was again revived, and finally went down about 1866.

ST. BENEDICT'S ACADEMY,

Which adjoins St. Mary's Church on East Ninth street, is in charge of the Benedictine Sisters, five of whom came to Erie in 1856 from the town of St. Mary's, Elk county, the cradle or nursery of the order in America. They first occupied a small frame house west of the church, bearing many inconveniences for four years, at the expiration of which time they were domiciled in a commodious brick building on the east side of St. Mary's Church. About 1864 they established St. Benedict's Academy, and in 1870 they erected next to the convent a spacious academy building and boarding-school, for the education of young ladies and children, to which was added, four years after, a large, handsome chapel for the use of the religieuse and pupils. The convent has increased largely in numbers, and the academy has grown to be one of the most prosperous schools in the city. Additions and improvements have been made to the academy buildings until they rank with the best for the purpose. Although under Catholic auspices, pupils are received without regard to creed or nationality. Sister M. Clara is the directress of the sisterhood.

VILLA MARIA ACADEMY.

This splendid edifice, one of the finest in the Erie diocese of the Catholic church, occupies the entire square, bounded by Eighth, Ninth, Liberty and Plum streets. The building was commenced March 9, 1891, and completed and dedicated May 9, 1892. The ground was a gift from the late lamented Father Casey, who also furnished all, or, at least, a large part of the money for its erection out of the private fortune left to him by his father. The building and grounds are owned, controlled and managed by the Sisters of St. Joseph, acting under the supervision of Bishop Mullen. They have no means for the support of the academy other than such as are contributed by friends and derived from the tuition of its pupils. The Sisters intend to add to the present building as occasion may require, and, no doubt, in time it will be one of the largest educational institutions in the State. Besides the regular branches of an academical training, the young lady students are taught music, deportment and the several acquirements specially pertaining to their sex. Sister M. Theresa was the directress of the institution until August, 1895, when she was succeeded by Sister Ernestine.

CATHOLIC PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

The first Catholic school in Erie was connected with St. Mary's Church, and opened in a small frame building immediately east of the present church, on Ninth street, in 1850, under the pastorate of Rev. N. Steinbacher. In 1851 the attendance numbered some forty children. When the new church was completed, in 1855, the old one was fitted up by Father Hartmann for a schoolhouse. In the course of time this became insufficient to accommodate the growing congregation, and in 1866 the Rev. Father Benno caused the large brick school building, on Tenth street, between German and Parade, to be erected for the children of the parish. It has a capacity for 700 scholars, and contains a neatly furnished hall adapted to miscellaneous purposes. The school is under the charge of the Brothers of St. Mary and the Benedictine Nuns.

St. Patrick's School was established in 1863, in a small building at the rear of the church on Fourth street. The school was taught by one lay teacher, and opened with about fifty scholars. In 1867, the two-story brick schoolhouse on Fourth, between Holland and German streets, was opened for the reception of the Catholic children. The Sisters of St. Joseph are in charge of the school.

St. Joseph's School was established by St. Joseph's Association in 1867, in a small building on Eighteenth street. During that year, the congregation of St. Joseph's parish erected a two-story frame schoolhouse on Twenty-fourth street, between Peach and Sassafras, adjoining the old church on the east, which was occupied in 1868. Up to 1871, the school was taught by laymen, but in that year the Sisters of St. Joseph assumed charge, and have continued ever since.

St. John's School was opened for the reception of scholars in 1870, the erection of the building on Twenty-sixth street, between Wallace and Ash, being identical with that of St. John's Church. This school was taught by one male teacher until September 1, 1883, when a small frame building was obtained in the immediate neighborhood and the school was divided. In 1867, a large two-story brick school-building, one of the finest for its object in Erie, was erected at the corner of Twenty-seventh and Wallace streets. The school is taught by the Sisters of St. Joseph.

St. Michael's School, under the care of the same Sisters, was opened December 1, 1885. The school building adjoins the church on Seventeenth street, between Cherry and Poplar.

St. Stanislaus School opened September 1, 1888. It occupies two frame buildings at Twelfth and Wallace streets. Prof. John Nowak is the lay teacher in charge. He is assisted by the Felician Sisters.

The parochial schools of the Catholic Church make a speciality of religious instruction, aside from which the same branches are taught and about the same methods followed as in the public schools.

The Catholic Directory for 1895 gives the following as the attendance of children in the several parochial schools of the city:

St. Patrick's.....	400
St. Mary's.....	600
St. Michael's.....	175
St. John's.....	200
St. Joseph's.....	380
St. Stanislaus'.....	300

ERIE BUSINESS UNIVERSITY.

The birth of this institution came with the starting of a school in penmanship and book-keeping by H. C. Clark, in 1883, which developed into the institution familiarly known as Clark's Business College. For a number of years its work was carried on in the Wayne block, on State street, east side, near Eighth street, from which it was removed to rooms specially fitted up for the school in the Downing building. In 1890, the institution was incorporated and a number of leading citizens became interested in its welfare. H. C. Clark was elected President and A. E. Scheithe Secretary and Treasurer, with seven gentlemen as Directors. In January, 1894, Prof. Clark resigned and J. F. Downing was elected President and S. M. Sweet Secretary and Treasurer.

In April, 1894, in response to the desire to co-operate more successfully in methods and objects, the management consolidated its work with the Erie Business College and Short-Hand School, which came into existence in 1888 in response to the demands for a short-hand training. The latter was first known as the Erie Short-Hand School, and was opened by the law-reporting firm of Briggs, Fish & Bochner. Shortly after it passed into the hands of M. D. Fletcher, who conducted it until 1891, when E. J. Coburn became principal. The training it gave students produced so favorable a reputation that it was developed into a fully-equipped business college. From Mr. Coburn's control it passed into the hands of John M. Glazier, who conducted it until the consolidation with Clark's Business College.

The united schools started with the following directors: J. F. Downing, President; J. P. Byrne, Secretary and Treasurer; John M. Glazier, General Manager; J. F. Hill, C. F. McClenathan, Wm. B. Trask, L. M. Little, Wm. Hardwick and Giles D. Price, Directors.

Among its incorporators are some of the best known men in the community. The school has had a good degree of prosperity, and gives promise of being one of the growing institutions of the city.

THE KINDERGARTEN SYSTEM.

As nearly as can be ascertained at the time of writing, the earliest kindergarten work in Erie was introduced by Miss Anna Kelsey, later a missionary in Alaska. Some years after, the work was taken up by Miss Sarah W. King, whose school for the last few years has been held in an upper room of the Erie Academy building. The first free kindergarten was opened in the spring of 1894 by Miss Clara L. Smith, on West Twelfth street. The present movement, which is on a more extended scale than any heretofore attempted, was inaugurated in the fall of the same year by Miss Kate Spencer.

CHAPTER XIII.

MANUFACTURES—BRIEF SKETCH AND HISTORY OF THE LEADING MANUFACTURING ENTERPRISES IN ERIE.—[See Chapter XIV, General History of Erie County.]

THE early history of mills and manufactures in Erie is so fully given in Chapter XIV of the General History that it would be superfluous to repeat it here. It is sufficient to state, that, although various attempts had been made to establish manufactures in the city, the great movement in that direction did not take place till about 1860. Previous to that date the citizens still looked to the lake trade as their leading industry, and boasted that their possession of the "best harbor on the lakes," was sure to make Erie some day an important city. When they finally waked up to the sad truth that, even with our advantage in the matter of a harbor, it was impossible to rival Buffalo, with its great canal and superior railroad facilities, the effect was somewhat startling, but none the less beneficial. They soon saw that the only way to make up for the deficiency in location, distances, grades and otherwise was to engage in manufactures, for which the proximity of the city to the coal fields, and the more recent extensions of its railroad facilities give it peculiar opportunities. The result is, that within a comparatively brief period, Erie has become one of the leading manufacturing cities in the Union, with a reputation that is not confined to the American continent. As will be seen by the list below, the manufactures of the city are of unusual variety, so that it is next to impossible for a depression or panic to occur that will seriously affect every interest. It was a matter of common remark, during the late financial revulsion, that Erie was less embarrassed or injured than any city of its size in the land.

Most of the manufactures in the city started from small beginnings, and have been extended as the increase of trade demanded and warranted. The owners and managers are, therefore, as a rule, fully versed in their business, know how to carry it on with the least expense, and are free from the disadvantages of men who start with large capital and resources, which they have not the experience or ability to properly handle. "That labor is remuneratively rewarded is proven by the fact that strikes of any magnitude are unknown. Labor and capital work mutually together. The seeds of communism or anarchy do not take root in Erie."

MANUFACTURING STATISTICS.

The table below, compiled from the reports of the Board of Trade, shows the progress of the manufacturing interests from 1880 to 1894, inclusive:

The decrease in men and products in 1894 shows the effect of the hard times which struck the country in 1893, and of the reduction in values that followed. An improvement in nearly every branch of Erie's manufactures has taken place this year (1895), and the prospects are that, within a year or two, a large increase will be shown in every branch of the manufacturing business.

The first Secretary was John J. Wadsworth, who was succeeded in 1881, after a service of seven years, by Douglas Benson, who continues to fill the position. The Secretary prints a report each year showing the industrial and commercial conditions of the city, which is a valuable handbook of information for all who take an interest in its growth and general welfare.

HOW THE BUSINESS CENTER HAS CHANGED.

It will be seen by the foregoing chapters that the business of Erie started at the mouth of Mill creek, and from there gradually moved up Second, Third and Fourth streets to French. For several years Third street was the chief business thoroughfare of the city, until it was supplanted by French street. Sixty or seventy years ago French street was the busiest and most important in the city. The postoffice, the principal hotels and the leading business houses were upon or convenient to that street, and it continued an important business thoroughfare until some time after 1860. When the writer came to Erie, in 1861, French street still had quite a number of prominent hotels and business places, and was looked upon as only second in importance to State street. The movement in the direction of State street commenced directly after the erection of the United States bank building, so long occupied as the custom-house and postoffice. In 1861 the main business portion of Erie was from Fourth to Eighth streets on State, and on North Park Row from Peach to French streets. The corner of Fifth and State streets was regarded as the heart of the city, and the best stores were in that vicinity. There is no reason—natural or artificial—why business should have moved away from the neighborhood of the parks, and the only explanation is to be found in the indifference of property holders, who supposed they had a "sure thing," and the activity of those who had property to sell south of the location named. To-day the men who own land and buildings on the west side of State street are quite as sanguine that they cannot be displaced as the property owners north of Central park were many years ago. The fact is self-evident, however, that some of the best buildings and the finest stores are going up and being started on the east side of the street, and, unless the property owners on the west side wake up in good time, they will find that the prize has slipped from their grasp, just as was the case on the north end of the street and the north side of the park. State street will always be the main business avenue of Erie, and when the city reaches a population of 75,000 to 100,000 it will make very little difference whether a store is on the east or west side, provided the proper accommodations are offered. Persons who are familiar with Chicago, Buffalo, Cleveland, or any of the larger cities of the country, will readily see the force of these conclusions.

MERCANTILE AGENCIES.

The Erie branch of R. G. Dun & Co.'s
 Mercantile Agency was established in 1872, and has been kept up in the city ever since.
 Among the managers of the Erie office have been Messrs. Goalding, Love, Price and New-begin. The latter, after a long service, went to New York in October, 1894, and was immediately succeeded by R. R. Hopkins, the present manager. W. J. Young has been attorney for the agency since June, 1889.

Bradstreet's agency has never had a branch in Erie, but has long been represented here in connection with the Buffalo district. R. L.
 Perkins, its representative for many years, has been succeeded by Walter Reitzell.

LAKE AND RAILROAD BUSINESS.

The imports and exports by lake are given in detail in a preceding chapter. More than ninety per cent. of the lumber and grain and all of the iron ore received at Erie come by lake. The grain goes east by the Philadelphia and Erie R. R., which also carries the bulk of the lumber that is shipped to the interior. The latter road brings in anthracite coal from the Luzerne, Schuylkill and Shamokin regions, while the principal amount of bituminous coal comes over the Erie and Pittsburg R. R. from the
